The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas has made the usual request, that the original bill and the proposed substitute shall be read. Then the Senator from Idaho can follow that with the reading of the law to which he refers.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, it will not be quite so convenient, but that will answer the purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will continue the reading of the amendment proposed by the committee.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the amendment reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That an act entitled "An act to prohibit corporations from making money contributions in connection with political elections," approved January 26, 1907, is amended so as to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That it shall be unlawful for any national bank or other corporation organized by authority of a law of the United States to contribute any money or other thing of value in connection with any convention, primary, or other election for the nomination or election of any person to any political office. It shall also be unlawful for any corporation whatever to contribute any money or other thing of value in connection with the nomination of electors for President and Vice President or the nomination of President and Vice President, Senator, or Representative in Congress, or in connection with the election of any of said officers. Every corporation which shall make any contribution in violation of this section shall be subject to a fine not to exceed $5,000, and every officer, director, or agent who shall consent to any contribution by the corporation in violation of the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not to exceed $1,000, or by imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any individual or person to contribute money or other thing of value exceeding in value $5,000 in connection with the nomination of electors for President and Vice President or the nomination of President and Vice President, Senator, or Representative in Congress, or in connection with the election of any of said officers: Provided, That this section shall not apply to individuals or persons who at such convention, primary, or election are candidates for President, Vice President, Representative, or Senator. Every individual or person who shall make any contribution in violation of the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not to exceed $10,000, or by imprisonment for a term not more than two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 3. That all laws or parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed."

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, Mr. President, I renew my request that the existing law proposed to be amended shall be read so as to appear in connection with the bill and amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Public—No. 36.]

An act to prohibit corporations from making money contributions in connection with political elections.

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any laws of Congress, to make a money contribution in connection with any election to any political office. It shall also be unlawful for any corporation whatever to make a money contribution in connection with any election at which presidential and vice presidential electors or a Representative in Congress is to be voted for or any election by any State legislature of a United States Senator. Every corporation which shall make any contribution in violation of the foregong provisions shall be subject to a fine not exceeding $5,000, and every officer or director of any corporation who shall consent to any contribution by the corporation in violation of the foregoing provisions shall upon conviction be punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000 and not less than $250, or by imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, or both such fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court.

Approved, January 26, 1907.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, on January 23 of this year I made a lengthy statement with reference to this measure to the Senate in order to get the bill out of the committee. In view of that fact, as well as of the condition of the business of the Senate, it is not my purpose to make an extended statement with reference to it now.

Whether the Senate agrees to the bill or not, it is quite a simple matter, Mr. President. Its object is twofold: One is to practically so amend the act of January 26, 1907, prohibiting corporations from contributing money in connection with elections as to prohibit them also from contributing any other thing of value, whether labor or other material thing of value; the other provision of the proposed law limits the amount which any individual may contribute at elections at which electors are voted for or Representatives in the Congress are voted for or a Senator is voted for in a State legislature to $5,000.

I will say in this immediate connection that so far as I am personally concerned the $5,000 in the bill is an arbitrary figure. The Democratic platform of 1908, reiterated in that of 1912, declared the belief that the amount contributed by individuals ought to be restricted to a reasonable sum, and I am willing to accede to any amount which is reasonable, my own opinion being that $5,000 is a sufficient maximum and a just limitation.

This bill was introduced by me December 5, 1911, and was in the committee from March 18, 1912, until it was reported out two weeks ago. It was reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections with an amendment striking out the entire bill and inserting in lieu of it a proposition to amend the act of 1907, relating to corporations. I have no objection to the mere form, as amending the act of 1907 instead of being an original measure, but the committee amendment differs materially from the proposition introduced by me, and I prefer the one which I introduced.

The changes suggested by the committee are, first, to extend the provisions of the bill to conventions and to primaries preceding elections, as well as making them apply to elections.

The second section of the bill as proposed to be amended provides the same limitation of $5,000, but changes the language of section 2 of my bill to the extent of making the maximum contribution $5,000, whether it be an election for electors or Representatives or Senators, the difference in this respect being that under the Senate committee amendment a man is permitted to subscribe $5,000 for the election of a single Representative or for the nomination of a Representative, whereas, under the bill which I proposed the basis, in this particular, is contributions made to congressional committees and refers to elections at which Representatives in the Congress are to be voted for, not to the election of a single Representative in the Congress.

That, Mr. President, is the substance of the matter now pending before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. The language of the original bill, in section 2, is:

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any individual or person to contribute money or other thing of value exceeding in value $5,000.

I do not see where the word "committee" comes in, to which the Senator from Texas referred.

Mr. CULBERSON. The word "committee" does not appear, but it refers to the general election at which Representatives in Congress are to be voted for.

Mr. LODGE. I see.

Mr. CULBERSON. The purpose of the bill was to limit contributions which might be made to the national congressional committees.

Mr. LODGE. That was a limitation on the persons allowed to receive the contributions; that is, they could only be paid to committees.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is the idea of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. CULBERSON. As I said, Mr. President, in view of the fact that the unfinished business will come up at 1 o'clock and it may not be temporarily laid aside, I do not desire to take further time of the Senate in explaining the bill, it being, as I have already indicated, in my judgment, very simple, whether the Senate approves it or not.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, does the Senator from Texas favor the substitute?

Mr. CULBERSON. No; I prefer the original bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the bill, as the Senator from Texas says, it seems to me is very simple in its provisions; but it also seems to me that it ought to be changed in one respect. Section 2 makes what may be called a "flat rate" for contributions, limiting a contribution for a Representative contest to $5,000, and then making it the same for the senatorial and presidential contests. A contribution of $5,000 to a congressional contest in a single district is a very large contribution, as that covers only one congressional district; a senatorial district covers a State, and $5,000 may not be a very large contribution for a contest covering a State; but a presidential contest covers the entire country.

We had in testimony only a little while ago the admission of a distinguished Democrat that he had given $200,000 to the presidential campaign. It seems to me to say that no individual shall give more than $5,000 to a presidential campaign, and allow the same amount to be given to a campaign for Representative in Congress, is disproportionate on its face, and I think is altogether an unreasonable limitation. I think there ought to be a different limitation for a subscription to a presidential campaign, a different limitation for a contribution to a senatorial campaign, and a different limitation for a contribution to a campaign for Representatives, if we are to fix arbitrary limits. My own belief is that the limit is unimportant; that the real protection is the publicity; but I think that ought to be changed in this bill so as not to make a disproportion of that kind, which is, it seems to me, on the face of it absurd.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, it may be that the criticism of the Senator from Massachusetts is logical as applied to the Senate committee amendment, but I do not believe it applies to the bill as originally drafted. For instance, the Senate committee amendment says:

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any individual or person to contribute money or other thing of value exceeding in value $5,000 in connection with the nomination of electors for President and Vice President or the nomination of President and Vice President, Senator, or Representative in Congress, or in connection with the election of any of said officers.

Turning to section 2 of the original bill as I drafted it, it provides:

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any individual or person to contribute money or other thing of value exceeding in value $5,000 in connection with any election at which electors for President and Vice President of the United States or a Representative in the Congress of the United States are to be voted for, or any election by any State legislature of a Senator of the United States.

The difference being, if I may repeat somewhat what I stated a little while ago——

Mr. LODGE. I see the difference.

Mr. CULBERSON. That section 2 of the original bill intended to limit contributions which individuals may make at elections held throughout the United States at which Representatives are voted for; whereas section 2 of the amendment applies specifically to the matter of the election of a single Representative. I think the limitation of $5,000, or some figure which may be considered reasonable by the Senate, should apply to contributions made to a congressional campaign throughout the United States as well as to elections for electors throughout the United States, because while one involves the Presidency and Vice Presidency and the other involves the House of Representatives, both affect a general election throughout the United States, instead of being confined to a contribution intended to affect a particular district.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. Under section 2 of the original bill, if there were to be, for instance, a special election for Representative in Congress in a district, would not this bill apply to that?

Mr. CULBERSON. I think it would apply in that exceptional case, for it would be an "election at which a Representative in Congress was to be voted for."

Mr. JONES. In other words, section 2 applies to elections of President or Vice President or Representative in Congress. It is the same as section 2 of the Senate committee amendment, except that the committee amendment goes to primaries as well as elections.

Mr. CULBERSON. Primaries or conventions.

Mr. JONES. Yes; the nomination as well as the election.

Mr. CULBERSON. I think in the case mentioned by the Senator from Massachusetts, as well as that mentioned by the Senator from Washington, the inhibition would apply to an election in a single district; but that is an exceptional case and was not foreseen in drafting the bill originally. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that if section 2 of the proposed amendment is adopted, the matter which he suggests might be remedied after the word "Senator" in line 17, page 4, by adding this proviso:

Provided, however, That in connection with the nomination or election of Representatives——

Mr. LODGE. Where does the Senator propose this change?

Mr. CULBERSON. On page 4, line 17, after the word "Senator."

Provided, however, That in connection with the nomination or election of Representatives in Congress no person or individual shall contribute money or other thing of value exceeding in value $1,000—

Or some other amount that might be named, less than $5,000. That may be somewhat inartistically drawn, but it might be worked out in conference, if the bill should, fortunately, ever reach such a stage.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, that would reduce the amount that could be contributed in an election for Representative in Congress, but it seems to me that $5,000 is a needlessly low limitation for a contribution to a national campaign, a campaign covering the whole country. It seems to me a larger sum than that might be contributed, if anyone felt disposed to do so, without corrupting the electorate or materially affecting the election. Section 2 of the Senator's bill is simply a prohibition for any individual to give more than $5,000 to any election of a national character anywhere. Whether a man gives to his State committee or to the congressional committee or to the national committee, he can not give more than $5,000. Under the other bill a man would be unable to give more than $5,000 for a senatorial campaign covering a great State, and where primaries are held the mere expense of putting a name on the ballot and paying the initial expenses would be much more than that. Only $5,000 could be contributed to a senatorial campaign, covering, as I say, a great State, with a population ranging from eight or ten millions down, and yet in the same State, by giving $5,000 to each congressional district, the same person could, if he chose, spend anywhere from $5,000 in a single district to $215,000 in the State of New York.

Mr. SUTHERLAND rose.

Mr. LODGE. I will finish that sentence. So this proposed law would not prevent a man from giving $215,000 for congressional elections in the State of New York, when he could not contribute more than $5,000 for the election of a President or the election of a Senator.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was going to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts and also the Senator from Texas that section 2 limits to $5,000 the amount which any individual or person may contribute in any form in connection with the nomination of an elector for President or Vice President or in connection with the election of a Senator or Representative in Congress.

Now, it frequently happens in elections, both with State committees and national committees—I know it happens quite frequently in the case of State committees—that at the end of a campaign the committee finds itself without sufficient funds to meet the debts which have been incurred during the campaign; and it frequently happens that men of means, interested in the party's success, with the best of motives, with no desire to influence their own fortunes in any way, political or otherwise, and because it becomes a necessity to make up the amount of the deficit, the chairman of the committee or members of the committee, each of them, contributes sums exceeding $5,000. Does the Senator from Texas think we ought to cut off action of that sort? Does the Senator see any evil in that sort of thing which ought to be legislated against?

Mr. CULBERSON. There may be exceptional cases where it would work a hardship, but I think in the interest of the purity of elections and the limitation of the expenditure of large sums in our elections, such legislation is justified rather than that the public be demoralized by such expenditures.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. How will the public suffer in the case I have illustrated?

Mr. CULBERSON. I dislike to call attention to any particular case, and yet it is within the knowledge of the Senate, by reason of the reports of one of its committees, that money was used in an election in one of the States of the Union to a scandalous degree. The mere size of the fund itself was almost an argument in favor of its corrupt use, and I believe a bill of this kind ought to be passed, under which, first, we limit the influence of individuals who may make contributions to elections, and in the next place we limit in that way the amount of money which may be used in the election.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. The case to which the Senator from Texas refers would not be met by this bill, because that was an expenditure at a primary.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand that, but the bill proposed by the Senate committee goes to the extent of limiting the amount which may be spent at a primary or convention.

Mr. SWANSON. In some States they have practically nothing but primaries.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have already stated that, for reasons which I will not stop to enter into now, I prefer the original bill.

Mr. SWANSON. In many States, where the fight is entirely in the primaries, not in the election, it would not eliminate the evil at all. I know a great many States where the entire fight, both for Federal and State officers, is absolutely in the primary, and simply to confine it to the election would merely mean to continue the use of money in the primaries. I think if we are going to strike it down, to eliminate it in those States where the primary is really the election, it should apply to a convention or a primary just as to elections.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. With section 1 of this bill I heartily agree. It cures certain defects which exist in the original law, providing that it should be unlawful for any national bank or corporation to make a money contribution in connection with any election. Of course, that could be evaded by contributions of some other character. So this law broadens that provision and makes it unlawful to contribute any other thing of value.

It is also wholesome legislation in so far as it undertakes to extend the operation of the law to contributions made in connection with conventions and primaries. There may be quite as much fraud committed at primaries or conventions as in the election. In every direction in which the first section of the bill extends the original law, I am in hearty sympathy with it. But upon reflection I have very grave doubt as to the wisdom of some of the provisions of section 2, and I doubt very much the wisdom of our undertaking to pass a provision in the hurry of the last day or two of this session of Congress.

Now, section 2 provides:

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any individual or person to contribute money or other thing of value exceeding in value $5,000 in connection with the nomination of electors for President and Vice President or the nomination of President and Vice President, Senator, or Representative in Congress, or in connection with the election of any of said officers.

There may be many cases, as I have already illustrated, where there would be absolutely nothing improper in a contribution being made by an individual citizen of a larger sum than $5,000. Take the case I have illustrated, where the committee at the end of a campaign finds itself in debt; and that frequently happens. Debts are incurred in the utmost good faith, and the chairman of the committee feels in honor bound to meet the financial obligations he has made, and he will contribute it out of his own pocket.

Mr. CULBERSON. Does not the Senator believe all these things might be corrected by the exercise of discretion on the part of the chairman in creating the debts?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Sometimes it might and sometimes it might not. A campaign does not last a great length of time; a few weeks. There are the expenses of hiring halls, expenses of campaign speakers, the expenses of newspaper advertising, and all that sort of thing, which at the end of the campaign may run up a very considerable sum in the aggregate, and every cent of which has been incurred legitimately.

Now, as I say, the chairman or the members of the committee may feel in honor bound, as in fact they are in honor bound, to meet those obligations, and yet this law, if it should be passed in the terms now proposed, would absolutely prevent the chairman of the committee from paying an honest obligation that he had himself made or that some of his subordinates had made under his direction. That ought not to be, and it all indicates to me that we should proceed with that section with some care.

Now, I do not regard the limitation upon the amount to be contributed by an individual as of so great consequence, in view of the fact that we have a very thorough-going law which requires that all contributions shall be published. I think when you require that the name of the individual making the contribution and the amount of the contribution shall be published to the country, you will prevent improper contributions quite as effectually as by limiting the amount he may contribute.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah has just suggested the very point where it seems to me this statute is weak. We have no publicity statute which requires a publication of the expenses incurred in a presidential campaign; I mean, in a preliminary campaign, the nominating campaign. The political committee referred to in our statute is not the political committee in charge of a preliminary campaign; and one of the things we ought to have is the publicity of contributions made to carry on a nominating campaign of candidates for President and Vice President.

Mr. LODGE. Does not this bill cover that?

Mr. CUMMINS. It does not. It limits the contribution to $5,000——

Mr. LODGE. The substitute covers the primary campaign. However, I believe it does not provide for the publication.

Mr. CUMMINS. It limits the contribution to $5,000, but neither the existing statute nor the proposed law covers publicity with regard to those contributions; and I for one regard publicity as a far more effective provision than the limitation of the amount. I call that to the attention of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from Iowa is right. The present publicity law, which was passed in 1910 and amended by an act approved August, 1911, is confined to elections. That is true. But I think that is the best way to reach this evil—by a thoroughgoing publicity law; and I would be in favor of amending the publicity law so as to require the publication of contributions made to a committee in the same way that we require a candidate to publish his expenditure by the act of the date which I have last mentioned.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there is another point in the second section to which I desire to call attention. In the first place, I think we ought to proportion the limitation more justly. In the second place, I think as it stands now it is open to one very grave objection. It puts no limit whatever on the amount to be spent by a candidate. The proviso expressly——

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CULBERSON. I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts——

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator point out to me where that is covered?

Mr. CULBERSON. It is in the middle of section 2.

Mr. LODGE. No; it says:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to individuals or persons who at such convention, primary, or election are candidates for President, Vice President, Representative, or Senator.

Mr. CULBERSON. It does not——

Mr. LODGE. As I understand, that takes off the limitation.

Mr. CULBERSON. Oh, no. The limitation is already on the amount Senators and Representatives may expend by another act of the Congress.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, in the old act?

Mr. CULBERSON. In the old act.

Mr. LODGE. It does not provide that the President and Vice President——

Mr. CULBERSON. It does not apply to the President and Vice President, and is not intended to——

Mr. LODGE. No; I understand that. It seems to me that exempts them.

Mr. CULBERSON. It exempts them from this act.

Mr. LODGE. From this act.

Mr. CULBERSON. But Representatives and Senators are bound by the previous act.

Mr. LODGE. If that is the case, my objection falls.

Mr. McCUMBER. I call attention to the fact that all acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed. As it would seemingly be in conflict with the other act, the former must certainly fall.

Mr. LODGE. I had not that act before me, but I would say it would work a complete exemption of the candidates.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We have no law, as I recall it, limiting the expenditures which may be made by presidential candidates.

Mr. CULBERSON. None at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. None whatever.

Mr. CULBERSON. And this bill was intended to exempt them.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. So that the effect of this bill, so far as the President is concerned, is that his expenditures are unlimited.

Mr. CULBERSON. It is by this bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We have a series of laws which limit the amount a Senator may expend to $10,000, the amount a Representative may expend to $5,000, and the amount which may be contributed by an individual, but no limit whatever on the presidential candidate. He can expend any amount he pleases.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Sentor from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Why should there be any apprehension about the amount a candidate can contribute? The corrupt influence comes from the amount contributed from the outside, from those who are contributing for a sinister purpose or have interests to be promoted, and so forth, and while that might be remedied, I do not think the mere fact that the candidate is not limited is any reason why the bill should not be passed. The bill is designed to cover contributions which come from those sources which intend to get some benefit from the election after it is over.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The point I was making was that we had overlooked that; and it seems to me if it is improper to permit a candidate for the Senate to spend more than $10,000 or a candidate for Representative to spend more than $5,000, it is improper to allow a candidate for the Presidency to spend more than some sum that might be fixed—a larger sum, perhaps, but there ought to be a limitation somewhere.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, we can not hear what is being said.

Mr. KENYON. I want to introduce an amendment to section 1. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but I should like to have it introduced, so that we can take it up at the proper time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the way of perfecting the text of the bill as originally introduced, amend section 1 by striking out——

Mr. KENYON. It is an amendment to the Senate substitute on page 4.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, strike out in lines 4 and 5 the words "a fine not to exceed $1,000 or by," and by striking from said section all of lines 6 and 7 after the word "year" in line 6.

Mr. KENYON. That is to leave the punishment by imprisonment instead of the discretionary punishment by fine and imprisonment where the officers of the corporation violate the law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator mean to compel imprisonment in every case?

Mr. KENYON. To compel imprisonment as to section 1, which is limited to the officers of a corporation who knowingly violate the provisions of the act. I do not believe a fine amounts to anything if the corporation desires to make a large contribution, but the sentence of imprisonment would have a restraining influence and make the law effective.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The law permits the court to impose imprisonment in its discretion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. CULBERSON. I know the matter the Senator from Iowa has in charge is a very important one, but I was going to ask him how he felt as to yielding temporarily to see if we could pass this bill about campaign contributions or have it defeated. I do not know how many Senators have any desire to speak on it, or when we could get a vote, but there are some indications that we may get a vote in a few moments.

Mr. CUMMINS. I had said to the acting chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs that if he requested it I would ask unanimous consent to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business in order that a conference report might be considered.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. If I knew that the bill before us would not consume any great length of time I would feel like doing the same thing in respect to that bill. I have promised, however, to yield in regard to the Indian appropriation bill, and I must necessarily give the Senator from Minnesota the preference.

Mr. CLAPP. I had, of course, expected to ask the Senator from Iowa to allow the unfinished business to be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill. I had not risen to ask for it, because I rather took it for granted that we had gone so far with the bill the Senator from Texas has in charge that probably the unfinished business might be laid aside for that, and at the conclusion of that bill I would ask the Senator to take up the conference report. It is immaterial to me, only I did not want to displace the matter now pending before the Senate. Of course, if the Senate will not continue the consideration of that bill or the Senator from Iowa will not yield for it, then I should feel like asking for the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am quite willing to yield for the bill the Senator from Texas has in charge if I can have any assurance that no great time will be consumed in debate, but I feel it to be my duty to press, if I can, the unfinished business.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will state to the Senator from Iowa that he may at any time he sees proper resume the floor if he yields temporarily for the consideration of the bill just passed over and it takes up any undue time, in his judgment.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to say to the Senator from Iowa that I believe there are a number of Senators yet to speak on this subject, and it will take some time before a vote will be reached.

Mr. LODGE. The colleague of the Senator from Iowa has just offered a very important amendment to the bill which ought to be printed.

Mr. CULBERSON. In view of the situation, I will not ask the Senator from Iowa to yield further.

Mr. CLAPP. Then, I ask the Senator from Iowa to yield for the consideration of the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. In view of my promise to the Senator from Minnesota and recognizing that these conference reports must be disposed of, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, giving notice that I intend to resume consideration, if the Senate will sustain my position, immediately after the conference report just designated is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CULBERSON. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 3315, which has been under consideration, may be taken up Tuesday, immediately after the routine morning business, and that a vote be had on all amendments and on the bill at 2 o'clock.

Mr. HEYBURN. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the conference report on House bill 20728, the Indian appropriation bill. The Chair will inquire of the Senator from Minnesota whether he desires to have the report read in full. It has been printed in the RECORD and printed separately as well.

Mr. CLAPP. Unless a request is made for the reading, I will not ask to have it read in full. There is one matter in it that I desire to call the attention of the Senate to. Unless the request is made, I ask that the reading be dispensed with.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks that the report be read. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary read the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 20728) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to amendment numbered 114 and to place in the RECORD a statement concerning it.

Some time ago a number of Apache Indians were made prisoners of war and have been held at the Fort Sill Military Reservation in Oklahoma. It became very evident that those prisoners should be released from their present status as prisoners of war and placed upon a reservation. When the Indian appropriation bill was under consideration in the Senate Senate amendment numbered 114 was inserted with the thought that that might put the matter in conference, and that upon the amendment the conferees might make provision for those prisoners. However, when we got into conference it became quite evident that the terms of amendment numbered 114 were not broad enough to authorize the conferees to make provision for the removal of those prisoners. Senate amendment numbered 114 simply provided that the Secretary of War should be authorized to investigate the matter and report to Congress some scheme as to the removal of the prisoners and the probable cost of securing homes for them in Oklahoma.

Of course, I deprecate the conferees going outside of the strict limits prescribed for conferees, and that was the sense of all of the conferees, both of the House and of the Senate. At the same time the evidence was coming to us from the military sources there, as well as from other sources, that a very deplorable condition existed and that provision ought to be made at once for the removal of those Indians. So the conferees took it upon themselves to insert an amendment instead of amendment numbered 114, which has been reported by the committee of conference and read from the desk. That amendment provides for the removal of so many of those Indians as desire to be removed, and also for securing lands for them in Oklahoma, distributing their tribal property, and securing homes for those who do not care to leave the vicinity of the Fort Sill Reservation.

The conferees decided upon this course of action, and that they would bring the matter to the notice of the two Houses, calling attention to the fact that they had exceeded the strict limit prescribed for conferees, and asking the two Houses to adopt the report upon this matter as made by the conferees. Of course, it might possibly have been met in another way, by a joint resolution, but we are approaching the closing days of the session, with a great many matters to occupy the attention of both Houses, and therefore, after fully considering the subject, we decided to adopt this course and lay the matter before our respective Houses.

I have made this statement, and I trust that, so far as this particular amendment goes, the Senate will accede to the action of the committee of conference.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, this is a very important matter, and I make the point that there is no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES in the chair). The Senator from Kansas makes the point of no quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Clapp	Lippitt	Root
Bacon	Crane	Lodge	Sanders
Bailey	Cullom	McCumber	Simmons
Bankhead	Cummins	McLean	Smoot
Borah	Curtis	Martin, Va.	Sutherland
Bourne	Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Swanson
Brandegee	Foster	Massey	Thornton
Briggs	Gallinger	Myers	Tillman
Bristow	Heyburn	Nelson	Townsend
Bryan	Johnson, Me.	Oliver	Warren
Burnham	Johnston, Ala.	Overman	Watson
Catron	Jones	Page	Wetmore
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Perkins	Williams
Chilton	La Follette	Pomerene	Works

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the question of a quorum was raised so that Senators might be present when this report is presented, because it is a very important one, and one about which Senators ought to know the facts before they vote on the question of adopting the conference report. I intend to address the Senate against agreeing to the report, because of the fact that the Senate conferees have receded and yielded to the House on amendment numbered 99, which provided:

> For salaries and expenses of district agents for the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma and other employees connected with the work of such agents, $100,000. * * *

I object to the adoption of this report for the reason that if you do away with the district agents for the Five Civilized Tribes you take away from the Indians of that part of Oklahoma their greatest protection. I hope Senators will listen this afternoon for a few moments to some of the cases that have been unearthed by the district agents, which show to what extent the Indians have been imposed upon and robbed, and also show to what extent they have been protected by these agents.

Before I present the cases, however, I desire to read a message that I received this morning. It is from one of the judges in regard to this matter, in which he said:

> It appears from press reports that appropriation for district Indian agents has been eliminated. Such action will be most disastrous to Indian allottees. Having jurisdiction over the heaviest probate court in Oklahoma, I am thoroughly familiar with assistance rendered minor and full-blood Indians by district agents. Under present conditions, without the assistance of the agents, property protection by the county court would be impossible.
> THOS. W. LEAHY, County Judge.

Supt. Kelsey states that in addition to adult full bloods there are 30,000 minor Indians owning realty valued in the neighborhood of $150,000,000, thus creating a probable situation such as never before existed in any State. There is no better argument as to lack of State machinery and necessity of cooperative protection than that contained in letter of the State department of charities and corrections. (See page 10263, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Aug. 6.) The expense of district agents is inconsequential as compared with the vast property and educational interests conserved. Not one cent of Indian money has been expended for district agents; but, on the contrary, they have actually saved individual Indians from five to six hundred thousand dollars annually, and indrect savings would total at least $2,000,000 per annum, besides facilitating general land and lease transactions for both Indians and the public; and to cut off field machinery will materially delay the disposition of excess lands and otherwise prevent the operation of existing laws to the full extent that may be proper. I earnestly urge that every possible means be used for the retention of this splendid service.

Not to longer take up the time of the Senate in reading from statements of the agents and probate judges, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to some of the cases wherein these district agents have protected the Indians. Listen to these cases taken from the reports of the district agents:

> Mrs. Kernel, who is a mixed-blood Creek, who a few weeks ago was very ill and not expected to live, and while in this condition—Crump,

Davis, and Rodgers—the latter acting as notary, Davis being grantee, forged a deed to Mrs. Kernel's land. She knew absolutely nothing about this transaction until she recovered and her attention was called to it by other parties. When this crime was committed, it was thought the allottee would not recover and the fraud would not be discovered. Since her recovery, she has asked that the cloud on the title to her land be cleared up. This is as clear a case of forgery as was ever committed, yet when I spoke to the county attorney about the matter, he simply stated that the parties agreed to clear the title. Not a thing was done in regard to the punishment of the parties for the crime.

Another case is that of Henry Yahola, of Yager:

On or about the 20th instant, George Crump, jr., and others, went to the home of Emma Sepley, a 13-year-old child, who is an orphan, took her away from home in a buggy, while another party went and get Henry Yahola. The two were brought together and were practically forced to get married, they stating to the two allottees that it was the law in order that C. B. Shaft and E. J. Eubanks could get deeds to several pieces of land that this child had inherited besides her own allotment, containing in all about 600 acres. The above parties agreed to pay this child allottee and her husband all the land was worth, but gave her $5 and her husband $10. This child can not speak, read, or write the English language and knows nothing of what she did. The land these parties took a deed to is as follows: The NE. ¼ of section 23; the SE. ¼ of section 14; the west ½ of the NE. ¼ and the SW¼ of the NW. ¼ of section 24; and the SW. ¼ of the NE. ¼ of section 35, all in township 8 north, range 8 east; and the east ½ of the SE. ¼ and the SW. ¼ of SE. ¼ of section 17, township 7 north, range 9 east. This land is worth about $20 per acre and this child is the only heir to the above land. As in the former case I cited above, no legal steps have been taken to prosecute these parties and will not be as long as left to the parties whose duties it is to see that the laws are obeyed and criminals prosecuted.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I did not catch the exact effect of those statements as to what part the special agents performed in the premises.

Mr. CURTIS. The special agents unearthed these cases and secured a reconveyance of the land to the Indians. The local authorities, when the cases were presented, refused to prosecute, in the first case, because they said the parties had agreed to deed back the lands after the crime was discovered, and therefore they would let them go on their simply deeding the land back.

Mr. BORAH. That is what I supposed, but the reading of the statement did not convey that impression.

Mr. CURTIS. I did not read all of the statement. I merely wanted to state the case briefly.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that those two instances, in all probability, would not have been adjusted if the agents had not been at hand to take care of them?

Mr. CURTIS. That is so. The agents unearthed the facts, as they have in many hundred cases, and I will show before I get through many cases where lands and rents have been recovered through the work of the district agents.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. That there may be no misunderstanding of the purpose of my inquiry, I will say I was in favor of putting the provision in the bill in the Senate to retain these agents. This provision was omitted in the House, and I worked hard to retain it in conference.

At the same time, I think we ought to discuss the matter with a clearness as to facts, and I do not see anything in the paper just read by the Senator which shows that in either case the remedy was brought about or any remedy has been secured. It says:

I will give you a couple of cases I have just investigated.

Mr. CURTIS. It was an investigation made by a district agent. I am reading from reports made by the agent and brought to the attention of the department, and through their efforts this land was recovered to the Indians.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, that is very important, but I understood from the reading of the letter that the information was discovered from a statement made to another party, and what I desired to know was the specific fact whether the agent did the work.

Mr. CURTIS. It was by the agent. The reports I shall read are from district agents. Here is another case:

Some time in April, 1907, A. G. Mayhue and N. E. Grisco, of Seminole, sent an Indian boy to tell me to come to his office at Seminole, for what purpose I did not know until I arrived there. Mr. Grisco, acting as agent for A. G. Mayhue, wanted to buy my land and insisted on buying it. I told him that I did not want to sell my land. Then Mr. Grisco stated he wanted to buy 10 acres. I concluded to sell 10 acres, and he gave me $10 to sign papers and promised to give me more.

I learned afterwards that the papers I signed conveyed 80 acres of my land instead of 10 acres. When I learned this I went back to Mr. Grisco and offered him back the $10, but he refused to take it and told me he had bought my land. He also told me that he would give me $500 more when I would give him another deed. Afterwards he gave me an order on J. Gillworth's store for $25, making in all $35 I received.

The above is the statement made by the Indian, and the report of the district agent shows that upon investigation he found the statement of the Indian to be true, and they found that the pretended purchaser had taken possession of the land on a Sunday while the Indian was attending church.

This is another case unearthed by the district agents and the land recovered.

I have here a letter, and I am going back to 1907, and I am doing so because I wish to show that this practice of robbing the Indians has been followed for years, and the files of the Interior Department show that but for the activity of the district agents many of the Indians would have lost their homes and others would have lost large sums of money. This letter is from a district agent in the Seminole country.

In answer to your inquiry concerning the deeds taken to full-blood Indian lands among the Seminoles, it would take too long a time to fully enumerate them. This can be said: There is scarcely a person among the Seminoles living, full blood, mixed blood, or freedmen, but what there is on record a deed against their land, and so nearly all the most fraudulent character that it is safe to say all obtained fraudulently with possibly a pittance doled out to them. As an illustration, within the last week I have taken more than 50 affidavits of full-blood Indians, all showing how they were defrauded out of their land, and so it has been for some time past and will last for some time to come. All of the inherited land has deeds recorded against the heirs; all obtained by means not recognized in any other courts. There is a pretense of large sums paid in consideration, but unquestionable evidence shows that not one-fiftieth of the sum stated was ever paid.

I have in my possession a power of attorney, which I want to have printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is so granted.

The power of attorney is as follows:

POWER OF ATTORNEY.

SECTION 1. KNOW all men by these presents: That I, Sean Colbert, post-office address, Glover, Ind. T., represent that I am 60 years old, in consideration of $1 to me in hand paid, the receipt of same is hereby acknowledged, and other valuable consideration, I do by these presents appoint, constitute, and nominate Eli P. Williams, Elmer Williams, and Charles H. Williams my sole and only heirs and lawful agents and attorneys in fact, hereafter called my agents, they to act either jointly or severally with full, sole, and absolute power to do any and all acts at any time that I could lawfully do myself had I not executed this power of attorney, which in any way relate to all the lands and to any part of the lands in my allotment other than homestead, hereafter called said lands, and the possession, control, rents, income, and profit thereof, located in Indian Territory, to wit:

ATTACHED DESCRIPTION.

The northwest quarter of section 21, township 3 south, range 2 west (160 A), in the Indian Territory.

Not being familiar with the description of said lands, my agents are hereby authorized at their option to attach to this power of attorney in the blank space above, a description of all or any part of said lands, said description to be marked "Attached description," and when so attached shall have the same legal force and effect as if said description of said lands in said attached description had been written in this power of attorney before it was executed, and my agents are hereby authorized to have said description of said lands recorded with this power of attorney.

SEC. 2. I hereby assign, transfer, and deliver to my agents all of my rights to the possession of said lands and the improvements thereon, and I agree within two years from this date to put my agents in actual and absolute possession thereof, and my agents agree when put in possession as aforesaid to advance to me on demand $50 on this power of attorney, and should I from any cause fail to furnish possession as above provided, my agents are hereby authorized to acquire passession of said lands and improvements at any time during the life of this power of attorney and to do any acts necessary in their opinion to be done to acquire said possession, and when in possession agree to rent, manage, and look after said lands and improvements.

My agents have full, sole, and absolute authority to collect and receive all moneys, rents, and income of any kind now due or that hereafter become due from said lands, and my agents agree during my life to account to me, and after my death to account to my heirs, executors, and administrators, for all moneys, rents, and income received by them on account of my interest in said lands, less 8 per cent on the amount actually received by them, after deducting all expenses. Said 8 per cent I allow my agents in full payment for their services for managing, renting, or disposing of my interest in said lands. And I further agree not to assign or transfer all or any part of said moneys, rents, and income.

SEC. 3. I hereby sell, transfer, and convey and deliver to my agents an absolute interest in fee simple in all of the rents from said lands now due and that hereafter become due before the expiration of this power of attorney, and in all of the improvements on said lands, and agree that this power of attorney is coupled with an interest in all of said rents and improvements.

SEC. 4. I hereby sell, convey, and transfer to my agents an absolute interest in fee simple in all and in any part of said lands that I can lawfully sell or alienate.

SEC. 5. SEC. 6. This power of attorney shall continue in full force and effect until the 31st day of December, 1939, and shall expire on said date; and I agree that this power of attorney shall not be terminated at my death, but shall continue in full force and effect until the last-mentioned date, and my agents have full, sole, and absolute power in the event of my death to do any and all acts in their own name or names authorized to be done by this power of attorney; and I further agree, for myself, my heirs, executors, and administrators, that this power of attorney shall not be revoked before the last-mentioned date.

SEC. 7. Should any one or two of my agents die this shall in no way affect the legal force and effect of this power of attorney; the survivor or survivors shall have the same full, sole, and absolute power to act as if death had not occurred.

SEC. 8. My agents are authorized and have full, sole, and absolute power to bring, defend—either in their own name or names or in my name, at their option—and dismiss any lawsuit that in any way relates to said lands and improvements, the possession, rents, or profits thereof, and to prosecute said suits until finally adjudicated in the court of last resort.

SEC. 9. It is hereby stipulated and agreed that the considerations named in section 1 and section 2 of this power of attorney are valuable and sufficient considerations and make all of the sections and parts of sections of this power of attorney binding obligations upon me and my agents and upon said lands and improvements, income, and profits thereof.

SEC. 10. Should any one or more of the sections herein or should any part of any section or sections herein from any cause be declared void or inoperative this fact shall in no way affect the legal force and effect of the other sections and parts of sections of this power of attorney.

SEC. 11. I hereby ratify and confirm all the acts of my agents named herein, and I hereby revoke and cancel all other powers of attorney and agencies, and the parties named herein are my sole and only authorized and acting agents and attorneys in fact.

This power of attorney contains the full agreement between the parties hereto and shall not be changed or altered unless the same is in writing and signed by all the parties, and no person has any authority to make any promise, representation, or agreement which in any way changes or alters the terms and provisions of this power of attorney.

Mr. CURTIS. This power of attorney was secured from Indians by a man named William Nelson, a mixed-blood Choctaw, who states that he was employed to go through the Choctaw Nation and procure signatures of Indians to powers of attorney and was paid $2.50 for each power of attorney he obtained. He was instructed to pay each Indian a dollar to induce him to sign the power of attorney. This man states that he secured 100 or more signatures to powers of attorney, that he was working for the $2.50, and that he did not in any instance explain or interpret to the Indian the contents of the instrument which he was signing. He states also that he did not himself know the contents of the instrument. He said his method was to find an Indian and present to him the power of attorney and convey the idea to the Indian that it was a lease and that he would get more rent money for his land. In some cases the evidence shows that these Indians were induced to believe if they would sign the power of attorney they would get twice as much rent per year as they were then receiving.

Now, a peculiar thing about this power of attorney is that section 3 provides:

SEC. 3. I hereby sell, transfer, and convey and deliver to my agents an absolute interest in fee simple in all of the rents from said lands now due and that hereafter become due before the expiration of this power of attorney, and in all of the improvements on said lands, and agree that this power of attorney is coupled with an interest in all of said rents and improvements.

Section 4 is as follows:

SEC. 4. I hereby sell, convey, and transfer to my agents an absolute interest in fee simple in all and in any part of said lands that I can lawfully sell or alienate.

That is a sample of the power of attorney taken by this Indian, who visited these various full bloods and others in the Choctaw country.

Here is a form of an agreement that was signed by thousands of Indians in Oklahoma:

Agreement entered into between George Terry, of Ardmore, Okla., of the first part, and several Indians, of the second part, that these Indians that deeds me one-fourth of their surplus allotment, where they have given a power of attorney to collect their rents and sell their lands.

I am to commence at once proceedings to have them put in possession of their own lands and collect their own rents, and, for such compensation, I am to have $50 retainer fee.

The following statement is from a district agent, showing one of the many deeds secured from the Indians of the Five Tribes:

The attached warranty deed from Ellis McCoy and wife to G. G. Guthrey, was procured from ignorant Choctaws who live in the mountain districts of the Choctaw Nation (they have no idea of the value of their lands, which consist of some of the best cotton and corn lands in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations) at only a fraction more than the appraised value, and which to-day would bring $35 to $40 per acre.

This is only one of perhaps thousands of such deeds which have been procured from the Indians, who know nothing of the value of said lands.

This deed was made for the consideration of $1,100, and it conveys 200 acres of land. I should like to have the deed printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The deed is as follows:

No. 908. WARRANTY DEED, WITH RELINQUISHMENT OF POWER.

Know all men by these presents:

That we, Elias McCoy and Lillian McCoy, his wife, of the recording district No. 14, in the Indian Territory, for and in consideration of the sum of $1,100, to us in hand paid by G. G. Guthrey, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, have granted, bargained, sold, and conveyed, and do by these presents grant, bargain, sell, and convey unto the said G. G. Guthrey, and unto his heirs and assigns forever, the following-described real estate situated in the Chickasaw Nation, in the Indian Territory, to wit:

The SE. ¼ of SE. ¼ of SE. ¼ of sec. 18, T. 5 S., R. 6 E.; E. ½ of NE. ¼ of sec. 19, T. 5 S., R. 6 E.; SW. ¼ of SW. ¼ of NW. ¼ of sec. 20, T. 5 S., R. 6 E.; S. ½ of SW. ¼ of NW. ¼ of sec. 5, T. 5 S., R. 3 W.; N. ½ of SW. ¼ of sec. 5, T. 5 S., R. 3 W., containing in all 200 acres, with all the privileges, appurtenances, and improvements thereupon situated, appertaining, and thereunto belonging.

It is also intended by this instrument to convey all right, title, and interest which we may hereafter acquire in and to said above described property by reason of a patent or patents being issued to ——— by the Chickasaw and Choctaw Nations.

To have and to hold the same unto the said G. G. Guthrey, his heirs and assigns, forever And we, the said Elias McCoy and Lillian McCoy, for themselves, executors, and administrators do covenant with the said G. G. Guthrey, his heirs and assigns, that we lawfully seized in fee simple of the aforegranted premises; that they are free from all encumbrances; that we have a good right to sell and convey the same as herein done; that we will, and our heirs, executors, and administrators shall, forever warrant and defend the same to the quiet enjoyment of said G. G. Guthrey, heirs and assigns, against all lawful claims and demands of all persons.

And I, Lillian McCoy, wife of Elias McCoy, the grantor herein, do hereby join in this conveyance, and for the consideration aforesaid convey and renounce all right of homestead in and to said property, and for the consideration aforesaid do hereby release and relinquish unto the said G. G. Guthrey, heirs and assigns, all my right, claim, and possibility of dower in and to said property.

Deputy Clerk United States Court, ex-Officio Recorder, District No. 22, Indian Territory.

Mr. CURTIS. Here is another form of practice in Oklahoma that was unearthed by district agents. An heir would have a valuable oil lease or tract. They would advertise in one paper that the lease would be made at a certain time to the highest bidder. At the same time notice would be given in some paper of small circulation. Those who read the bid in the paper of larger circulation, when they called at the proper place to submit a bid, would be informed that the lease would not be let on that day.

But these same parties, after the people desiring to bid had departed, would make a lease to their special friends under the notice printed in the paper of small circulation. This would usually occur a day or two after the date fixed in the first notice.

This case was called to my attention, and I went to the Interior Department, called the Secretary's attention to the facts in the case, and he required the people to give the Indian over $12,000 more than he would have received under the lease made on the date fixed in the newspaper of small circulation.

Another:

The following is a statement from a letter of a lawyer who took a case for an Indian:

In one case where the deeds were executed before the right of alienation existed, the Indian received, as I have been informed, $40 for 320 acres, which now has several producing oil wells upon it. In this case my co-counsel has been arrested for making an attorney's lien contract with the Indian, and I have been threatened with arrest for removing to the Federal court a case wherein the State court denied my petition.

This is the threat which was made against two local lawyers who brought a suit to protect these Indians.

A number of leases were sent me by district agents showing that Indians had leased their lands to speculators at about 30 cents per acre, while the speculators were receiving as high as three and four dollars an acre for the land. Many of these leases were set aside through the efforts of the district agents.

Another case reported by a district agent:

I investigated an application made by Bluford Take, of Tahlequah, who is enrolled as a full-blood Cherokee, for the removal of restrictions of his 80 acres of land for an addition to the town of Tulsa. In an interview with him at Tahlequah and during the investigation if he had been advised by anyone to make the application, or if he had an offer on the land, he said that about six months ago a man from Muskogee * * * offered him $100 for the land. (It ought to bring $2,500 at least.) He told him that he would be back to see him in 30 days, but he says that he never came back; but since my return I have examined the records in register of deeds office, and there I find that he signed a deed (by mark X) conveying the land to the party above referred to.

Another case; and this is a report from the district agents. It is a timber case, where a lumber company is reported as having purchased the timber on an Indian's land for $32.50 and a lease of the land for five years for the further sum of $32.50 and sold the timber within a short time for $21,000. I read:

There are inclosed you herewith copies of the papers in the case of Wilson Farmer, a full-blood Mississippi Choctaw, roll No. 1326, to whom was allotted as a portion of his surplus selection the northwest 10 acres of lot 9—

And so forth, giving the description—

You will note from the papers that this allottee gave a timber bill of sale for the pine timber on this land for a consideration of $32.50, and also gave, to the same grantees, a five-year lease for a like consideration of $32.50. The grantees, the Washington Lumber Co., under the before-mentioned instruments, conveyed this pine timber, by bill of sale, to William W. Sanders, of Bowie County, Tex., for a consideration of $21,000.

Think of it! And yet they would do away with the district agents who are protecting the Indians.

Here is another case:

BOUGHT A WIFE, SOLD OIL LAND.

By paying a comely young negro woman who had never seen him before $100 to marry him, by which he took advantage of that Oklahoma law which says that a man attains majority upon his marriage, whether he is of legal age or not, Albert Harris, a Creek negro minor, was enabled, it is alleged, to make a deed of 120 acres of his allotment from the Creek Nation, and Frank Chesley, the millionaire oil man, was enabled to get one of the most valuable pieces of oil land in the new field that has recently opened up west of Haskell.

The story of the unusual deal, which was consummated here last Tuesday, illustrates the strenuous life of the oil producer, the man who acquires title to a piece of land and punctures it full of holes in his endeavor to find far below its surface a spouting stream of a dirty, black fluid, which he can sell to the Standard Oil Co. at a price per day that makes the income of an East India potentate look small.

Albert Harris was the owner of 120 acres of land a quarter of a mile below the big oil well recently brought in on section 6–14–14 in the Haskell field. A horde of oil men were after the land, but the fact that the negro was a minor prevented him making a title. The queer Oklahoma law—

I hope it has been repealed. I do not know whether it has been or not—

The queer Oklahoma law, by which a man attains majority on his marriage day, whether he is of age or not, was discovered by some of the "oil men." A marriage was immediately arranged for Albert by one prominent firm of "oil" speculators in Muskogee. The young lady was found and the license secured last Saturday. Chesley and his associates discovered what was going on. By some unexplained means the first marriage was prevented and the license returned to the judge's office and marked void. This was Monday. Tuesday the negro was in the office of the attorney acting for Chesley and his associates in the matter. "Babe" Williams, who was assisting in the deal, was told to go at once to find a woman who would marry the boy. "Babe" got out on the streets, and in half an hour returned with the aforesaid comely young negro woman. She was given $100 and was willing.

Another case:

An approved deed was obtained through the probate court at Durant, Okla., from the heirs of a deceased full-blood Indian, the consideration being $800 and the land being 320 acres. Complaint was made to me that it was doubtful whether or not said heirs received the consideration named, and after investigation I found the following to be the facts in the case:

I found that 150 acres of said land was in high state of cultivation and quite well improved with renters' houses, and well worth $4,000. The heir to this land is an incompetent Indian, and it was stated by parties being familiar with the sale that this heir did not get all of the consideration that was mentioned.

Here is another, simply a form of power of attorney that was given to one C. C. McCarty, of Durant, Okla. I would like to print it in the RECORD, because the report shows that hundreds of such powers of attorney were executed:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, —— District, Indian Territory:

Know all by these presents:

———, ———, ———, Indian Territory, do hereby make, constitute, and appoint C. C. McCarty, of Durant, Ind. T., —— true and lawful agent, to act for ——, and in —— name —— to represent — case before the Congress of the United States of America, or any other court or commissioner that the case may arise before.

And ——— ——— gives the said C. C. McCarty the power to employ any attorney at law to help prosecute —— case before any court or Congress of the United States of America at his own expense.

In witness whereof — have hereunto set — hands — on this the — day of ———, 190—.

Here is a letter that was written to one of the Congressmen from Oklahoma. The gentleman sent me a copy, and he erased the name of the party to whom it was written, but I just want to read to you what he says:

The conditions existing in this country are shameful in the extreme. The lands of helpless minors have been wrested from them and their estates grabbed and taken away from them mercilessly.

Now, in addition to these cases, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that these district agents assist in probate matters, and I would like to have printed in the RECORD letters from Mr. D. H. Bynum, probate attorney, in which he says:

In reply to your verbal inquiry of recent date with reference to the probate work in the district agency service, I beg to advise that, to a person who is not familiar with conditions in the former Indian Territory, the amount of work of minor estates is inconceivable. In the first place, minors were enrolled as citizens of the Five Civilized Tribes and participated equally in the division of the tribal properties. There are between 101,000 and 102,000 enrolled citizens, of which three-fifths, or 60,000, are minors having estates of more or less value.

Thus, with the 40 counties in the former Indian Territory, there is an average of 1,500 minors to a county.

With this enormous amount of work, the county courts in the eastern district of Oklahoma have but the same machinery as the western side of the State, where such conditions do not prevail, and the same machinery as other States where probably 25 new cases each year is considered a fair amount of work.

I have prepared, somewhat hurriedly, a small statement showing the minors of each nation and the values of their property, based upon an estimate that each allotment is worth three times its appraisement for allotment purposes, and this basis excludes the value of improvements and all mineral properties.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Has there been a report from the department on this matter?

Mr. CURTIS. They have reported in favor of this amendment. It was placed in the bill in the Senate and was stricken out in conference.

In short, there are 15,596 probate cases, and the number of minors involved was 30,100.

I have a case here of May 18, 1912, which shows that this has been continuing right along:

Another flagrant case of fraud has just been perpetrated on Hepsey McGirt, a full-blood Creek Indian woman, Roll No. 6465, shown by the rolls to be about 60 years old, but appears to be much older, living near Wewoka, Okla.

I inclose take-off of a warranty deed as shown by the Seminole County records, book 12, page 27, wherein Hepsey McGirt on April 26, 1909, attempted to convey to E. C. Aldridge, Wewoka, southeast quarter of section 10, township 8 north, range 8 east, 160 acres, allotment of Amos Lindsay, Creek Roll No. 4905, deceased, for a consideration of $500. The records show the deed was witnessed by Alice B. Davis and approved by T. S. Cobb, county judge, September 14, 1909.

The facts in this case are that instead of her receiving a consideration of $500, the Indian woman received a due bill for $5. Acting on these facts, Hon. James E. Gresham, special assistant to the Attorney General, located at Wewoka, brought suit in the district court of Seminole County for cancellation of the deed and recovery of the land. The case was set for hearing last week, but before it could be tried the same vendee secured another deed from this old Indian woman showing a consideration of $550, thus preventing action in the court in her interest.

The land in question is worth, at a low estimate, $3,000.

Here is another case. A. W. Wyley, of Adair, Cherokee Nation, pleaded guilty in the United States court a few days ago and was fined $500 for using the mails to defraud. A man who had secured lands from these poor helpless Indians and had no title used the mails to advertise, and sold some land to nonresident parties, using the mail. The evidence secured by the district agent was sufficient to justify his prosecution, and he plead guilty and was fined in the local court.

The Secretary of the Interior has written a number of letters urging that this amendment of the Senate be agreed to and that the district agents be retained. I will not take the time of the Senate to read them.

Here is another memorandum in reference to frauds in McCurtain County, dated August 16, 1912:

Granville G. McVay, district agent, in his monthly report, dated September 1, 1911, to the United States Indian superintendent, Muskogee, Okla., in investigating frauds in McCurtain County, Okla., said that—

"We have actually recovered for the minors of this county the sum of $32,027.29.

"In the famous and infamous matter of John Lemon, a full-blood Indian guardian, wherein he is guardian of Mary, Jessie, and Joseph Taylor, Indian minors; and in the matter of Leon Alemohtubbi, a full-blood Choctaw Indian, who is guardian of Elas, Ilis, and Letty Alemohtubbi, Indian minors, it appears that Judge Barnes, without acting as county judge of McCurtain County, in direct contravention to the law, loaned $14,000 of the above-named minors' money to C. Gamble, of the bank of Garvin, on his mere personal note and without a court order, though these notes show that Judge Barnes was surety thereon. In these cases we took this up with Mr. Gamble, and while Judge Barnes said he would be sued rather than turn this matter over, yet we now have in our possession a bank-deposit slip wherein this money is placed to the credit of the guardian as guardian of the minors above enumerated, and not held by C. Gamble as heretofore. In this connection we actually recovered the neat sum of $14,000."

They cite a number of cases, and show some 20 or 30 cases that were presented to the grand jury as the result of the work of these people.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that there is no question but that there has been a great deal of fraud. There is no question in my mind about the district agents. We put them in here in the Senate, and we tried to keep them in the bill in conference, but the amendment for the district agents carried an appropriation of $100,000. Now, while that went out in conference, the Senate amendment increasing the appropriation for the expenses of the administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes by $24,000 was retained, and also the Senate amendment for the pay of special agents and for other necessary expenses of the Indian service for which no other appropriation is available. It was increased from $85,000 to $125,000, making a net increase over the House bill of some $65,000.

Now, it seems to me, the real question before the Senate is whether this conference report should be sent back because we failed to get the entire amount asked for. I do not think it was any too much; I would have been glad to have gotten it; but there is no question in my mind that these increases, with the latitude of the legislation, can be used for the very purpose of employing additional help in Oklahoma to safeguard so far as that kind of help can safeguard the rights of the Indians.

I want to say in this connection that we have all received scores of telegrams, and I have a stack of them in my office, all based upon the theory that we have stricken out the district agents. I have no idea at all that the men who sent those telegrams realized that we have secured $65,000 in addition to the House appropriation which can be used in the discretion of the Interior Department.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CURTIS. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Those of us who are not familiar with Indian legislation and not members of the committee are perhaps laboring under the same embarrassment as the people who sent the telegram. I had received the impression that the district agents have been abolished. Am I now to understand that it is only a question whether $65,000 or $100,000 shall be appropriated?

Mr. CLAPP. The title of district agent is undoubtedly abolished by a failure to make an appropriation for district agents. They were not originally called district agents; they were special agents, I think, to the Secretary; but while the title of the office has been abolished, I do not think there is any question but that this item of $65,000 can be used for this very purpose. Later I will read to the Senate the entire language of the provisions that I think will cover them. The language of one of the appropriations is "for any purpose not otherwise provided for."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, in answer to the question of the Senator from Idaho, I will say that if this report is sustained the agents are abolished. The additional appropriations do not apply to the employment of these district agents. The provision does not apply to Oklahoma. The Interior Department, which must administer this law, are claiming that the amount given and the conditions of the appropriation are not sufficient, and they want this item retained so that they may continue to protect the property of the Indian through the district agents.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator is correct about that. They want this particular item, and I think they should have had it, I am frank to say; but we were not able to get it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I do not intend to take up the time of the Senate further in discussing this question. I ask consent to print in the RECORD a number of telegrams, letters, and petitions which I have received on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

MADILL, OKLA., August 12, 1912.

Hon. Senator CURTIS,
Washington, D. C.:

We, the Commercial Club of Madill, Okla., protest against the removal of the district agents.

W. J. BELL, Secretary.

TISHOMINGO, OKLA., August 12, 1912.

Senator CURTIS,
Washington, D. C.:

The citizens here are unanimous in their appeal for the retention of district agents. They are the only means by which to reach both ends of business relations. They are here and know conditions. They are not an expense to the Indian. The agent of this district has saved the Indians for whom he has acted many times what he has cost them. We need even more immediate connection. Thanks for any help that you may be able to give us.

B. R. BRUNDAGE.
President American State Bank.

WETUMKA, OKLA., August 1½, 1912.

CHARLES CURTIS,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

District Indian agents demanded by all Indians. Public policy demands also, and if those officials are eliminated all Indians will be at mercy of unscrupulous land buyers. Retain agents. I am full-blood Creek Indian.

SAPULPA, OKLA., August 1½, 1912.

Hon. CHAS. CURTIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Fourteen minors' estates in my court, worth more than hundred thousand dollars each, and 16 other cases, each of great value, makes continuance of district agents here necessary for protection of Government wards. I urge that district agents' appropriation be made for benefit of both Indians and white citizens.

WARREN G. BROWN,
County Judge, Creek County.

TAHLEQUAH, OKLA., August 12, 1912.

The honorable SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.:

Be it resolved by the advisory committee of the incorporated Keetoowah Society in regular annual session, It is the unanimous sense of this society that all full-blood Cherokees, Delawares, and Shawnees earnestly protest against the proposition now pending in the United States Congress to abolish the district Indian agents in eastern Oklahoma. It is the avowed duty of the United States to protect the full-blood Indians, and the withdrawal at this time of the effective protection afforded them by the district agents means not only failure and refusal to protect but, in the opinion of this society, it will result in incalculable injury and loss to thousands of full-blood Indians, including minors who have inherited valuable estates.

Resolved, That the presidents of this society are hereby directed to at once transmit these resolutions to the Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C., and that said Secretary is, and is hereby, requested to immediately transmit copy of same to Congress or committees thereof and to the President of the United States and to the Oklahoma delegation in Congress. Passed the advisory committee by unanimous vote.

BILL MANKILLER,
Second Vice President.
R. R. MEIGS, Chairman.
FRANK J. BOUDINOT,
Secretary.

Approved.

RICHARD W. WOLFE,
President.
PRICE COCHRAN,
First Vice President.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I wish to reiterate to Senators that if you take from these Indians in Oklahoma these district agents, you will take from them their greatest protection. You will turn the helpless Indians over to the men mentioned in these reports, and the Indians will be robbed of their lands and other property.

Mr. McCUMBER obtained the floor.

Mr. CLAPP. I take it the Senator from North Dakota is going to address himself to another amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. To several others. I yield to the Senator if he desires to proceed first.

Mr. CLAPP. No; but I thought if the Senator intended to address himself to this amendment I would prefer that it should be done now, and then whatever statement is to be made on behalf of the conferees I should like to make, and after that the Senator can proceed with reference to other amendments.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator had better take it up now. I do not know which question I will take up first. It will be just as I find them in the bill. I can proceed after the Senator has answered the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, of course the position which a conferee on the part of the Senate is placed in with reference to amendments which are placed on a bill by the Senate is known to every Member of the Senate. The appropriation bill is formed in the House. It comes to the Senate. We put amendments upon it here, and no matter how general may be the desire of the Senate for an amendment, of course in the last analysis the conferees can not retain a Senate amendment without a vote of at least two Members of the House conferees with the managers on the part of the Senate.

Some years ago there was a class of employees, I think, called special assistants to the Secretary, and appropriations were made for them beginning with an appropriation of $10,000 annually. Later they came to be known as district agents. The earlier appropriations, I think, ran about $80,000 to $90,000, until finally they reached the sum of $100,000. In the last appropriation bill the amount appropriated for these district agents was $100,000.

At the present session of Congress the House in making up the Indian appropriation bill omitted that item. It was a matter, I understand, of considerable discussion in the House committee and also in the House itself, and both the committee and the House decided to leave it out. So the bill came over here without any provision for salaries and expenses for district agents, but in the bill were two items, one reading as follows:

For expense of administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes and the compensation of employees, $150,000.

The Senate struck that out and put in lieu thereof the following:

For expenses of administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, Oklahoma, and the compensation of employees, $174,000.

Making an increase there of $24,000. I do not think there is any question but that the Interior Department can use that appropriation in any manner it sees fit where the use is not in express terms limited by statute. At the same time the bill as passed by the House contained a provision reading as follows:

For pay of special agents at $2,000 per annum; for traveling and incidental expenses of such special agents, including sleeping-car fare, and a per diem of $3 in lieu of subsistence when actually employed on duty in the field or ordered to the seat of government; for transportation and incidental expenses of officers and clerks of the Office of Indian Affairs when traveling on official duty; for pay of employees not otherwise provided for; and for other necessary expenses of the Indian service for which no other appropriation is available, $85,000.

During the time special provision was made for district agents it was not thought that this item covered those district agents, because there was a specific appropriation for them, but the broad language of that provision, "for pay of employees not otherwise provided for," in the face of Congress striking out the special provision of $100,000 for men who were called district agents, there can be no question of the right of the department to use a portion of that fund for the purpose.

When the bill reached the Senate, the Senate struck out the words "eighty-five thousand" and inserted "one hundred and twenty-five thousand" making an increase there of $40,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. That was only $25,000 more than the amount asked for by the Department of the Interior, which was $100,000.

Mr. CLAPP. The estimate was $100,000, and we raised it $25,000 above the estimate.

Mr. CURTIS. Furthermore, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. This appropriation is made a part of the bill which provides for a certain class of work that has been going on in the department for years, and it has never been construed or held that special or district agents should be employed under it.

Mr. CLAPP. That is quite true. As I have already stated, that provision never anticipated the particular provision we are dealing with, but the broad language of that provision, for any purpose not otherwise provided by law, it seems to me leaves it beyond any question.

Mr. President, I am not justifying it. I am simply showing what has been done that the Senate may then determine for itself whether, in view of the increases which were made and the failure of the conferees to secure the increase asked for in amendment 99, which relates to district agents, the conference report should be sent back.

Mr. President, no one deplores more than I do the condition which the Senator from Kansas has presented to the Senate. At the same time, with this appropriation of $65,000, that may be necessary to the department somewhere else but from which it must here and there cut a corner, I believe the large portion of the amount, if no other alternative is presented, can be used for this purpose.

Mr. President, these amendments were put on in the Senate. I was in favor of this amendment or, of course, I would not have voted for it in the Senate. The conference was held up for something like two or three weeks in the hope that we could finally get the conferees on the part of the House to yield on these provisions. I feel that the Senate conferees did all that they could in this respect, not only through their own efforts, but as is well known to some Senators and well known to the department, the opportunity was given and the opportunity was seconded by the Senate conferees, if possible to bring about a change of mind on the part of the House conferees, so that they would finally yield on this question and leave the district agent item in the conference report. I believe that they should have done so. I believe it is an important item. I am in hearty accord with the department in its effort to retain the item. But knowing what I do of the history of the contest over the item in the House committee before it reached the House and of the contest upon the question in the House, we reached a point where I believed there was no use in further delaying the conference report for this reason. I therefore signed the conference report, and anxious as I am, glad as I would be, to secure an additional appropriation for the use of the department, knowing what I do of the history of this struggle in the House committee and in the House itself, for one I shall feel constrained to vote for the adoption of the conference report.

It is needless to add that there is nothing personal in this matter, and that if upon this statement of facts Senators think the report should be sent back to conference, the Senate conferees will do their best again to secure a concession from the House on these particular points.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota has my profound sympathy, as has every other Senator who must act as a conferee upon an Indian appropriation bill. I have occupied that position myself and I know what it means. Without having been present at the conferences this year I know the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] has worked day and night assiduously to secure an agreement between the two Houses.

Knowing something about the character of his work, Mr. President, I am free to say that if I believed a vote of mine to send this matter back to the conference would be considered by the Senator from Minnesota as the slightest criticism upon his act as a conferee, I should fail to do so, notwithstanding the fact that I believe there are injustices as a result of this conference which ought to be remedied.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. CLAPP. I wish to say to the Senator from North Dakota and the Senate generally that the action of the Senate, if it should decide to send the matter back would not be considered by the Senate conferees as personal or as being in any sense a reflection upon them. I believed that these things should be brought back to the two Houses as they are and a fair and candid statement made. I want to say that whatever issue there is between the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] and myself at heart we are one on this proposition; and it is for the Senate to decide the question. I simply say for myself, knowing the history of this item, that I shall vote to sustain the conference report.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I am glad to have the Senator make the statement, because it encourages me to call attention to something in this bill that I think would justify the Senate in asking that it go back to the conferees.

As one looks over the Indian appropriation bill, as he follows the development of the bill from the time it is introduced in the House, passes through the committee of the House and passes the House and into the committee of the Senate and through this body, he can not but be impressed with the one great fact that the whole bill is top heavy in a certain direction, and that certain direction is always toward the State of Oklahoma. I can easily understand, Mr. President, how this can naturally be when I go in and ascertain the personnel of the committee and find that on the House committee there are three Members from one State upon the Committee on Indian Affairs. It is not, therefore, surprising that the interests of that State are well taken care of, and sometimes I think at the expense of the interests of some of the other States that must deal with the Indian question in their own localities. The branch of this tree marked Oklahoma is loaded with fruit while other branches with other names are necessarily devoid of any great quantity.

Take the matter, for instance, that we are now discussing, the matter of these agencies. I had occasion some few years ago to ask that the period of limitation upon the conveyance of Indian lands should be extended for a further period of 25 years, because I was convinced that the Indians in Oklahoma, like the Indians in every other section of the country, were regarded as a fit subject for the exploitation of the white man. I might say that I found, perhaps, that disease—the desire to take advantage of the Indians—a little more virile in the State of Oklahoma than in any other State in the Union. This may possibly be because the value of the Indians' property is more enticing than in any of the other States. Most bitterly was that provision fought, and yet it was passed; and it has saved to the Indians of that section many thousands of acres of land and many homes.

All the time I have been a Member of the Senate and upon the Committee on Indian Affairs we have had to deal with this question with the department where the attempt was made to separate the Indian from his property without adequate compensation. It has been found necessary, at least in the State of Oklahoma, owing particularly, as I said, to the great value of the property of some of those Indians, to appoint agents and to keep agents in the field for their protection. The many instances which have been just cited by the Senator from Kansas are elaborate proof in support of the argument for the maintenance of these agents in that State.

Mr. President, I think that other States that have Indians to deal with, other States that have Indian schools to look after, have been used hardly with kindness in the measure as it has come forth from the conference committee. I will take just one provision that I think ought to send the report back to the conference. It is the provision which was mentioned by the Senator from Minnesota. He admits that it is new legislation and that it was not passed upon either by the Senate or the House. He also admits, I think, that it ought not to have been in this appropriation bill. I refer to amendment No. 114.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I think the Senator states that somewhat broadly. Of course, I concede that the item as reported by the conferees is not within the scope of the conference, but when the Senator says it ought not to have been in the bill he is mistaken. It ought to have been in the bill. The amendment was put in very hastily in the Senate, with the thought that it was broad enought to permit something of this kind to be agreed upon in conference. That there ought to be such a provision in the bill I am very certain.

Mr. McCUMBER. I can not imagine how the Senator can claim that under amendment No. 114 it could have been possibly contemplated that the same power and the same authority and the same appropriation was made as was made in the legislation which the conference committee adopted bodily into the bill.

Mr. CLAPP. I say it was not. The amendment was hastily drawn, not by the chairman, with the thought that it would cover the subject in conference. When we got into conference we saw at once it was not broad enough, and we had to drop the subject or exceed our authority and come to the two Houses for a settlement.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let us see whether the provision itself embodied matters that were of such crying necessity as would require the abandonment of the radical rules of legislation by inserting such a provision in the appropriation bill. As the bill came from the House there was nothing whatever in it with reference to the removal of these semiprisoners of war from the Fort Sill Military Reservation. If there had been a great demand for it, I have no doubt but that the three Representatives on that committee from the State of Oklahoma would have pointed it out and possibly there would have been some reference to it in the bill. But nothing whatever, not a line, was placed in the bill in reference to the proposition. When it came into the Senate it seems that we had not got in everything that was thought to be for the interest of that section of the country, or because we thought that the House had been rather economical in its dealing with the matter and would not appropriate anything, we inserted the following provision:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to report to Congress at the opening of the next session of Congress as to the advisability and the probable cost of securing homes in Oklahoma and New Mexico for Apache Indians who are now held as prisoners of war on the Fort Sill Military Reservation, Okla.

It was not so pressing as to even demand the attention of the committee of the House which brought this bill into existence. It was only thought of sufficient importance when it came to the Senate to justify us in making the suggestion that we should investigate the matter and determine the advisability. It had not got even to the advisability stage as we left it in the Senate.

Then, when it goes to conference with only the suggestion of an advice in the proposition, there is brought back into the Senate a conference report that has taken bodily a bill which was introduced in the House—I do not know at what time—and inserted it into this appropriation bill; and it now comes before the Senate to be voted upon as a matter coming not from either branch, not having passed either branch of Congress, but as coming solely from the conference committee.

It is quite a long provision, and I will only read the last paragraph of it. The last paragraph provides:

That for the purpose of removing and establishing said Indians on the Mescalero Apache Indian Reservation, there be, and hereby is, appropriated the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be used under the direction of the Secretary of War, and for the purpose of purchasing lands for those remaining in Oklahoma, there be, and hereby is, appropriated the sum of $100,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Thus, Mr. President, we go from the point of no suggestion in the House to a mere suggestion in the Senate of an investigation as to whether they ought to be removed at all, and if so, the cost thereof, to an absolute removal and an appropriation of $200,000 to carry that removal into effect, without any consideration whatever of the subject in either branch.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. GORE. I think the Senator is laboring under a misapprehension.

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope so.

Mr. GORE. A bill providing for the removal of the Apache Indians from Oklahoma to New Mexico was introduced into the House and was favorably reported by the Indian Affairs Committee to the House. A bill providing for the removal of the Apache Indians from Oklahoma to New Mexico was introduced in the Senate by myself, was favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, and passed the Senate, carrying an appropriation for their removal. The bill was based on a report from the Secretary of the Interior, a report by the Secretary of War, a report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and an estimate submitted by the department of $250,000, recommended by the department as necessary to execute this legislation. Not only that, but it had been strongly urged by the Bureau of Indian Rights.

These Indians have been prisoners now for a quarter of a century. They have been in constructive confinement. They have been segregated from other tribes. They have been obliged, I may say by necessity, to intermarry, it is said, even brothers and sisters.

Now, something ought to be done for these Indians. It is true that the Indian appropriation bill carried a provision for the appointment of a commission, notwithstanding two Secretaries had recommended their removal and had submitted an estimate for that purpose. It is a universal desire, a universal demand of everybody interested in the welfare of the Indians.

Every sentiment and every consideration of humanity pleads for this legislation. There is no reason why it should not be enacted either as a part of this Indian appropriation bill or in any other way, so that the humane and desirable object in view may be attained.

I trust the Senator will withdraw his opposition. I trust, further, that the Senate will not share his opposition.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have not attacked the justice of this provision in the slightest degree. This proposition has not passed the House; this proposition has not passed the Senate.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Until it has passed the House and the Senate it is not a proper proposition to be put by the conferees into an appropriation bill.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yielded to the Senator and he made a speech when I supposed I had yielded for an explanation. I will give way to the Senator in a moment if he will allow me to complete my remarks.

Mr. GORE. I wish just to correct that statement, Senator. The bill has passed the Senate. The Senator would like to speak by the record on that point.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the bill has passed the Senate, and I presume it has, I have no recollection of its passing the House.

Mr. GORE. I hope the Senator will let me add that only 25 of the original prisoners are now living.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I purpose to carry this matter a little further along. I said I would speak not only of the parliamentary status, but also of the justice of the proposition.

This may be an appropriate provision; I have no doubt but what that bill should have passed both the House and the Senate; but before such a provision goes upon an appropriation bill by the action of a conference committee, it ought to pass both of the legislative bodies in some form so that it gets fairly before the conferees.

Mr. President, while the Senator is pleading for that character of citizen, let me call his attention to another matter, and let us see what is the result of this $200,000 appropriation put on by this conference committee. You want to keep down your appropriation bill; all right. Now, here is a part of a tribe of Indians that rebelled against the Government; that committed murders; that have been retained as prisoners of war; that have been taken care of reasonably well, I presume; they are not suffering; at least we have no report that they are suffering any injustice at the hands of the Government. I am not saying that they should not be released, that they should not go to Oklahoma.

Let me call the Senator's attention to another tribe of Indians, the Turtle Mountain Tribe. While they had as absolute an ownership as it is possible for Indians to have in over 10,000,000 acres of the best land of the rich Red River Valley of the North, they were, by an Executive order, taken away from their own lands and were placed upon two little townships in what we call the Turtle Mountains, in which they were practically kept as prisoners for years. For what offense? For the offense that they had never been hostile to the white man; for the offense that they had never dyed tomahawk or knife in the blood of a white man or white woman. Adjoining them on the south were the great Sioux Tribes that were always in rebellion; that had in 1862 committed one of the most atrocious outrages of which civilization has any record, when thousands of people, I believe, were murdered. Those Indians, after the punishment of a few of them, were dealt with by the Government and their lands were bought—lands that were not worth one-half as much—for two dollars and a half an acre; and this sum was put to their credit; while the Turtle Mountain Indians who during that same Indian outbreak, furnished their guides and furnished their young men to take care of the white persons who were wounded or injured, and who had never raised a hand against the white settler, were taken from their section of country and placed in two townships.

In 1892, as chairman of a commission, I made a treaty with those Indians, and the best that we could do with the Government was to secure a treaty which allowed the Indians 10 cents an acre for that land, 10 cents an acre upon their agreement to release every acre of it, with the exception of the two townships, which had to be divided among nearly 3,000 Indians, and not more than one-fifth of those two townships was tillable land. It took us until 1903, I believe, to get that treaty ratified. One of the provisions of that treaty was that those who could not get an allotment within the limits of those two townships could at least go out in their own neighborhood and take Government land in the immediate vicinity. At that time there was a great quantity of Government land abutting upon this little executive reservation. If the treaty had been ratified immediately, they could have secured their homes, but they were kept there 11 or 12 years, until every foot of that land had gone out of Government ownership and was held by white settlers. When finally we got the treaty ratified and all of this land released, it was found that three-fourths of those people must go elsewhere to get their lands; they were compelled to go out into Montana, into the western part of our State, or to whatever place they could find land in the semiarid section.

We have had a succession of dry seasons, and for a number of years the Indians have been unable to raise a crop. The result is that these good Indians, the friends of the white people, who were driven from their homes out onto the dry prairies, have been in a destitute condition, and the department itself, of its own motion, knowing their condition, knowing the wrong that had been committed upon them by withholding their treaty for 12 years, recommended the appropriation of $100,000 to help them out during the next few years to open up their lands, to assist them in buying horses and cattle and machinery, and to help them to establish their farms.

Mr. President, in order to keep this $200,000 for these prisoners of the United States and to remove them, it became necessary for the conferees to take the $100,000 that was allotted to the Turtle Mountain Indians, who had never been a great load upon the Government and who had never rebelled against it.

I speak now for the justice of the matter. I have no objection to your holding the $200,000 if it is proper; but if you do it, I do object to your holding it at the expense of cutting out the $100,000 that belongs to and should go for the support and maintenance of these Indians out on the prairies.

So, Mr. President, I could follow up a number of such injustices which have been done along the same line. I call attention to but one other, and that is this: We need a hospital at the Indian school in the little town where I live. Provision was made some three or four years ago, where the small sum of $6,000 was allowed, but we could not build the hospital with that meager amount. We advertised for bids for about as small a hospital as could properly be built, but it was found that it would be necessary to have a considerably larger sum. We needed about $25,000; possibly we could get along with a little less than $25,000; but in order that we might appropriate more for these wards of the Government who are held as prisoners and in order that we might not be compelled to swell the appropriation, that little $25,000 appropriation must be cut out.

But here is another school down in Oklahoma, near one of their cities, that must have a new sewerage system; we must put that sewerage system in for them at a cost of about $17,000; but we must cut out something on the other schools in order that they may join with another little town and have a perfect sewerage system for their school system.

Mr. President, my complaint is not lodged so much against the fact that you have added these things as that you have added them at the expense of other sections. If you had not cut out other provisions that were far more necessary and more appropriate, in order that you might keep down the appropriation, and then added the $200,000 for the purpose of taking care of these Indians and removing them, I should have made no objection.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. CLAPP. I think it is only proper to place this Fort Sill provision right. I want to assure the Senator from North Dakota that its insertion did not involve the sacrifice of any other matter. It was a Senate amendment so far as it went; whatever had been done with it was done by the Senate; and when it was reached, knowing of the conditions existing, knowing that the amendment had been put in by the Senate with the thought that it might be the subject of conference, the Senate conferees were anxious that something should be done to close out and relieve the Fort Sill situation.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have no doubt that something should be done. I agree with the Senator entirely as to that.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator was arguing as though it had been done in the interest of Oklahoma and at the sacrifice of other amendments inserted by the Senate. It is true the House conferees concurred in it. I do not now and did not at the time regard it as a matter of particular interest to Oklahoma. It was regarded by the Senate conferees as a matter of general public interest, and we put it in with the explanation which I have already given to the Senate.

The great trouble, Mr. President, is right here—and it has been a trouble for some years—that instead of putting things before the House committee or before the House, and getting them in the House bill where they should be put, too many wait until the bill reaches the Senate; then the amendments are put in as Senate amendments, and, of course, from that time on the Senate conferees are practically subject in the last analysis to the action of the House conferees.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there is another little amendment that was put on by the Senate that I see the conferees struck out. I want to be fair with the Senator from Minnesota. I understand that it was stricken out because there was an assurance that the House would pass a bill practically covering the same subject, and that it would come over to the Senate and would be passed; but, Mr. President, we are nearing the close of the session——

Mr. CLAPP. To what amendment does the Senator refer?

Mr. McCUMBER. The amendment in reference to $40 per capita to be paid to certain Indians on the reservation between North and South Dakota. I ask the Senator now if he will state what objection there could be urged against that provision? I know the section of the country; I know that those Indians for two years have raised no crops whatever; I know that there is money due the Indians; I know they need it; and, so long as the appropriation was to be made out of their own money, I can see no reason why, if it was proper that it should pass as a separate bill and was really in this bill, so that it was subject to the jurisdiction of the committee of conference, the committee could not have held it there.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not just now recall the particular objection that was urged against the retention of that amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. It relates to the Standing Rock Reservation.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; I understand. Of course, it is manifest that objection was made and the Senate conferees felt that they had sooner or later to yield to it or they would not have yielded; but I do not now recall the particular objection. It may have related to the proposition of getting more definite information, though I would not be certain as to that.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will say to the Senator that we had in a report, I think, on this bill, a statement or a letter, probably written by Mr. McLaughlin, a special agent, who recommends it very strongly and gives the reason why it should be done.

Mr. President, I do not want to take up the time of the Senate any longer. There are a great many other reasons that I might urge why I think the Northwestern section of the country did not receive its just deserts at the hands of the conferees. I hope the report will be sent back to conference, so that we can be heard and so that justice may be done in the cases I have mentioned.

Mr. BAILEY. And that the Indians will be fairly divided up.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words with reference to amendment No. 99, which proposed to retain district agents in connection with the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma. This was a Senate amendment, as has been suggested by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], and the Senate conferees insisted as strenuously as they knew how to insist upon anything that the provision for district agents should be retained in the bill. I am frank to say that, from my viewpoint, there are many reasons why they should not be retained, and yet, with the Senator from Minnesota, I insisted upon the retention of the Senate amendment.

It is very strongly insisted by those who oppose the retention of these special agents that it is an unwarranted interference on the part of the Government with the affairs of Oklahoma; and when the Senate comes to consider the matter it appears to be absolutely an impeachment of every civil officer of every county where these Indians are located, because it is a practical——

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. Does not the Senator know that the probate judges, under whose jurisdiction the property of these Indians comes, have asked for the retention of these agents?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I know, Mr. President, that there is a diversity of opinion on that subject, even amongst the officials. There are some of the county judges who insist that they ought to be retained for the protection of the rights of the Indians; and, on the other hand, there are some county officials who insist that they ought to be abolished. I know that great wrongs are perpetrated against these Indians by the civilians of Oklahoma, but the same wrongs are perpetrated against them in other States in the Union; and I am not prepared to say that wrongs are not perpetrated against the same helpless people by officials of the Government as well.

So that, when the Senate conferees consented to recede from the Senate amendment proposing the retention of the district agents, they did so because, without receding upon the part of the Senate conferees, there would have been absolutely no chance to reach an agreement; and the matter comes up here now with the report of the conferees in favor of the abolishment of the district-agent system. But even if the agents be abolished, even if the report of the conferees be adopted, there is not any question but that under the provisions of this bill the Indian Bureau or the Secretary of the Interior may utilize $125,000 for the employment of special agents in protecting this particular part of the Indian people, if he so desires.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield further to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the Senator call attention to any provision in this bill making an appropriation of $125,000 which can be used in Oklahoma for district agents? Does not the Senator know that the only increase in the appropriation for this work in other parts of the country was only $20,000?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I call the Senator's attention to page 10 of the appropriation bill, where this provision appears:

For pay of special agents, at $2,000 per annum; for traveling and incidental expenses of such special agents—

And so forth.

I claim, and I think my associate on the conference committee will agree with me, that is broad enough to authorize the expenditure for this purpose.

Mr. CURTIS. In answer to a question asked by me of the acting chairman of the committee, he admitted that it is not.

Mr. CLAPP. Why, Mr. President, I did not understand——

Mr. CURTIS. I appeal to the notes. I asked the Senator if he did not admit that there was no provision for this work, and he said that there was no provision; but he believed that because of the wide range of the language, while it never had been applied to Oklahoma, it might be so applied.

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, certainly. I insist that it may be so used.

Mr. CURTIS. And he also admitted that there was only $20,000 increase in the appropriation.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That matter, I will say to the Senator from Kansas, was discussed by the conferees. It was further suggested by somebody in conference that we should increase the appropriation in the section to which I have just called the attention of the Senator from Kansas, so that it might be large enough to employ district agents, not eo nomine, but as special agents for this particular purpose or any other purpose to which the Government might see fit to assign them. So that, in my opinion, Mr. President, every dollar of that $125,000, appropriated on page 10, if the department sees fit, can be expended, not for the employment of district agents by that name, but for the employment of special agents to do the will of the department in the protection of these or any other Indians.

Mr. CURTIS. Does not the Senator know that the department asked for $105,000 for that work outside of Oklahoma; that the House reduced the amount to $85,000; and that the Senate put it back to $125,000, making only an increase of $20,000 over and above what has been asked by the department for the work outside of Oklahoma?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. But, notwithstanding the recommendations of the department, it seems to me, Mr. President—and I have always so felt—that these special agents might be withdrawn from any State in the Union where they are absolutely not needed for any other purpose than the drawing of their salaries. Let some of these men who have not anything to do in other States be withdrawn from the particular territory to which they are now assigned and put in Oklahoma, where the civil authorities and others claim their services might be used to the benefit and advantage of the Indians. I say that $125,000, notwithstanding the report to which the Senator refers, is ample to be expended for the protection of these Indians in Oklahoma; and I say that, too, in the face of the fact that my associate on the conference committee and myself stood as strenuously as we knew how to stand to retain in this appropriation bill the amount which was asked by the Secretary of the Interior for the employment of these special agents.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. Has the Senator any information that any of the agents employed in connection with Indians outside of Oklahoma have nothing to do?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I did not know this particular question was coming up for discussion, but I do not think it would be very difficult to show or to find it out, if the Senator is anxious to learn by reading some of the reports. I have not, however, any particular case in view right now.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have not heard that they are not busy, and it seems to me to be evident that there are not half enough of them down there to protect the Indians.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is one thing you can always count on absolutely with reference to this department and every department of the Government, and that is, if you ever increase a fund for the purpose of employing agents for any purpose, you never can get it abolished or abandoned without a fight; and so it is here. These special agents have only been added recently to the service of the department.

I think the report of the conferees ought to be sustained; and I say now that, if this bill goes back to the conferees, the same result will follow, because I am satisfied the conferees will never agree on this provision, nor will the House of Representatives ever agree to pass the bill with the special agents retained.

With reference to the other suggestion made by the Senator from North Dakota about the prisoners at Fort Sill, it does seem to me that the position of the Senator is a little bit inconsistent with his own action in reference to this bill. If that is an improper subject of legislation in an appropriation bill, certainly the appropriation for which he has asked of $100,000 for the relief of the Turtle Mountain Indians is not a fit subject for legislation; and yet the Senator had it inserted as an amendment to the appropriation bill—an appropriation of $100,000 for that particular purpose in his State. The Senate conferees insisted that that should be retained, but they could not retain it, and it was eliminated. The Senator seems to have some feeling because the appropriation for his State, which is on all fours with the appropriation for Oklahoma, was eliminated from the bill; but I want to say to the Senator that we tried to keep it in, just as we tried to keep the other Senate amendments in the bill.

I do hope, Mr. President, that in these closing days of the session this conference report may be agreed to by the Senate, if we hope to have any legislation on the subject at all.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, in regard to amendment numbered 114, I think the subject involved in that amendment would justify the calling of an extra session of Congress. It is one of the most radical outrages upon people who are entitled to the special protection of our Government that will be found in history from the beginning.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. I take it the Senator means the manner in which the Indians have been treated, rather than putting the item in the bill?

Mr. HEYBURN. If there was ever any case upon which Congress was justified in legislating upon an appropriation bill or anywhere else where legislation can be maintained, this is the case.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. On the 26th of February I introduced a resolution in the Senate calling for information in regard to the prisoners of war on the Fort Sill Military Reservation. That resolution was referred to the Secretary of War, and I will ask the indulgence of the Senate while I call attention to it, because I have the report of the Secretary of War in response to that resolution. The matter has been called to my attention many times since I have been a Member of this body, and I have endeavored more than once to secure some recognition of the rights of these people.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not know whether the Senator is aware of the fact that the Senate itself has passed a bill at this session embracing the amendment which was agreed on by the conferees.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am aware of that. The amendment and the legislation are both inadequate to the situation.

The resolution asked the Secretary of War to inform the Senate—

First. How many Apache Indians are now held as prisoners of war at the Fort Sill (Oklahoma) Reservation.

Second. How many of said Indians are males and how many are females.

Third. How many of said male Indians are under 40 years of age.

Of course, those could not possibly have taken any part in the disturbance that resulted in the arrest of some of the Indians.

Fourth. How many of said Indians are known, at any time prior to their capture, to have been engaged in hostilities against the United States, or to have committed acts of violence against citizens or residents of the United States.

Fifth. The names, ages, present condition of health, and general conduct of the Indians coming under the terms of the last paragraph.

Sixth. The military necessity, if any, for continuing to hold said Apache Indians as prisoners of war.

Seventh. By what authority the said Apache Indians are now held as prisoners of war, and particularly by what authority those of said Indians who were born in captivity, and who have come of age while still in captivity, are so held.

Now, in response to that inquiry, the Secretary of War reports—and I will only state the salient points, because I am going to ask to print the entire report in connection with my remarks—under date of March 13, 1912—

The PRESIDENT UNITED STATES SENATE.

SIR: In compliance with Senate resolution 232, I have the honor to submit the following information:

First. There are 257 Apache prisoners of war now on the Fort Sill (Okla.) Reservation. Eighteen of this number are reported on the morning reports as scouts.

Second. Of the entire number, 138 are males and 119 females.

Third. Of the said male Indians, 98 are under 40 years of age.

Those Indians could not possibly have taken part in the war, if you may term it such, that resulted in their capture.

Fourth. Thirty of the said Indians are known to have been engaged in hostilities against the United States or to have committed acts of violence against citizens or residents thereof.

That is, 30 out of 257 prisoners of war, leaving 227 Indians held in military slavery who are not charged with ever having committed any act of violence or of having been associated with those who did.

Fifth. The following are the names, ages, present condition of health, and general conduct of the Indians coming under the terms of the last paragraph.

That is, every one of the 30 Indians who are known to have participated in acts of violence with Geronimo is recorded with conduct "fair" or "better." Not a single one of them is reported as having been guilty of any misconduct during his imprisonment. They submitted to the capture. They were taken as prisoners of war. Their wives were permitted to go with them into captivity, and they have been held there for 26 years—26 years of captivity, during which time 227 of them, never charged with the violation of law or good order, have been held in military slavery.

It is a blot upon our system of dealing with the Indians or upon our system in all respects that the Government of the United States should have held these Indians in captivity. To rear families in captivity, children born in captivity, without even the status of an Indian on a reservation, is, I say, discreditable to our Government, and I am glad to have the opportunity of calling attention to this outrage perpetrated in the name of law. Even the children born of these parents and of sons and daughters of these parents are held to be prisoners of war, deprived of every and all rights; and I care not whether it stretches the rule against legislation on appropriation bills or not the provision should have gone further than to request that the Secretary of the Interior shall report to Congress. It affords no present relief to them. We need no further reports than that from the Secretary of War. They are not under the control or supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of the Interior in the performance of no duty could give Congress this information except by hearsay.

My purpose in introducing the resolution in February was to have this information in order that Congress might at the earliest possible day afford relief—not to ask or request information. That is futile. Future generations of Indians may be born in captivity growing out of this condition before the request is complied with.

The request for information promises no relief to these Indians. It promises no legislation that will restore them even to the rights of an Indian, much less to the rights of citizens of the United States. Many of their tribe have been invested with citizenship and have gone on with the march of improvement and progress that has distinguished these Indians, and yet we have these helpless children held as prisoners of war, without any right even in the courts of the land, because a prisoner of war has no rights except such as are granted by the commandant of the post or through the medium of the War Department of the United States. Does it not appeal to Senators that we should afford them relief? While the proposed legislation accomplishes nothing, yet it promises to lay the foundation for the consideration of this question.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield.

Mr. FALL. The proposed legislation accomplishes this: That among these Indians, or of all these Indians, those who choose shall be removed to the Mescalero Agency, in Otero County, N. Mex., which happens to be my own home county; and there are yet, I should like to say to the Senators, the children of American citizens—quiet, peaceable American citizens—a few children living in that country, sons and daughters of those American citizens who were murdered by these very Indians whom it is now proposed to send back to Otero County, N. Mex.

I will say, frankly, I have the utmost sympathy with these Indians, so long as they are kept at Fort Sill or somewhere else. I have not any sympathy for the Indians, or the innocent children of those Indians, if they are to be sent back among the people whom they murdered.

We fought there for years, and I will say to the Senator now that there is over a million dollars of indebtedness outstanding in New Mexico which has never been paid to the citizens of New Mexico, when the United States would not or could not send troops there to round up these Indians to run them out of New Mexico and into old Mexico; and a dirtier band of murderers never lived on the face of the earth than these Indians under Geronimo, for whom the Senator from Idaho is expressing so much sympathy.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am expressing no sympathy for that murdering Indian chief, and I never had any; and I stood on the picket line to protect citizens of a part of this country against those Indians, and I feel just as deeply as can the Senator on that question. But is there in this earth to-day a Government that punishes the children for the sins of the father? None. I would keep those 30 men in military prison where they are now, I would continue to punish those 30 men who engaged in hostilities against the country, but I would not punish the women and the children and the generations which have succeeded them. There is no Senator in this body who has felt or feels more strongly against the murdering, roving band of Indians in that country than I do; but I would not carry my feelings to the extent of punishing, disfranchising, depriving the children and the grandchildren—and many of them are the grandchildren of those men—of the rights that are given to others in like condition.

Mr. FALL. Then I understand that the Senator is in accord with myself in opposing the conference provision, sending these Indians back to New Mexico, including these 30 murderers he speaks of?

Mr. HEYBURN. No. I am not in sympathy with any proposition that would contemplate the sending back into freedom of those murdering Indians now in captivity, but I would not continue to hold as prisoners of war their children and their grandchildren or their wives, and it is on behalf of those generations that I speak.

Mr. FALL. In interrupting the Senator I was speaking to the bill under consideration. So far as concerns the general proposition, I am in thorough accord with him, and I will vote just as much as he will to put these people—turn them loose in Idaho, if he wants them there—to take care of them there or somewhere else, but I do not want these men who are still alive, who committed every possible depredation with the people right where I live, some of them the same men now living, to be sent back there within 10 miles of where they committed these depredations. Now, so far as the children and the grandchildren are concerned, all right.

Mr. HEYBURN. This does not propose to send them back. It proposes to institute an inquiry as to whether or not they are——

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. I have it before me and I am going to read it.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator from Idaho would relieve himself of some embarrassment if he would let me call attention——

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not embarrassed, and I do not know that I am about to be.

Mr. CLAPP. I know nothing that could embarrass the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. Probably not.

Mr. CLAPP. He is talking to an amendment put into the bill by the Senate, which was receded from, while the provision agreed to in conference, which is now before the Senate, does authorize the removal of as many of these Indians as care to leave the Fort Sill Reservation.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am speaking to the matter before the Senate. I am perfectly well aware of the action taken in conference. I was addressing my remarks to the proposition contained in the one hundred and fourteenth amendment——

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. GORE. I desire to ask the Senator from New Mexico to whom that country of which he speaks belonged? I should like to ask the Senator if it did not belong to those same Indians?

Mr. FALL. No, sir.

Mr. GORE. How were they divested of title?

Mr. FALL. They never had any.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not care to go into the consideration of the character of the Indian tenures. I have rather pronounced views in regard to that question. My purpose was to call the attention of the Senate and the country to the outrage that is being perpetrated, not upon the 30 men who were guilty of violations of the law of the land and the law of civilization, but to the children and grandchildren of those people; and I know of no principle in this Government that will justify it. Now, whether you are going to send them back into that neighborhood or not, or any part of them, does not come within the scope of the consideration that I rose to give to this question. It is clear that whatever you may do with the 30 men who were involved in war against our Government, there is no reason on earth for retaining these innocent person in captivity.

Of course there is no amendment to be proposed in the matter. Under the rules of the Senate there is nothing to do in this hour except to awaken a conscience in Senators so that when this question is to be dealt with responsibly they will not be unadvised. My purpose in introducing the resolution in February last was that we might have these facts and that this outrage might not be continued. I am familiar with the sentiment that pervades Indian countries in regard to the Indians. Many people living in those countries carry forward the hatred that was engendered by the massacres of life and the destruction of property at the hands of these Indians. I have felt myself impelled by those sentiments at times, but I am not proposing to discuss the rights of those sturdy men. Keep them prisoners, if you please, but do not extend the punishment to the innocent generation. I am not one of those who believe that all Indians except dead Indians are bad Indians. I have never indorsed that doctrine. I have seen something of Indians and of Indian warfare, and I have had my blood stirred very deeply against those people because of their outrages. But I have never been carried beyond the point of that higher human sentiment that would keep the white man's record as clean as he would have the Indians keep theirs. The murder of whites by these Indians should not be the means of degrading the white people to the level of those murderers.

Mr. President, I am glad to have had the opportunity to call attention to this condition of affairs, so that if the conscience of Congress awakens, it will be in a frame of mind to deal fairly with them.

I ask that the report of the Secretary of War, which is Document No. 432, be incorporated in the RECORD, and, preceding it, that the resolution to which the report is a response be incorporated in the RECORD in connection with my remarks on this subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with the following information:

First. How many Apache Indians are now held as prisoners of war at the Fort Sill (Okla.) Reservation.

Second. How many of said Indians are males and how many are females.

Third. How many of said male Indians are under 40 years of age.

Fourth. How many of said Indians are known, at any time prior to their capture, to have been engaged in hostilities against the United States, or to have committed acts of violence against citizens or residents of the United States.

Fifth. The names, ages, present condition of health, and general conduct of the Indians coming under the terms of the last paragraph.

Sixth. The military necessity, if any, for continuing to hold said Apache Indians as prisoners of war.

Seventh. By what authority the said Apache Indians are now held as prisoners of war, and particularly by what authority those of said Indians who were born in captivity, and who have come of age while still in captivity, are so held.

The report of the Secretary of War is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 13, 1912.

The PRESIDENT UNITED STATES SENATE.

SIR: In compliance with Senate resolution 232, I have the honor to submit the following information:

First. There are 257 Apache prisoners of war now on the Fort Sill (Okla.) Reservation. Eighteen of this number are reported on the morning reports as scouts.

Second. Of the entire number, 138 are males and 119 females.

Third. Of the said male Indians, 98 are under 40 years of age.

Fourth. Thirty of the said Indians are known to have been engaged in hostilities against the United States or to have committed acts of violence against citizens or residents thereof.

Fifth. The following are the names, ages, present condition of health, and general conduct of the Indians coming under the terms of the last paragraph:

"Tiss-nolth-tos, age 47; health good; conduct fair.
"Calvin Zhonne, age 47; health fair; conduct fair.
"Leon Ferico, age 60; health fair; conduct fair.
"Beche, age 75; health fair; conduct fair.
"Yar-no-zha, age 47; health good; conduct fair.
"Christian Noiche, age 56; health fair; conduct has been very good for about a year past."

The above six surrendered with Geronimo in 1886.

"Too-is-gah, age 51; health good; conduct fair.
"Jasper Kanseah, age 39; health good; conduct good.
"Kay-dah-Zinne, age 51; health good; conduct fair.
"Nah-do-Zinne, age 51; health good; conduct fair.
"Kay-lh-tah, age 51; health good; conduct fair.
"Mithlo, age 48; health good; conduct good.
"Ky-zah, age 48; health good; conduct fair.
"Tah-ni-toe, age 57; health good; conduct fair.
"Tse-de-Kisen, age 53; health good; conduct fair.
"Martine, age 54; health good; conduct fair.
"Binday, age 54; health good; conduct good.
"Fatty, age 54; health good; conduct fair.
"Dexter Loco, age 48; health good; conduct good.
"Harold Dick, age 69; health good; conduct fair.
"Paul Gey-dil-Kon, age 52; health good; conduct fair.
"Nah-nal-Zhuggie, age 51; health good; conduct fair.
"José, age 53; health good; conduct fair.
"Kah-ah-te-nai, age 51; health good; conduct fair.
"Coonie, age 56; health good; conduct good.
"As-toy-eh, age 50; health good; conduct fair.
"Tzozonna, age 52; health good; conduct fair.
"Jason Betzinez, age 51; health good; conduct good.
"Chiracahua Tom, age 62; health good; conduct fair.
"Chatto, age 58; health good; conduct fair."

Due to the proximity of a town, which makes it exceedingly easy for these Indians to obtain intoxicants, it is believed that many of them are addicted to drink. The condition of these Indians would undoubtedly be improved by removing them to a reservation where this craving for drink could not easily be satisfied.

Sixth. There is no military necessity for continuing to hold these Apache Indians as prisoners of war if provision can be made for their location elsewhere than on the Fort Sill Reservation, and if the Indians desire to remove therefrom.

Seventh. While these Indians were originally taken charge of as prisoners of war, the necessity for holding them as such has long since terminated, and they have, in fact, been regarded as being under the tutelage and control of the War Department by reason of their establishment on the Fort Sill Reservation; that considerations of humanity required that when the adult males were originally taken charge of as prisoners of war the women and children should be allowed to accompany them and be subsisted with them; that the lack of provision elsewhere for these Indians has made it necessary to continue this guardianship and control over the prisoners who have come of age since the original surrender, as well as over those who have been born since that time; and that the establishment of these Indians on the reservation has been recognized by Congress in the sundry civil act of June 28, 1902 (32 Stat., 467), "for the support and maintenance of the Apache prisoners of war permanently established at Fort Sill, Okla., under control of the War Department"; and by similar provision made in the urgent deficiency act of February 18, 1904 (33 Stat., 26).

Inclosed is a memorandum by the Judge Advocate General giving a history of the Apache prisoners of war since their surrender in 1886 and their establishment upon the Fort Sill Reservation.

Very respectfully,

H. L. STIMSON,
Secretary of War.

THE APACHE PRISONERS OF WAR AT FORT SILL.

[Memorandum by the Judge Advocate General.]

The band of Apache Indians who were established on the military reservation at Fort Sill in 1894 had been engaged for many years prior to 1886 in acts of hostility against the people of the United States. These acts were terminated by their surrender to the military authorities near Fort Bowie, Ariz., in September, 1886. With a view to their protection they were sent to San Antonio, Tex., where they remained for a time until some permanent arrangement could be made for their care and protection. They were finally located at Fort Marion, Fla., where they remained for a number of years. As Fort Marion was found to be an unsuitable place they were subsequently removed to Mount Vernon Barracks, Ala.

As the climate at Fort Marion and Mount Vernon Barracks was quite different from that to which they had been accustomed in South Carolina, Arizona, and northern Mexico, disease from which they had theretofore been immune crept in among them, and upon full consideration of the situation by the Secretary of War they were permanently established on the Fort Sill Military Reservation in 1894.

As these Indians had been engaged in the commission of hostile acts for a number of years they were regarded at their surrender as occupying the status of prisoners of war and were subsisted and maintained as such. As the hostilities in which they had taken part have long ceased to exist, their temporary status as prisoners of war terminated, and they have since been regarded as a band of dependent Indians held in custody of the United States and under the special protection and control of the War Department. This status, as to some of its essential incidents, continues to exist.

The present military reservation at Fort Sill was originally set apart as an Indian reservation for the use and benefit of the Wichita, Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians. On October 7, 1871, a tract of 23,048 acres was set apart by Executive order as a military reservation. After the removal of the Apaches to the Fort Sill Reservation in 1894 it was found that some additional land was necessary for their accommodation, and a tract of 26,987 acres was added to that reservation by Executive order dated February 26, 1897 (G. O. 14, A. G. O., Mar. 15, 1897). This addition is in two parcels of about equal size, lying at the eastern and western extremities of the original reservation, and for that reason is known as the "eastern and western addition" to the military reservation. Subsequently two smaller tracts, of 893 and 372 acres, respectively, were added to the reservation, with a view to adjust its boundaries to the existing public-land system; this was accomplished in Executive orders dated September 20, 1901, and August 29, 1907, so that the present acreage is 51,292 acres. These constitute the "northern and southern addition" to the reservation and may be dismissed from further consideration.

The legislation referred to in your memorandum of the 16th instant will now be considered. The attention of Congress was first drawn to the location of the Apaches when the Army appropriation act was undergoing consideration in 1894; as a result of such consideration the following enactment was adopted:

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to remove to such military reservation or reservations as he may select the Indian prisoners of war now confined at Mount Vernon Barracks, Ala., and for the purposes of the erection of buildings, purchase of draft animals, stock, necessary farming tools, seeds, household utensils, and other articles needed for said Indians and generally for their support and civilization, the sum of $15,000 is hereby appropriated, in addition to the sums herein appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War." (Act of Aug. 6, 1894; 28 Stat. L., 238.)

The act of February 12, 1895, contained the following clause:

"Maintenance and support of the Apache Indian prisoners of war, removed from Mount Vernon Barracks, Ala., to military reservations in compliance with the provisions of the Army act approved August 6, 1894, and for the purposes of the erection of buildings, purchase of draft animals, stock, necessary farming tools, seeds, household utensils, and all other necessary articles absolutely needed for their support and civilization, in addition to the sums herein appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $10,000." (Act of Feb. 12, 1895; 28 Stat. L., 658.)

The act of March 16, 1896, contained the following provision:

"Maintenance and support of the Apache prisoners of war at Fort Sill, Okla., and for the purpose of the erection of buildings, purchase of stock, necessary farming tools, seeds, household utensils, and other necessary articles and expenses absolutely needed for their support and civilization, in addition to the sums herein appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $7,500." (Act of Mar. 16, 1896; 29 Stat. L., 64.)

The sundry civil act of June 28, 1902, contains the following requirement:

"Establishment of Apache prisoners at Fort Sill, Okla.: For the erection of buildings and repairs of same, purchase of draft animals and live stock for breeding purposes, farm and household utensils, blacksmith and wheelwright tools and repairs to same, and all other necessary articles absolutely needed for the support and maintenance of the Apache prisoners of war permanently established at Fort Sill, Okla., under control of the War Department, $4,000." (Act of June 28, 1902; 32 Stat. L., 467.)

Similar provision was made in the urgent deficiency act of February 18, 1904 (33 Stat. L., 26).

It was the purpose of the department in establishing the additional reservation in 1897 to furnish accommodations for the Apache prisoners of war. To that end Capt. Hugh L. Scott, Seventh Cavalry, was instructed to confer with the Kiowa and Comanche Indians with a view to obtain their consent to the establishment of the Apaches on an extension of the military reservation at Fort Sill and in their immediate vicinity. Capt. Scott was entirely successful in this undertaking, and on February 20, 1897, reported to the department that the Kiowas and Comanches were willing that the Apache prisoners from Mount Vernon should be located on an addition to the military reservation at Fort Sill. Whereupon, by an appropriate Executive order, dated February 26, 1897, the parcels constituting the "eastern and western additions" were set apart as a military reservation.

In concluding this branch of the subject it is proper to say that the eastern and western additions constitute a military reservation, charged with a use in behalf of the Apache prisoners of war; this is made clear by the language used in the Executive order in the operation of which the reservation was extended, in which it was said that the lands specified in the order were reserved "for exclusive use for military purposes, and for the permanent location thereon of the Apache prisoners of war," and the agreement with the Kiowa, Comanche, and Eastern Apaches, which was entered into by Capt. Scott, in the agreement which is referred to in the memorandum of the Chief of Staff, dated December 10, 1910.

It will be noted that the clause of legislation last above cited (supra, p. 3) contains the declaration that the Apache prisoners had been "permanently established at Fort Sill, Okla., under control of the War Department." This represents the final outcome of several executive and legislative acts had in pursuance of a formal agreement with the Apache Indians themselves, and with the Kiowa and Comanches, in whose territory they were to be established. It is true that the agreement was not a "treaty" in the sense in which that term is used in the Constitution, but it was a formal obligation entered into with bands of Indians having diverse and, to some extent, conflicting interests which were finally adjusted by the War Department, and, as so adjusted, were expressly recognized by Congress in an act of constitutional legislation.

The result has been, in the opinion of this office, to create a permanent status for the Apache Indians in the Fort Sill Reservation, which can only be removed, as it was created, with the consent of the Indians and the approval of Congress.

As the condition of fact, as established by executive and legislative action, has not changed, it is believed that an attempt to open any portion of the reservation for purposes of the allotment of its lands in severalty would be inexpedient at this time, and legislation to that end should not be favorably recommended to Congress.

Since the eastern and western additions to the original military reservation were made, it has been found that the enlarged reservation is in the highest degree necessary for military purposes in the training and instruction of the troops, especially of the Field Artillery, and in the conduct of joint and separate camps of maneuver for practical instruction in field service. If the Fort Sill Reservation, or any portion of it, were to be abandoned, or diverted to any other use, the training and efficiency of the troops would suffer, and it would be found necessary to acquire a tract of equal size, at a very considerable expense, for training and maneuver purposes.

It is therefore recommended that the military reservation, as added to since the date of its original establishment, continue in the use to which it was assigned in the several Executive orders which created it; that the Apache prisoners be maintained there until a suitable and convenient occasion presents itself for their removal to another reservation, when the entire matter should be presented to Congress, with a view to the transfer of the Apache prisoners, with their consent, to another reservation, where they can be furnished with accommodations equal to those which they now enjoy in the operation of the legislation hereinbefore cited.

Very respectfully,

GEO. B. DAVIS,
Judge Advocate General.

DECEMBER 23, 1910.

Mr. FALL. Before the Senator from Idaho takes his seat, I should like to say that I hold in my hand a copy of the same report, and I notice that this little band of Indians, instead of being incarcerated in cells, have had allotted to them first, in 1871, a tract of 23,048 acres, and next, in 1897, a tract of 26,987 acres. So they have a tract of 50,000 acres of land around Fort Sill. What is the purpose of removing them from these 50,000 acres around Fort Sill to take them somewhere else and give them land somewhere else? They are not incarcerated.

Mr. HEYBURN. They have no land. Congress enlarged the military reservation in order that these people might be accommodated without infringing upon the rights and the convenience of those already entitled to occupy that military reservation. The enlargement of the reservation was made necessary by the placing of these Indians upon it, in order that they might be separated from and kept apart from others occupying it under ordinary conditions.

Mr. FALL rose.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have the report, the same report the Senator has.

Mr. FALL. Yes; I so understood.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. FALL. I simply wanted to know whether we had the same report and whether from this report the Senator from Idaho gathered that these Indians were harshly treated or incarcerated in some cells.

Mr. HEYBURN. I made no suggestion that they were incarcerated in cells. I have advised myself about the conditions of life existing among these Indians. They are prisoners of war; they have no rights; they have no property rights; they have no allotments or right of allotment—and I am now not referring to the 30 men, but I am referring to the others; and they have no rights such as are enjoyed by other Indians. The enlargement of the military reservation did not inure to the benefit or comfort of those Indians. The Senator certainly would not advocate the perpetual incarceration of these people as prisoners of war.

Mr. FALL. Shall I answer?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; would the Senator advocate that?

Mr. FALL. Certainly not; but the report states that the enlargement of the reservation was for the accommodation of these Indians.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. You build additional cells to a jail to accommodate additional prisoners. It was not for the benefit of the Indians, but it was to enable them to be more securely imprisoned.

Mr. FALL. I admit that I can not understand—I can usually fully appreciate the Senator's arguments, because he is always lucid, but upon this occasion I will admit I can not understand exactly—how the enlargement of the military reservation by the addition of something like 30,000 acres for the purpose of accommodating these Indians serves simply as would the addition of cells to a jail.

Mr. HEYBURN. It simply provides additional grounds for their imprisonment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, in my remarks I referred, I think, to amendment No. 105 as relating to some school. Amendment No. 105 is for the construction of a sanitary sewage system in the Platt National Park, Okla., to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $35,000. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota what became of that amendment?

Mr. CLAPP. Amendment No. 105?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is on page 43. I suppose I could find it myself if I had the report handy here.

Mr. CLAPP. It was agreed to on condition that the city furnish an equal amount.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to ask the Senator how that becomes an Indian matter? I understand, in order to give to the town of Sulphur a sewer system, we appropriate $35,000. How do the Indians get the benefit of that?

Mr. CLAPP. It is difficult to carry all these matters in one's head. As I recall it, the reservation there makes it necessary for the town or city to extend the sewers some considerable distance. Otherwise, it would throw the sewage upon the Government reservation.

Mr. McCUMBER. It looks to me as though it ought never to have been passed by the Senate. In other words, here is a city without a good outlet for the sewage, and not having it, it asks the Government to appropriate $35,000 to make one for it, because it happens to join an Indian reservation.

Mr. CLAPP. I submit it is rather late to raise that question here.

Mr. McCUMBER. I admit it is late, but it is not too late to get some information.

Mr. CLAPP. The amendment passed the Senate, and when we got into conference it was made known that the Government reservation lies below where the sewage would naturally and economically be thrown, and it would carry the sewage so as to interfere with the use of the reservation, and the Senate amendment for $35,000 was cut in two on the ground that the city or town—and I forget whether it is an incorporated city or not—should contribute an equal amount.

Mr. McCUMBER. First, the city has no right to empty its sewage on an Indian reservation. It has no legal authority to do so; but it does so, and then the Government is called upon to expend $35,000 for the benefit of the city. Am I right in that?

Mr. CLAPP. No. I would not admit the city had no right. My impression is, so far as legal right goes, the city sewage could be put into the stream, but it would materially interfere with the use of the reservation; and, as a matter of justice between the city and the Federal Government—the use of the sewer on the part of the city and the use of the reservation on the part of the Government—it was thought only fair and best that each should bear its share of the burden of carrying the sewage around a bend in the stream. I may not have the terms just exactly right, but that is the situation.

Mr. McCUMBER. Here in this bill was $35,000. In the same bill there was added $25,000 for a hospital and quite an important school where there is no hospital. The $35,000 was for the benefit really of a city that under ordinary circumstances is supposed to take care of its own sewage. I was going to ask the Senator candidly, even though it was thought necessary for the Government to build a sewerage system, or a portion of it, for the city of Sulphur, in the State of Oklahoma, if he does not think that that Indian school was as much entitled to the hospital as this city was to the sewerage system, and why it was necessary, in order that Sulphur might have a sewerage system at the expense of the Government and still have a bill that would be economical, that we should take from this school the proposed hospital?

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator has asked practically two questions. One of them I can answer very readily, and, I think, as to the other the Senator's experience in committee in handling Senate amendments against House conferees will answer for itself. I think the hospital at Wahpeton is infinitely more important. More than that, while Wahpeton is not in the State I live in, I have always felt, owing to the proximity of the Wahpeton school and the possibilities there for agricultural development, that it is one of the few schools of which we should make a great institution for the Indians. I have always favored most liberal appropriations for the Wahpeton school.

Mr. McCUMBER. I can vouch for what the Senator states now.

Mr. CLAPP. We could keep one; and the other is a very simple proposition. They were both put in by the Senate, and we would keep them both in if the House conferees would agree to it. The fact that the House conferees agreed in a modified form to amendment 105, cutting it in two and making the city pay half, was no reason why we should have rejected amendment 105. On the other hand, we were not able to retain the other amendment. That answers the second question.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I simply want to give notice that I will not ask the Senate to consider the constitutional amendment this afternoon. It is quite apparent that there is very much less than a quorum here, and I would not consider it fair to begin the consideration of that important matter under existing conditions. Therefore I will assume that it will come up at its regular time on Monday. I give that notice so that Senators may know nothing will be done this afternoon upon the joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the Senator that in the opinion of the Chair, unless some agreement is reached, and the matter now under consideration goes over, it will become the unfinished business. Perhaps not, however, as it was simply taken up by consent.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not so regard it, because I asked that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside in order that the conference report might be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the unfinished business will come up automatically on Monday.

Mr. LODGE. At 12 o'clock.

Mr. PAGE. I shall be very glad to do all I can to promote the happiness of my good friend the Senator from Iowa, but I want to say to him now that I shall feel justified on Monday next at 4 o'clock, or half past 4, or 5 o'clock, in asking that Senate bill No. 3 be made the unfinished business, unless the consideration of the joint resolution the Senator has in charge shall before that time be concluded.

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course I can not in any way restrict the movements of my friend the Senator from Vermont. I would gladly go on with the constitutional amendment this afternoon, but I feel that it would be unfair. If he insists, however, I will withdraw the notice I have just given and we will ascertain whether we can go on with the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report upon the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. CLAPP. I ask the Senator from Oklahoma to yield for a few moments. The situation here is apparent. If it is within the rule, I will yield temporarily to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to present a conference report which I understand will not require any discussion.

Mr. CUMMINS. I could not myself consent to that if it leads to any discussion.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not think it will lead to discussion. If it does lead to any discussion——

Mr. CLAPP. I will myself object if it leads to any discussion, because I want to finish the conference report now before the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY FOR ALASKA.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 38) to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 5, 6, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 41, 42, 43, 46, 47, 49, 50, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 59, 60, 62, 63.

KNUTE NELSON,
GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

H. D. FLOOD,
W. C. HOUSTON,
W. W. WEDEMEYER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider——

Mr. CLAPP. No; Mr. President, I can not consent to that at this time. I yielded for a conference report that would not lead to debate.

Mr. SWANSON. I thought that the conference report was temporarily laid aside and that the Senate might proceed——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] is recognized.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Clapp	Jones	Simmons
Bacon	Cullom	La Follette	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Cummins	Lodge	Smith, Md.
Borah	Curtis	McCumber	Smith, Mich.
Bourne	Dillingham	McLean	Stone
Brandegee	Fall	Martine, N. J.	Swanson
Bristow	Fletcher	Massey	Thornton
Burnham	Gallinger	Nelson	Townsend
Catron	Gore	Page	Wetmore
Chamberlain	Heyburn	Pomerene	Williams
Chilton	Johnston, Ala.	Sanders

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-three Senators have answered to their names, not a quorum.

Mr. TILLMAN entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll of absentees will be called.

Mr. WARREN and Mr. WORKS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names—not a quorum.

Mr. CLAPP. I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry. It is, whether, in the absence of a quorum, in making a motion to adjourn, I can couple with it——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to adjourn is in order, or to take action to compel the attendance of a quorum; that is all.

Mr. CLAPP. Could there be coupled with that motion the hour to which we shall adjourn on Monday?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would think so.

Mr. CLAPP. Then, unless some Senators want to try to get a quorum, I move that the Senate adjourn until 10 o'clock on Monday morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Ten o'clock is the regular hour of meeting, and it is unnecessary to specify that hour.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, August 19, 1912, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, August 17, 1912.

The House met at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty One, through whose gracious providence we have been brought to the present moment, we give Thee hearty thanks for all the rich and varied blessings of life. That we may use them wisely, define, we beseech Thee, day by day the pathway to duty, and impart unto us the desire, the strength, the fortitude to walk therein, that we may merit, moment by moment, Thine approbation; and Thine be the praise, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MEMORIAL SERVICES FOR THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE FOSTER OF VERMONT.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the third Sunday in January, 1913, there be services in memory of Hon. DAVID J. FOSTER, late a Representative from Vermont.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent that on the third Sunday in January, 1913, memorial services be held for the late Hon. DAVID J. FOSTER, of Vermont. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AMERICAN REFUGEES FROM MEXICO.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration Senate joint resolution 133, appropriating $20,000 for subsistence of American citizens who have fled from Mexico.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk reported Senate joint resolution 133, appropriating the sum of $20,000, out of money appropriated by Senate joint resolution No. 129, for subsistence of American citizens now in Arizona fleeing from threatened danger in the Republic of Mexico, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That out of the money appropriated by Senate joint resolution No. 129, providing transportation for American citizens fleeing from threatened danger in the Republic of Mexico, the sum of $20,000 is hereby appropriated for the subsistence of such American citizens as are now in Arizona, with no home except in the Republic of Mexico and from which they have been driven to the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I understood that the gentleman intends to offer a substitute, which I should like to have reported.

Mr. HAYDEN. I intend to offer a substitute. I ask first to have a short letter from the Secretary of War read from the Clerk's desk, to explain the necessity for the passage of this joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 15, 1912.

Hon. CARL HAYDEN, M. C.,
Room 406, House Office Building, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HAYDEN: With reference to providing $20,000 for the subsistence of such American citizens fleeing from threatened danger in the Republic of Mexico, who are now in Arizona:

In my opinion this appropriation should be made. Congress will probably adjourn in the near future, and the amount of money now available for the purpose of providing subsistence for these refugees is small, probably not over eight or ten thousand dollars remaining unencumbered from the funds appropriated by joint resolution No. 127, and the number of refugees is constantly increasing.

I would suggest, however, that Senate joint resolution No. 133 be so drawn as to include not only Arizona, but California and New Mexico, and to include not only the refugees who are now in these areas, but those who may arrive in the near future.

Very sincerely, yours,

H. L. STIMSON, Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman a substitute?

Mr. HAYDEN. I offer the substitute which I send to the Clerk's desk. I believe that this substitute fully complies with all of the recommendations of the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the substitute.

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That out of the money appropriated by Senate joint resolution 129 (public resolution No. 49) providing for transportation for American citizens fleeing from threatened danger in the Republic of Mexico there may be expended, until December 10, 1912, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, not to exceed $20,000 for the subsistence of American citizens who shall have fled or who may hereafter flee from the Republic of Mexico into the States of the United States bordering on the Republic of Mexico and who are now and who may hereafter be unable to pay for their own subsistence."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, it has been estimated, and I believe conservatively, that 25,000 American citizens have been compelled to leave the Republic of Mexico since the beginning of the insurrection against President Diaz. Most of our citizens who have gone into Mexico have been young unmarried men, who have sought employment in the mines or with the railroads. With no family ties to bind them to the country and with no property to be sacrificed, it has been easy for them to leave the Republic whenever the conditions surrounding their employment became unsatisfactory. All they had to do was to leave their work and return to the United States. And they have returned by thousands, passing almost unnoticed across the border to find employment in their own country.

But the people for whose relief this resolution is to be passed are not so fortunate. This resolution will relieve the distress of women and children and old men who have been driven from their homes in the agricultural colonies that have been established in Mexico by the Mormon Church.

To those of you, if there be any among the membership of the House, who, perhaps, feel less sympathy for these unfortunate refugees because they believe in Mormonism, I have this to say: The Mormon Church is an American religious institution. The founders of that faith were native Americans, from the States of New York, Ohio, Illinois, and Missouri. Many of them were direct descendants of men who fought for freedom in the American Revolution. When, as the result of religious persecution, they were compelled to make the long migration to Utah, they found that country a wilderness, and they have made of it a fruitful land. However we may disagree with them over the tenets of their faith, no one can deny that the Mormon people are possessed of the homely virtues of honesty, industry, and frugality, which make the sum of good citizenship.

When I was a small boy the first Mormon colonists came from Utah into the Arizona valley where I was born. They were worn from their long journey and pitifully poor. They settled upon a tract of desert land and now nowhere can be found more productive farms than can be seen to-day in that part of the Salt River Valley. Other colonies were afterwards established in the Gila Valley and in northern Arizona. The settlers have prospered with the years, and they now constitute a substantial element in the population of Arizona.

A number of those whom I knew as a boy afterwards moved into Mexico when the colonies were founded there. Again, as true American pioneers, they went into a wild country and subdued the land. A large area was purchased from the Government of Mexico, and it was agreed in the contract that the settlers should retain their American citizenship. There are now six Mormon colonies in the Mexican States of Chihuahua and Sonora, numbering 10,000 people, and they have created agricultural wealth aggregating fully $10,000,000. They have been prosperous and contented, and Mexico is richer because they have reclaimed and made productive that part of the Republic.

The Mormon people have taken no part in the various Mexican revolutions. They have stayed at home cultivating their fields. Now war has burst upon them, and they have been forced to flee to the United States, but not one of them wishes to remain away from the homes that they have left in Mexico. Their supreme desire is that peace may soon come, so that they may return to their deserted farms and gather the crops that were left ripening in the fields.

They are of our own flesh and blood and are entitled to all the sympathy and assistance that should be given by this Government whenever American citizens are in distress.

Mr. Speaker, under the permission given me to extend my remarks, I will ask to have printed in the RECORD certain items that I have taken from the Arizona newspapers. The following interview appeared in the Bisbee Daily Review of August 1, 1912:

That Mormons were driven out of the Chihuahua colonies like cattle—the sick and the well, the old and the young—is the statement of Mrs. E. F. Wood, of Colonia Juarez, who is in the city as the guest of the family of her brother-in-law, Parley T. McRae, on Youngblood Hill. When wagon after wagon full of women and children were driven to the railroad at Pearson and the wagons returned empty to the colony by one man "it reminded one of a hearse returning after a funeral," says Mrs. Wood. "I do not think that we will ever go back to our homes unless the United States intervenes and establishes a lasting peace."

It was on Sunday morning that President Romney of the Mormon Church in Chihuahua was notified by rebel leaders that they must leave the country or accept the consequences; that unless they got out "the men would be killed and the women would be used."

On that morning the rebels marched into Colonia Dublan and planted a cannon in front of the church door, demanding that all guns and ammunition be immediately surrendered.

Women and children were hauled in wagons from the colonies to the railroad at Pearson. "They were packed in box cars like cattle," said Mrs. Wood, "and one woman that I know of was taken from her bed in a critical condition and rushed off to the train. On the train the supply of water gave out before we reached El Paso and a number of women fainted. I shall never forget the scene as we left Pearson. Women and children were crying on every side and drunken rebels were cursing us, using the most insulting language.

"No one brought out more than their clothes and a few things that they could carry in their hands," said Mrs. Wood, "and we could sell nothing because there was no one to buy.

"At the depot," Mrs. Wood continued, "a band of several rebels caught a boy and searched him for money. He was thrown to the floor and a sword's point was placed at his breast and he was told that unless he gave them money he would be killed. He refused to give in, but, again adding insult to injury, as is their custom, they made him search his sweetheart, who was with him."

The Mormons have six colonies in Sonora. In Colonia Dublan and Colonia Juarez there were about 1,000 women and children each, about 800 in Colonia Garcia, about the same number in Colonia Pacheco and Colonia Chucachuca, and 200 in Colonia Guadalupe. The women and children are being brought out as fast as possible, but the men will stay at the colonies as long as there is any hope of holding peaceably or selling their farms and homes. E. F. Wood, who is the largest planter at Colonia Juarez, said to Mrs. Wood before she left that he would stay at the colony "as long as the last dog stayed."

On the broad acres of the Mormon farms in the Chihuahua colonies thousands of trees are laden with luscious fruit, melons ripened on thousands of vines, and alfalfa is just ready for the harvest. Hundreds of acres of vegetables were left ungathered. This is one of the phases of the material loss that the exiled Mormons suffered.

This special dispatch which appeared in the Arizona Democrat of Phoenix, on August 1, gives an account of the condition of the refugees on their arrival in El Paso, Tex.:

Out in an old abandoned lumber shed, on Magoffin Avenue, between Cotton Avenue and the Texas & Pacific Railway tracks, nearly 300 American women and children are living until better quarters can be procured for them. They are exiles. They have been driven from their homes in the American farming colonies around Casas Grandes through fear of the brutality and wantonness of the red flag rebels that infest the western portion of the State of Chihuahua. They have come to the United States to escape the "patriotic" tendencies of the "army of liberty"—Orozco's army. It is not the fear of death that has driven them from their farms and their little ranches, for these women, with their work-worn hands, are possessed of a higher courage than most women that live in cities; but it is the fear of "something" worse than death itself—the evil passions of the "patriots" that are "fighting for liberty," and looting homes at the same time, around Casas Grandes.

Baggage, trunks, blankets, children of all ages and both sexes, are huddled together in a chaotic mass in that old lumber shed. Flooring has been laid in the structure and the exiles are not forced to sleep upon the ground. The city of El Paso and many public-spirited citizens, aided by the chamber of commerce, have done everything in their power to make the place as comfortable as possible.

The scene in the "camp" yesterday was an interesting but a pathetic one. Mothers walked up and down the inclosure with babies on their arms. Older children played listlessly about on the piles of bedding and looked with curious eyes on the visitors that came to the gates for a glimpse at the quarters. In every eye, from the youngest child to the oldest man—and there is one old, straw-hatted, long-bearded patriarch there, whose bowed shoulders have seen 90 years of life on this sphere—is an expression of bewilderment, like that of lost children.

Little by little the crowd of exiles in the lumber camp is diminishing, as officials of the colonies find temporary homes for them in the city or among friends at Hatchita, N. Mex., and in the Salt River Valley in Arizona.

The Graham Guardian published, on August 9, the following account of the mass meeting held at Safford on the arrival of the refugees from Mexico in the Gila Valley:

Several hundred refugees from Mexico arrived in the valley last week and are now being cared for by the people here. They are all destitute, as everything they own, except what little they could carry, was left in Mexico.

The treatment these people had received caused a feeling of indignation to sweep over the community, and mass meetings were called for the purpose of seeking means of relief.

The meeting in Safford was held in the park and was presided over by Mayor Prina. A number of speeches were made, and all were of the opinion that the United States should be called upon to give proper protection to Americans in Mexico.

At the conclusion of the meeting the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

RESOLUTIONS.

SAFFORD, ARIZ., August 4, 1912.

To HON. MARK A. SMITH,
Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Hon. CARL HAYDEN,
Washington, D. C.:

As nearly 3,000 Americans have been forced to leave their homes in Chihuahua and Sonora on account of the violent acts of the revolutionists within the past 10 days and are now being taken care of in different parts of the United States, and as the homes and property of these people are at the mercy of the different bands of revolutionsts overrunning that part of the country, with no means of protection, and not daring to return under threats of violence, and as several hundred of the refugees are here in the Gila Valley now seeking assistance and protection from the flagrant outlawry that has been heaped upon them, we, the citizens of Graham County, in mass meeting assembled at Safford, ask that you use your utmost efforts in an endeavor to induce the Federal Government to protect the American citizens now residing in the Republic of Mexico, and also the homes and property of these who have been forced to come to the United States for the preservation of their lives.

Viewing the situation from close quarters, we deem the situation very grave. While we do not advocate United States intervention at this time, we do believe that the Government is fully warranted in demanding that the Mexican Government give proper protection to United States citizens and property belonging to them; then, in case this demand is not complied with, to compel its recognition.

The refugees from depredations can not remain long in the United States for the reason that everything they own is in the Republic of Mexico and they must be cared for by their friends or sympathetic citizens until they can return to their homes in Mexico, and we are firmly convinced that the sooner the United States Government gives the Government of Mexico to understand that it must protect Americans or that we will do it for them, the better it will be, not only for the unfortunates who have just left Mexico, but also for the human race in general.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that this is not the proper time to discuss the failures of American diplomacy nor what, in my judgment, is the proper course to pursue in order to bring peace into Mexico. I have strong convictions on this subject and hope that on another occasion I may have an opportunity to present my views to this House. I wish to add only that if the same course had been pursued by the American Government on another occasion, Arizona, New Mexico, and California would not now be a part of the United States, nor would the Texans have any cause to remember the Alamo.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAYDEN, by unanimous consent, the title was amended to conform to the joint resolution as passed.

On motion of Mr. HAYDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

CERTAIN HOMESTEADERS IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 20498) for the relief of certain homesteaders in Nebraska be taken from the Speaker's table, and that the Senate amendments be concurred in.

The SPEAKER. How long will it take?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. I think not over half a minute.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What is the bill?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. It is a House bill passed with amendments by the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What is the object of it?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. It is for the relief of about half a dozen homesteaders in Nebraska.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not going to recognize anybody else for anything until we get these conference reports, and so forth, disposed of. The Chair will recognize the gentleman for this.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has this amendment been submitted to the Committee on the Public Lands?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. The committees of both Houses have unanimously reported the bill, and the Secretary of the Interior suggested this, in the first place, to relieve these deserving people.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am talking about the Senate amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the Senate amendment been considered by the House committee, and agreed to by them?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. The Senate amendment has not been considered by the House committee, but it is in perfect keeping with the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest to the gentleman that it is asking a good deal of the House to pass a Senate amendment relating to the public-land laws when it has not been considered at all by the House committee.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, the Senate amendment is simply a change of phraseology suggested by the department.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. And it is in perfect keeping with the bill. It applies to only half a dozen homesteaders.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What I want to understand from the gentleman is this: Have the chairman of the committee and those in authority on the Public Lands Committee on this side of the House considered this amendment and agreed to it?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. They were ready to accept the same kind of a bill that is provided for by this Senate amendment in the first place.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Has the gentleman consulted with the Democrats on the Public Lands Committee, and have they agreed to this Senate amendment?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. No; but I am sure that they would.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I object. I think the gentleman should consult the other members of the committee.

GOOD ROADS.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a part of the proceedings of the Chicago convention, with reference to good roads.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. What was the request?

Mr. BUCHANAN. To publish a part of the proceedings of the Chicago convention on the subject of good roads.

Mr. MANN. How much is there of it?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have not got it here, but it is not very lengthy.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to printing a reasonable amount.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will allow the gentleman from Illinois to look at it and leave it to him.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; I prefer to have the gentleman state. I want to know whether it is very long or not.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is not very lengthy. I have not it here with me now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

These appropriations relate to the manufacture and purchase of ammunition, fire-control instruments, small arms, torpedoes, heavy guns, and battle compasses. The appropriations enumerated in the amendment have heretofore been held to be continuing appropriations, but under a recent decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury they are held to be annual appropriations, and one year is not sufficient to complete the work provided for by these appropriations. They are therefore extended for one additional year, and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 51 and 52 raise the limit of cost of the dry dock at Pearl Harbor from $3,350,000 to $3,468,000. This increased limit of cost is due to conditions which require the use of a richer mixture of concrete for the dry dock. The appropriation made for the dry dock at Pearl Harbor has not been increased, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 53 authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to purchase an acre, more or less, of land in the island of Oahu, Hawaii, for the location of wells for supplying fresh water to the naval station, out of the appropriation made last year for a fresh-water system at that station, and the House recedes with an amendment limiting the cost of the land to be purchased not to exceed $1,500.

Amendment No. 64 is a change of total.

Amendment No. 65 provides for a $30,000 increase in the Medical Department, which is deemed necessary due to the increase in the enlisted personnel, and the House recedes.

L. P. PADGETT,
A. W. GREGG,
GEORGE EDMUND FOSS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the conferees on the naval bill have exceeded their authority by including matters in the report not in disagreement between the two Houses.

Take the first amendment, No. 34, on page 30, which provides as follows:

Depots for coal: To enable the Secretary of the Navy to execute the provisions of section 1552 of the Revised Statutes, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to establish, at such places as he may deem necessary, suitable depots for coal and other fuel for the supply of steamships of war, $500,000. That $75,000 of said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the survey, investigation, and report upon coal and coal fields available for the production of coal for the use of the United States Navy, or any vessel of the United States.

The managers on the part of the House receded from the disagreement to the Senate amendment, and concurred in the amendment with an amendment by striking out in said amendment the following:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"That $75,000 of said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the survey, investigation, and report upon coal and coal fields available for the production of coal for the use of the United States Navy or any vessel of the United States," and in lieu thereof insert the following: "That $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the mining of coal and development work of public lands in Alaska for the purpose of supplying coal for the United States Navy, and the sum of $345,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used for the coaling station and fuel station at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii."

Mr. Speaker, neither in the bill as it passed the House nor in the Senate amendment is there any provision to which a provision authorizing the mining of coal in Alaska and the development of public lands there is at all germane. The House managers exceeded their authority by inserting in this report, or agreeing to insert, as part of the condition on which they would agree to the provision, the provision which embarks the Government in an enterprise never heretofore suggested except in the most casual way. It is no business of the Navy Department to mine coal. There is no excuse for the Navy Department to enter the public domain of Alaska for the purpose of mining coal. Investigation of available sources of supply of fuel can not in any way be construed as a provision to which it is germane to attach legislation to embark the Government on this new enterprise of mining coal in Alaska and developing public lands there.

In Senate amendment No. 7 it is provided:

Hereafter any naval officer on the retired list may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, be ordered to such duty as he may be able to perform at sea or on shore, and while so employed in time of peace shall receive the pay and allowances of an officer of the active list of the grade from which he was retired.

For many years Congress has been trying to remove what is called the "hump" in the Navy and legislate to provide for the retirement of naval officers, and provision is made by which there is what is known as the plucking board. When a sufficient number of officers do not retire voluntarily each year the board sits and determines those who shall be compelled to retire. The Senate proposes that the Secretary of the Navy shall detail officers on the retired list to active duty to the exclusion of the men in the Navy and to give them the pay and allowances of men in active service. The House conferees recede from their disagreement to that amendment and agree to it with an amendment by which they strike out "naval officer" and substitute "persons in the naval service or Marine Corps."

Mr. PADGETT. "Any officer of the Navy or Marine Corps."

Mr. FITZGERALD. It reads "hereafter any officer of the Navy or Marine Corps on the retired list may be assigned," and so forth. Now, Mr. Speaker, the Marine Corps is entirely different and apart from the naval service. The term "naval officer" does not include an officer in the Marine Corps. The purpose of this amendment is to broaden the scope of the Senate amendment. The organization of the Navy is provided for in sections 1362 to 1595 of the Revised Statutes as modified from time to time, and the only reference in these sections to the Marine Corps is in section 1551, which provides that the Secretary of the Navy may "cause persons in the naval service or Marine Corps," and so forth, clearly showing the distinction. Section 1421 of the Revised Statutes provides that any person enlisted in the military service of the United States may, on application to the Navy Department, be transferred to the Navy or Marine Corps.

Mr. Speaker, it is bad enough to reverse the policy of Congress, which it has been attempting to establish for many years, by consenting to the utilization of these naval officers upon the retired list in the active service without the House attempting to make as a condition that that reversal of policy shall extend to another corps not a part of the Navy, thereby merely increasing the difficulties that will result. Nothing in the amendment referred to the Marine Corps. Nothing in dispute between the two Houses justifies this legislation affecting the Marine Corps, which the conferees have inserted in this bill.

In amendment 87 a corps unknown to the Navy at the present time, unprovided for by law, not provided for in the bill as it passed the House, and not in the bill as it left the Senate, is created, namely, a reserve corps of dental surgeons. The Senate amendment reads:

Provided further, That of the dental surgeons hereby authorized to be appointed to said Medical Reserve Corps and to the said Dental Corps, the whole number ordered to active duty shall not exceed the number the Secretary of the Navy may deem actually necessary to the health and efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps, and in time of peace the number shall not exceed the proportion of 1 dental officer to 1,000 of said personnel.

The House proposes to recede from its disagreement to this amendment and to agree to it with an amendment substituting for the language of the Senate the following:

Provided further, That a reserve corps of dental surgeons is hereby authorized to be organized and operated under the provisions hereinbefore provided for the organization of a medical reserve corps and differing therefrom in no respect other than that the appointees thereto shall be graduates of reputable schools of dentistry instead of graduates of reputable schools of medicine, and so many of said appointees may be ordered to temporary active service as the Secretary of the Navy may deem necessary to the health and efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps: Provided, That the total number of dental officers in active service shall not exceed the proportion of 1 dental officer to each 1,000 of said personnel.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is no dental reserve corps in the Navy, none proposed in the Senate amendment, and the conferees representing both Houses attempt to incorporate in this bill legislation to create a new corps in the Navy. It is a violation of the rules of the House, and it should not be tolerated, because, if conferees, without knowledge or notice to either House, are to make a practice of incorporating in conference reports legislation of the most far-reaching consequence, then Members of the House, not expecting that such action will be taken, will awaken after Congress adjourns to the fact that legislation in which they would have been vitally interested, perhaps, and to which they would have been very greatly opposed, is incorporated in the laws.

Mr. Speaker, there is one other amendment, if there is any question about the matters that I have already submitted, which I shall submit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had better submit all that he has.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I shall submit this one and there will not be any question about it, though perhaps it may have been done to effect a good purpose, but so there will be no question about having this report rejected, so that the House may express its opinion on some of these matters, I shall call the attention of the Chair to it. On page 40 of the engrossed bill, in line 20, in amendment 79, the conferees have inserted in the text of the bill not in dispute certain language. It corresponds to line 22 of page 51 of the printed bill now before us.

Mr. PADGETT. It is page 51, line 22.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And that corresponds to page 40, line 20, of the engrossed bill. The language referred to is as follows:

That all officers authorized by this act shall receive the same pay and allowances as officers of corresponding rank and length of service in the Medical Corps of the Navy.

That language was not in dispute. It was agreed to by the House and by the Senate, but the conferees have inserted, after the word "officers," the words "of the dental corps."

The SPEAKER. That language does not appear in the copy of the bill which the Chair has before him.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true, but the conferees in the report state that they have inserted that language, which is contrary to the rule.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to be heard?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. Mr. Speaker, beginning where the gentleman from New York left off, it is true that in line 22, page 51, of the bill we have inserted after the word "officers" the words "of the dental corps." I wish to call attention to the fact that this was incorporated in the bill as it passed the House by offering an amendment on the floor to the bill which had been reported by the committee, and in using the language of that bill there was used the words "that all officers authorized by this act," and so forth, but when it came into this bill in the hurry of matters and the confusion on the floor it was not noticed that the language "all officers of this act" would include more officers than officers of the dental corps. In order to make it plain, a verbal correction was necessary, the insertion of the words "of the dental corps" after the word "officers," so that it would read:

That all officers of the dental corps authorized by this act shall receive the same pay and allowances as officers of corresponding rank and length of service in the Medical Corps of the Navy.

As a matter of fact, when we were going over the bill in conference we discovered that the language here was merely "all officers authorized by this act," which would embrace or might be construed to embrace all of the officers provided for in the Navy, and in order to make the verbal correction and to make it specific we inserted the language referred to, so as to show the intent and meaning of the amendment. It is simply to perfect a matter of phraseology.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman, is there anything in this act about a dental corps?

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, yes. Now, I want to say to the Chair that on the floor there was a provision offered which was incorporated in the bill creating a dental corps and making it identical with the corps in the Army. That was done by incorporating a separate bill and that explains why this language here was used: "That all officers authorized by this act," and that would be proper if it were a separate act, but not noticing that when it was incorporated into the general appropriation bill it might be construed that the words, "all officers authorized by this act" might refer to other officers than the officers of the dental corps, and in order to make that language plain and specific, and to carry out the purpose, which I know can not fail to commend itself to the distinguished gentleman from New York, we inserted the words "of the dental corps."

The SPEAKER. Well, that is not the question, whether it commended itself to the gentleman from New York, the Speaker, or anybody else. The question is whether or not the conferees exceeded their authority by putting in something that the House did not put in or something that the Senate did not put in.

Mr. PADGETT. We put in what the House intended when it passed the act. And I want to call attention to this, that on this question of the dental corps, which embraces a number of paragraphs, the Senate amended it by making some 15 or 20 amendments and changed the whole purpose of the provision as it was intended by the House, and put in a Senate bill, so that the conferees were of the opinion, and I think so now, that by the numerous amendments which the Senate made it changed the whole purpose and scope of the House provision to a different provision which had been reported by the Senate committee, and when the Senate receded from all of their amendments and restored the House provision we thought the whole matter was in conference, and I think so yet.

The SPEAKER. Now, the Senate did not strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a new bill.

Mr. PADGETT. No; they did not. Now I will take up the next amendment, numbered 34, on page 31, with reference to coal. I do not think that the conferees exceeded their authority in that respect and the matter was entirely germane.

The SPEAKER. Which one is that?

Mr. PADGETT. It is on page 31 of the printed bill, line 4. The Senate inserted an amendment:

That $75,000 of said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the survey, investigation, and report upon coal and coal fields available for the production of coal for the use of the United States Navy, or any vessel of the United States.

Now, the Chair will bear in mind that this was an amendment of the Senate and on a new matter on which the House had not acted at all, so there were no limitations or expression of the wishes of the House. It was purely and solely an expression of the wish of the Senate. Now, the conferees representing the House had the right and had the authority to submit a germane amendment to represent the wish of the House. In doing that we submitted the following:

That $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the mining of coal and development of public lands in Alaska for the purpose of supplying coal for the United States Navy.

Now, then, this mining of coal is for the United States Navy. The coal in Alaska and the developing work is to be for the development of coal in Alaska for the United States Navy.

The SPEAKER. Now, will the gentleman permit the Chair to ask a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is not there a very clear difference in surveying coal fields and investigating some place to find out whether we can discover coal fields and all the rest of it, and the work of starting a coal mine?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir; there is.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman claim that any Senate amendment has anything on earth to do with starting in the business of mining coal?

Mr. PADGETT. It is not for the purpose of carrying on the business, but for the purpose of developing it by tests for the United States Navy. The Chair will notice that it is to mine and develop it for the use of the Navy.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows, but it is not necessary to start a coal mine in order to investigate and see whether there is coal under the land.

Mr. PADGETT. No; it is known there is coal there; surveys have been made.

The SPEAKER. Why do you want to start a coal mine, then?

Mr. PADGETT. We want to get coal and test it and see whether it is available for the Navy.

The SPEAKER. But you do not say so.

Mr. PADGETT. We do. We say, for the purpose of developing it for the use of the Navy. That is the very thing that we wish, and the language we used in the House amendment is, "may be used for the mining of coal and development work of public lands in Alaska for the purpose of supplying coal for the United States Navy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Senate amendment only authorized an investigation of available coal fields to supply the Navy. The gentleman proposes to mine coal and to develop public lands to supply coal. It is a highly different proposition about the investigation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is trying to get at the real meat of the matter as to why it is necessary to start a coal mine in order to investigate and survey and find out about a coal field.

Mr. PADGETT. Of course——

The SPEAKER. They do that by boring, principally, do they not?

Mr. PADGETT. Well, in some places they develop it in one way and in others by digging in and getting samples and experimenting with the coal. Now, I do not believe that coal can be investigated for the purpose of determining the cardinal question of whether or not it is available for use for the Navy except by getting some of the coal and trying it by the use of that coal. It takes a high grade of coal for the Navy. Now, let me call the Speaker's attention, and that of the House also, to the fact we are shipping from the east coast to the west coast from 150,000 tons to 200,000 tons of coal every year, at an enormous charge of more than five and a half dollars average per ton freight charges.

Last year we paid out about $900,000 in freight charges in carrying coal from the east coast to the west coast. When the Senate put on the question here of investigating it, they had in view the development of it, and in order to make it clear, in order that we might be practical, in order that it might be efficient, in order that the coal might be experimented with, and in order that the coal might be investigated in the only way it can be fully and thoroughly investigated and tested, is to mine some of it and to burn it on the ships to see how it will work.

Mr. BATHRICK. If the gentleman will yield, I would like to say a word in order to elucidate this matter. I think it is plain to all who read that the Senate amendment is a desire to investigate and survey and report upon coal fields which are available. I think it is plain it will be impossible for anybody to report upon the question of coal fields unless that coal is mined and used upon the ships, and I think in that respect the amendment of the Senate and the proposed amendment of the conferees are synonymous. There can be no material distinction between the two amendments concerning the purpose which they wish to accomplish.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read these two amendments. The Senate amendment reads:

That $75,000 of said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the survey, investigation, and report upon coal and coal fields available for the production of coal for the use of the United States Navy or any vessel of the United States.

In lieu thereof the conferees insert the following:

That $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the mining of coal and development work of public lands in Alaska for the purpose of supplying coal for the United States Navy, and the sum of $345,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used for the coaling station and fuel station at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii.

Is there no difference between those propositions?

Mr. BATHRICK. There is not, for this reason, Mr. Speaker: Permit me to state that the intent of both propositions is to develop that coal in Alaska.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the Senate amendment which contemplates the development of public lands in Alaska?

Mr. BATHRICK. The development of the proposition as to whether that coal can be used in the United States or not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It may have been the intent of those who prepared the amendment that if it was prepared with the intent to conceal——

Mr. BATHRICK. I do not think the intent was to conceal anything.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I form my opinion from the information which I have.

Mr. BATHRICK. I think the gentleman does not understand it.

The SPEAKER. Does not the gentleman think the purpose of the Senate amendment would authorize men to dig out enough of this coal to find out whether it was good or not?

Mr. PADGETT. I think so.

The SPEAKER. And would not the language the conferees have put in here change the whole business of mining coal?

Mr. PADGETT. I think the mining and development for the use of the Navy—the two must be taken together.

The SPEAKER. What is the use in putting in the words "mining and development"?

Mr. PADGETT. It was for the purpose of going there and taking some of it out and transporting it 140 miles to the bay and putting it on the ships to burn.

The SPEAKER. If they had put it in the Senate amendment, what was the use of putting it in the language of the conferees?

Mr. PADGETT. It was to make it so the Navy Department could not question its authority. When an amendment is made by the Senate and inserted as original matter, and the House has never expressed itself, the House conferees, representing the House, have a right to modify, either by enlarging or diminishing, the intent and purpose of the Senate. We are not compelled as conferees to take absolutely the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. No; you have a right to offer an amendment to the Senate amendment, provided it is on a subject that the House has passed upon or that is included in the Senate amendment, but beyond that the conferees can not go.

Mr. PADGETT. That is right. The House did pass upon this amendment.

Mr. MANN. The House disagreed to the Senate amendment, but never——

Mr. PADGETT. The House disagreed to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] desire to ask a question?

Mr. MANN. I just want to make an observation.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. The provision of the Senate amendment for survey, investigation, and report on coal could not have made the item this year for the mining of coal put into the naval appropriation bill in order. If a Senate amendment is not agreed to in the form that it is, providing for a survey and investigation, and the committee next year, having that report before it, should propose an amendment or present as an original proposition in the naval appropriation bill an appropriation for the mining of coal, that would not be in order——

The SPEAKER. It would go out on the point of order——

Mr. MANN. Because it would not be authorized by law and would not be a continuation of a public work in progress. On the other hand, if the House conferees' report be agreed to, which provides for the mining of coal, it will then become a public work in progress, and would authorize, so far as the rules are concerned, an appropriation to any extent next year on an appropriation bill. So it must be perfectly plain that the conferees have gone away beyond the point of difference between the two Houses, for the reason that if the conference report were agreed to, under the rules of the House it would authorize an appropriation to continue the mining next year, while under the Senate amendment there would be no such authorization.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the provision put in by the Senate provides for a survey and investigation of the coal fields of Alaska——

The SPEAKER. And a report.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Yes; and a report. Now, the subject matter of that amendment is a survey, an investigation, and a report on the Alaskan coal fields.

Mr. BATHRICK. Just one moment; will the gentleman yield a second?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Just in one moment I will. Now, that being the subject matter, as has been very well suggested by somebody here, the House conferees are not bound to accept the Senate amendment as it is, nor to reject it, but they may enlarge it or limit it.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says it would call for an appropriation if we proceed to mine coal. It will call for an appropriation if we proceed to investigate the coal fields as provided in the Senate amendment. It will call for an appropriation if we undertake merely to survey the coal fields.

Now, how are we going to investigate? The Senate in general terms provides for a survey, investigation, and report. The House conferees made the provision a little more specific. They are going to investigate the coal fields of Alaska by going down into the bowels of the earth and getting out the coal and determining its value by use. The Senate amendment would require an appropriation, and it will require an appropriation as agreed on in conference. It seems to me it would be prescribing too narrow a field to say that the Senate amendment must be taken exactly as it is offered, or rejected altogether.

The SPEAKER. Nobody ever contended that, but the rule provides and the decisions declare that the matter that is put into a conference report must have been dealt with by the House or by a Senate amendment. The decisions run clear back to the 23d day of June, 1812, when Henry Clay was Speaker, and coming on down are so rendered by all the Speakers, and so specifically ruled on by Mr. Speaker Crisp and Mr. Speaker Reed and Mr. Speaker CANNON. They all go to the very same point, and the rule is this, that a matter that is put into a conference report must have been dealt with by the House or by a Senate amendment, or by a House amendment to a Senate amendment. Now the query arises, Is the mining of coal, the starting of the business of mining coal in Alaska, treated of either in the House bill or in the Senate amendment?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think it is very clear that the mining of coal for the uses and purposes of the Navy was what the Senate had in mind and what it put into express words in that Senate amendment. What is it for? It is to develop some means of getting coal for the use of the Navy. Now, then, Mr. Speaker, the test in all of those cases is that the conferees, in dealing with that, must deal with the subject matter; not with the identical provision, but with the general subject matter contained in the act passed by one House or the amendment put on in the other. To say that the House conferees must take what the Senate offers or reject it entirely would destroy all conferences.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but nobody ever said that.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I know, Mr. Speaker, that they do not say it in terms, but they say it in effect, because the subject matter of this provision is to see whether or not the Alaskan coal can be successfully developed for the use of the Navy. How are you going to develop it? By getting an airship and sailing over that frozen country? No. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, the only way to investigate it and develop it is to go down into the ground and get out that coal and put enough of it on certain vessels of the Navy to run them a week or a month or a year, and investigate and test it. How are you going to investigate it? Standing on top of an iceberg, when the coal may be a thousand feet below the surface of the ground?

Mr. SABATH. How are you going to investigate that coal before you get it?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. You can not investigate it before you get it. We can never get a conference report here to dispose of anything if we are compelled to accept what the Senate says in toto or reject it altogether. The subject matter dealt with in conference was the investigation of the Alaskan coal fields with a view to getting cheaper and better fuel for the use of the Navy. That is the subject matter. How are you going to do it? By survey and investigation. Now, the House conferees wanted to limit it to a certain kind of investigation, and instead of limiting it to an investigation in general terms, they apply the limitation a little further by providing that we are to mine some of that coal and develop it and test it and see whether we can use it or not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], in response to an inquiry propounded to him by the Chair, assented to the proposition that in his judgment the language of the Senate amendment justifies the getting out of enough coal out there to try these experiments with.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PADGETT. At that point, why should we not make it plain? If that is true, why is it not proper to make plain what the other would permit to be interpreted?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] and the Chair agree on that proposition, is it not fair to assume that the department, which always gives the most latitudinarian construction to any appropriation that is made, would go on and make the investigation?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I want to finish my statement. If, as you contend, the Senate bill was broad enough to permit the department to go down and mine some of that coal, then wherein have the House conferees exceeded their jurisdiction in putting into the letter of the law what you admit is already in the spirit?

The SPEAKER. Does not this expression that is put in by the conferees really provide for a sort of general mining business out there?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I think not, Mr. Speaker. I think it does exactly what the Speaker says the Senate amendment already authorized, that it permits coal to be mined. If the Senate amendment authorized the mining of coal for the purpose of investigation and carrying on this test, survey, and investigation, how have the conferees exceeded their authority by putting into the law that which is conceded by all parties to be its intent and spirit? That is all I have to say.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Missouri will yield to me, or if the Chair will recognize me——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] had the floor.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. OLMSTED. I think nobody has the floor except as the Speaker desires to hear him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wanted to hear the gentleman from Tennessee on all these points, or to hear somebody who wants to express an opinion. If no one wishes to express an opinion, the Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I want to take up Senate amendment No. 7. The language of that amendment is that hereafter any naval officer on the retired list, and so forth. I was informed at the time this amendment was before the conference committee that the Attorney General of the United States has rendered an opinion that a marine officer is a naval officer, and that this language does not change and was not intended to change the effect or the substance. But in order to make it plain, and in order to follow the customary legislative precedents, we changed it to read "officer of the Navy or Marine Corps."

As the words "naval officer" have been construed by the Attorney General of the United States to include an officer of the Marine Corps, I do not think we exceeded our authority by making it clear and using the common construction "an officer of the Navy or Marine Corps" instead of the group language "a naval officer."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has the gentleman ever seen this opinion of the Attorney General?

Mr. PADGETT. I have not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If that opinion had been rendered, of course the action of the conferees would have been unnecessary; but unless it exists, there is no question that they are two distinct branches of the service.

Mr. PADGETT. I will say to the gentleman that we telephoned to Mr. Russell, the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, and asked him the question, and he said that the Attorney General had so interpreted it and had given an opinion to that effect to the department; and it was upon that, in order to make it plain, to follow the language customarily used in legislation in reference to the two corps, that we used the language here which would make it clear.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt in my mind but that a provision authorizing the mining of coal for the United States Navy would embrace the survey and investigation of the land; but when you come to reverse that proposition, an authorization to survey, investigate, and report does not authorize the mining of coal for the United States Navy. It has been contended that it would authorize a test, and perhaps it would authorize taking out the core by a diamond drill and getting out sufficient to test, but not sufficient to supply the United States Navy. Over in Pennsylvania we had a series of what were called improvement companies, incorporated for the express purpose of improving and developing their coal land, opening it up, getting it ready to mine, but they were not permitted to mine a ton of coal. They could lease it to somebody else, but were themselves forbidden to mine. Surveying and investigating does not embrace and include mining. That is a different thing.

Upon this proposition I am clearly of the opinion that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is right and that the conferees have exceeded their authority.

On the other proposition, where they changed the words "this act" in the text agreed to by both Houses and inserted the words "officers of the dental corps," that is clearly a usurpation of authority by the conferees. I do not doubt that the amendment was meritorious, as suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT]. He says that this House adopted an amendment copied from some other act and they used this term "this act," but omitted the term "dental corps." The Senate agreed to the House provision precisely as the House passed it. Therefore there was nothing in difference between the two Houses. Consequently nothing was referred to the conferees on that subject. But they have undertaken to amend the bill as they thought the House ought to have amended it in the first instance. The Senate probably would have made the amendment had their attention been called to it; but that is not within the province of the conferees, no matter how meritorious the amendment may be.

Then, again, where it says "officers of the Navy," the conferees had added the words "or Marine Corps." On that point I call attention to one authority which seems to me to settle it. It is found in section 6417 of volume 5 of Hinds' Precedents. Where an act provided that no money appropriated by "this act" should be available for certain purposes, the conferees inserted the words "or any other," so that it read, "this or any other act." The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] made the point of order that by inserting the words "or any other" the conferees had exceeded their authority.

In the same conference report, where there was a provision relating to the personal use of vehicles by officers of the Government, the conferees inserted the words "or official"—just those brief words, making it read "personal or official"—and yet after an elaborate discussion, and in a carefully considered ruling, Mr. Speaker CANNON sustained the point of order that in inserting those words the conferees had in each case exceeded their authority.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. There is no question at all in the mind of the Chair but that these points of order must be sustained. As it is a question which is liable to arise several times very soon, the Chair will state his position as to his understanding of it.

The rule is this: That the conferees can not go beyond something that is in the original bill—that is proposition No. 1—or in the Senate amendment, and that is proposition No. 2; or in the House amendment to the Senate amendment, and that is proposition No. 3.

That rule is as old as the 23d day of June, 1812, and it is barely possible that it is older. But, on the 23d of June, 1812, Henry Clay rendered an opinion of which that is the substance.

It has been stated variously by various Speakers. Speaker Crisp stated the matter with perfect clarity. In Hinds' Precedents, section 6408, volume 5, Speaker Crisp said:

The question for the Chair to determine is whether the amendment which has been agreed to and reported by the conference committee is germane to the amendment of the Senate or to the original bill. The amendment may not be germane to the original bill, yet if it is germane to the Senate amendment the conference committee might report it.

The Chair thinks that the practice of enlarging the powers of conference committees beyond the strict letter of the rule was wrong; that conferees ought to be held to the rule, and that amendments they propose in conference reports shall be germane either to the original text or to the amendment.

Let us apply these principles to these points raised by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. Of course, everybody understands that the Chair is not ruling the way he would like to see the bill go. The Chair would like to see mining operations started in Alaska in a proper way, but this is not the proper way to do it.

Page 51, line 22, the language of the bill was: "That all officers authorized in this act, etc., shall receive." The conferees inserted, after the word "officers," the words "of the dental corps," so that it will read "All officers of the dental corps" shall do so and so.

Mr. Speaker CANNON rendered an opinion involving that precise point. In volume 5, Hinds' Precedents, section 6417, the headlines or syllabi read as follows:

The managers of a conference must confine themselves to the differences committed to them. Managers of a conference may not change the text to which both Houses have agreed.

Of course that simply states the rule. Here is the case itself:

On March 7, 1904, Mr. Henry H. Bingham, of Pennsylvania, called up the conference report on the legislative appropriation bill.

Thereupon Mr. JAMES R. MANN, of Illinois, made the point of order that the managers of the conference had exceeded their authority in relation to a certain paragraph of the bill, which, with the Senate amendments (which are italicized), appeared as follows in the printed copy:

"No part of any money appropriated by this act shall be available for paying expenses of horses and carriages or drivers therefor for the personal use of any officer provided for herein by this act other than the President of the United States, the heads of executive departments, and the Secretary to the President."

The conferees inserted the words "or any other" before the word "act," making it read "this or any other act," and also inserted the words "by this or any other act," so that it would read "for the personal use of any officer provided for by this or any other act, other than the President," and so forth.

Speaker CANNON said:

The managers have inserted between the words "personal" and "use" the words "or official." Mr. MANN insisted that this amendment of the text, to which both Houses agreed, was beyond the power of either House, and, consequently, beyond the power of the conferees, citing the precedent of April 23, 1902.

After debate, Speaker CANNON withheld his decision, evidently wanting to investigate the matter.

Here is the sum and substance of Speaker CANNON's decision:

This provision in the conference report inserts legislation that never was before the House or before the Senate, and it was quite competent for the conferees, if they could do this, to have stricken out the whole paragraph and inserted anything that was germane. They could have stricken out the words "other than the President of the United States, the heads of executive departments, and the Secretary to the President"; and while there were but two words inserted, the provision, if enacted into law, would be far-reaching and would run along the line of the whole public service.

Now, that is just exactly this case as to this particular amendment.

Speaker CANNON goes on to say:

As to the wisdom of such a provision, the Chair is not called upon to intimate any opinion. It is for the House and the Senate to determine upon the wisdom of it, and, as the House and the Senate never have considered that proposition, the Chair is of opinion that the conferees exceeded their power, and therefore sustains the point of order.

The second point of order is that on page 30, beginning with line 23—and it does not make any difference as far as the parliamentary points are concerned how desirable it is to mine coal in Alaska. The Chair thinks it very desirable, and would agree with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] on the desirability of it; but that is neither here nor there.

The language of the Senate amendment was:

That $75,000 of said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the survey, investigation, and report upon coal and coal fields available for the production of coal for the use of the United States Navy, or any vessel of the United States.

The conferees inserted a proposition for mining coal, and surely there is a wide difference in the proposition to survey, investigate, and report upon coal and coal fields and a proposition for the mining of coal. That point must also be sustained.

In amendment 7, on page 5 of the bill, line 24, it is provided:

Hereafter any naval officer on the retired list may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, be ordered to such duty as he may be able to perform at sea or on shore, and while so employed in time of peace shall receive the pay and allowances of an officer of the active list of the grade from which he was retired.

The conferees inserted into that amendment these words—of the Navy or Marine Corps.

And also inserted the words—

and made some other minor changes. The Chair may be wrong about it, but the Chair believes that the Navy and Marine Corps are two different institutions, and sustains the point of order in that regard. The point of order made against the conference report on amendment No. 87 is also sustained.

So the four points of order made by the gentleman from New York are sustained.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conferees to be hereafter appointed may, with the permission of the House, insert the words "of the dental corps" by agreement with the Senate conferees, in line 22, page 51, after the word "officers."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the House conferees may, with the consent of the Senate conferees, on page 51, line 22, after the word "officers," insert the words "of the dental corps." Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit another request for unanimous consent of similar character. It is on page 57 of the printed bill, on the question of authorizations, and does not involve any money or any appropriation.

The authorization was made, according to the House document, the number that was submitted by the department in pursuance of law, for authority to repair the Vermont, in the sum of $250,000. Upon a fuller survey and estimate it has been found that it will require $300,000, otherwise the ship will be laid up for a year. I make the same request to be allowed, with the consent of the Senate conferees, to insert instead of $250,000 the sum of $300,000.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that on page 57, lines 22 and 23, the House conferees may, with the consent of the Senate conferees, strike out $250,000, and insert in lieu thereof $300,000. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. PADGETT. That is a change of authorization for repairs from $250,000 to $300,000. It does not involve any appropriation. It comes out of the general lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. MANN. It involves $50,000 more, but I suppose it is needed.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; otherwise the ship will be laid up for a year without making repairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether it is proposed to have these repairs made in the navy yards or by competition in outside yards?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, my information from the department is this: The Secretary of the Navy has stated time and again before our committee that it was his fixed policy to have the large repairs on ships done in the navy yards.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are all of the navy yards of the country equipped to repair battleships?

Mr. PADGETT. I could not say that all of them are to the same extent. All of them are to some extent and others to a larger extent.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that but one navy yard in the United States of all our navy yards is equipped to build battleships?

Mr. PADGETT. I understood the gentleman to say to repair battleships.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That was my first question, but I am now putting another one.

Mr. PADGETT. As I understand, the navy yard at New York is the only one that can build large ships, also at Mare Island. At Mare Island ships of fifteen and sixteen thousand tons displacement can be constructed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Since this question enters very largely into the matter of my inquiry, is it not a fact that the Navy Department is now withholding contracts which were the result of advertisement for public competition, with a view of sending original construction work into the navy yards?

Mr. PADGETT. I am not advised as to that. I have no information from the department.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will state that it is true with regard to Mare Island. It is true with regard to a gunboat that was advertised for recently, and upon which low bids were received. My question involves the broad proposition of taking labor from independent workingmen and putting it altogether with workingmen who are employed by the Government of the United States. Is it not a fact that the Monocacy, a boat about to be constructed by the Government, is to be assigned or has been assigned to a navy yard, in spite of bids and proposals made by outside constructors?

Mr. PADGETT. As I stated, I have no direct information. The Secretary of the Navy has stated before the committee a number of times, and also, I think, in one of his annual reports, that it was his policy to submit bids to outside yards for the construction of large battleships and to put all repair work and the construction of smaller vessels, as far as he was able, in the navy yards, but repeatedly here the House by designation has placed the construction of battleships and other ships in navy yards.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let us take the gunboat Sacramento. Is it not a fact that bids were twice publicly advertised for, and that in the last instance a low bid entirely within the appropriation was received, and that an award has been withheld?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know. I am not advised as to that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has it not been the tendency of the Department of the Navy recently, and is it not also the policy of the Committee on Naval Affairs, to reduce the appropriations in certain navy yards that might be equipped to build battleships, whereas but one navy yard in the country is now so equipped?

Mr. PADGETT. There are several navy yards that are equipped to do extensive repair work, and there are two of them that do original construction, and one of them very largely so—the New York Navy Yard—but I do not know of any specific action on the part of the Naval Committee one way or the other. We have been making our appropriations along the customary lines. We have not sought to build up great navy yards scattered promiscuously over the country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman recall efforts made to equip several of the navy yards outside of that at New York so that they might be qualified to compete for the construction of battleships, if the Government should enter on that course?

Mr. PADGETT. There have been no specific suggestions to the committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman aware of the fact there is no 1,700-foot dry dock in any navy yard in the country?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I am aware of that, and I am aware of the fact that no proposition of that kind has ever been brought here on the floor.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman aware that petitions have been filed and requests made for the construction of a dry dock 1,700 feet in length for a certain navy yard in this country?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I am aware the gentleman himself and other Members of the Pennsylvania delegation appeared before the Naval Committee and presented the matter, and it appears in a printed hearing.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman recall that a number of distinguished Members of the House suggested that the city of Philadelphia ought to have a 1,700-foot dry dock, in the last two or three months, and were promised it would be considered and——

Mr. PADGETT. I see published in the newspapers various statements, but I never accept that as an authentic declaration of a Member of Congress or a member of a committee, especially following a banquet. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The committee in its wisdom has not seen fit to grant the request for a 1,700-foot dry dock at this yard.

Mr. PADGETT. The committee has not taken any action either pro or con in regard to the matter.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is no provision made for such a dry dock in this bill.

Mr. PADGETT. No.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The efforts of those who have urged the request have been in vain——

Mr. PADGETT. These matters were called to the attention of the committee after the bill was reported.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I believe the gentleman states there is no certainty that these will be repaired in a navy yard. Should not there be a provision directing that they should be repaired in a navy yard?

Mr. PADGETT. It is the policy of the Secretary of the Navy to have the work done in navy yards, I am informed. There is no trouble in that respect.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. OLMSTED. I would suggest to the gentleman that he specify—the gentleman proposes an amount of $300,000?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. OLMSTED. I suggest, Would it not be better to say "not exceeding $300,000," so as to leave a chance to agree between $150,000 and $300,000?

Mr. PADGETT. It does say with reference to all of these great numbers that are enumerated, not to exceed the amount with reference to all of them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. PADGETT. I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] desires to offer a motion.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee propose to offer a motion in reference to the other amendments?

Mr. PADGETT. I am going to do so when I offer the motion to send the bill to conference.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will have to insist upon a further disagreement to the other amendments.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do further insist upon its disagreement to all the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. FOSS. Will the gentleman except the Senate amendment relating to battleships? There is only one relating to battleships.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman, my colleague, has a right to offer a motion, for the motion to concur is preferential.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in Senate amendment 102, on page 78.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 78 of the printed bill, amendment No. 102, after line 13, insert the following:

"That for the purpose of further increasing the Naval Establishment of the United States the President is hereby authorized to have constructed two first-class battleships, each carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any vessel of its class, to have the highest practicable speed and great radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $7,425,000 each."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to disagree to all the Senate amendments and ask for a conference, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] offers a preferential motion to agree to the amendment just read.

Mr. FOSS. I understand under the order of the House I have one hour.

The SPEAKER. Yes; and the gentleman from Tennessee, 30 minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to use his hour at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for one hour. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, this motion to concur in the Senate amendment will authorize for the American Navy this year the building of two battleships. The Democratic Party has been in control of this House for a comparatively short time and during that time it has offered many solutions for different problems before the people, but upon no question has the Democratic majority of this House shown its proneness to blunder and its desire to play politics and its inability to climb the heights of American statesmanship as much as it has on the naval program of this year.

For the first time in the history of the American Navy the Democratic Party has taken the subject of the naval program into a party caucus. Before the Committee on Naval Affairs had considered the subject at all a party caucus met and decided that we should have no battleships. The result was that the Committee on Naval Affairs, under the direction of the party caucus, brought into this House the smallest, most insignificant, and the weakest naval program which has ever been reported to this body for many years. [Applause on the Republican side.] Heretofore the Navy was considered above party politics; heretofore the national defense was above party politics; and let me say to you that in the judgment of the American people I believe that the national defense is regarded infinitely higher than that of partisanship. [Applause on the Republican side.] It is higher, in fact, than the Washington Monument is above the shifting sands of the New Jersey seacoast. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, what were your reasons? In the first place you said you were in favor of a well-proportioned Navy; you believed in small ships, and therefore you authorized or carried in your bill this year a program of small ships; but when it was pointed out to you upon the floor that you did not authorize as many little ships as were authorized in the naval bill of last year, why then the insincerity of your proposition was at once manifest.

Then, also, it has been stated that the Democratic Party this year proposes to make a show of economy, and that was the reason why you were against a real fighting naval program. There is a difference between a show of economy and a record for economy.

One of the greatest poets which this country ever produced, in my mind, was Eugene Field, a neighbor of mine for many years and until his death. He was the poet of childhood, and one of the best things he ever wrote was when he depicted the struggles of a little boy trying to be good just before Christmas, and the last line of every verse ran something like this:

Jest before Christmas I'm as good as I can be!

And, later, he paraphrased that with reference to a candidate for office, as follows:

Jest before election he's as good as he can be!

And so it is with the Democratic Party in its attempt to show economy at this particular season of the year—"Jest before election it is as good as it can be." [Applause on the Republican side.]

But the American people can see through sham economy; they can see the difference between faked economy and real economy, and no economy that strikes a blow at the efficiency of the American Navy, which is near to the hearts of the American people, will ever be called by them real economy. [Applause on the Republican side.]

But I like to be frank with the Democratic Party. The real truth about this matter is that you believe in the traditional policy of the Democratic Party. Every Democrat lives, and moves, and has his being in the spirit of Thomas Jefferson. The last thing he thinks of at night and the first thing in the morning is Thomas Jefferson. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And so you are in favor of carrying out the traditional policy of the Democratic Party as laid down by its patron saint, Thomas Jefferson.

Now, Thomas Jefferson, gentlemen, did not have very much use for a Navy. The fact of the matter is that while he was President of the United States he drew our ships of war, our frigates, upon the mud banks, and in a letter dated April 17, 1801, which he wrote to one named Smith, he said this:

I shall really be chagrined if the water in the Eastern Branch will not permit of our laying up the whole seven (i. e., frigates) there in time of peace, because they would be under the immediate eye of the department and would require but one set of plunderers to take care of them.

When it came to the question of new ships he was in favor of little gunboats with only one gun on them, so that they could run up into the rivers and creeks away from the enemy, and never after them. In a letter, about 1806, to a Mr. Otis he wrote as follows:

Believing myself that gunboats are the only water defense which can be useful to us and protect us from the ruinous folly of a Navy, I am pleased with everything which promises to improve them.

That was the naval policy of Thomas Jefferson. You need not take my word as authority. I have here a more eminent authority. I read from A History of the American People, by that eminent historian, Woodrow Wilson [applause], who for a brief moment only is passing before the critical eye of the American people. On page 190 of volume 3, he says:

Mr. Jefferson had brought a party to power which had dismantled the Navy which the Federalists had begun. The few ships that remained were tied up at the docks out of repair, out of commission, or lacking crews and equipment. English cruisers overhauled American merchantment when and where they pleased, looked into their manifests and bills of lading, forbade them their voyage if they chose, and took their seamen off to serve in their own crews.

The bitter and intolerable thing was that British officers made no pretense of investigation; took what men they chose, American or English, not declining negroes even; and insulted the flag of the United States by every method they employed. Insult reached its climax when the English cruiser Leopard followed the American frigate Chesapeake out of Hampton Roads, fired upon her, and took four men from her as deserters, the Chesapeake having but a single gun ready for use (1807).

Mr. Jefferson saw the face of war in all this, but would not propose any means of redress. The only remedy he would suggest was a fleet of gunboats for the defense of the ports, less costly than fortifications; less dangerous also, his creed said, to principles of self-government and the maintenance of a modest central power than a formidable navy. If American seamen were not safe against attack at sea it was best that they should stay in port, where the country could make good their defense. He found it impossible, indeed, to do away with seagoing ships of war altogether. At the very outset of his administration he had been obliged to send a squadron against the pirates of Tripoli, who openly made war on the commerce of the United States. The six frigates then kept in commission proved unsuitable for the service, and he was forced to consent to the construction of a few vessels more suitable, which promptly brought Tripoli to terms. But he did not allow even the Tripolitan war (1802–1805) to bring a real navy into existence.

That was the naval policy of Thomas Jefferson. There is no period in American history when our Nation was so little respected around the world and when our flag was so much insulted upon every sea as during the administration of your patron saint, Thomas Jefferson (1801 to 1809).

And I say to you here and now, may Heaven forever save us from a revival of the naval policy of Thomas Jefferson! [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a very brief question there?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman has just stated what Prof. Wilson has written with regard to Thomas Jefferson's stand on the American Navy. Has the gentleman ever read anywhere a statement by Prof. Wilson as to how Gov. Wilson stands on the American Navy?

Mr. FOSS. No. I have not read any such statement. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Now, that evidently is the real reason why my Democratic friends were so insistent against the Navy in caucus after caucus. It was to be consistent and in conformity with the Democratic naval policy of Thomas Jefferson.

Well, you had a great convention over in Baltimore. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I refer to the Ryanized-Bryanized-Tammanyized convention. [Applause on the Republican side.] After you had nominated by nine successive ballots the Speaker of this House [general applause], who has the affection and confidence of every Member of it [renewed applause], you permitted William Jennings Bryan [applause on the Democratic side] to exercise the veto power on that presidential nomination, and you did not have the courage of your convictions [applause on the Republican side] nor the nerve nor the virility as a party to override that veto with a two-thirds vote. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for just a moment?

Mr. FOSS. I want to finish this phase of the question.

Mr. PADGETT. Just for a moment. Is that the reason you want to get two battleships? [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FOSS. I want to show up the inconsistency of the Democratic Party in its naval program. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now, you nominated—whom did you nominate? "Wilson; that's all." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HILL. I would suggest that they did not nominated him. Mr. Bryan nominated him. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. FOSS. Now, what about your platform?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for just a moment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSS. I am sorry I can not yield. I want to get along. How about your platform? Mr. Bryan suggested that the platform should not be adopted until after the candidate should be selected. Just who Mr. Bryan had in mind as the candidate of that convention at that time nobody knows. He has never told us. Probably he is trying to forget it. [Laughter on the Republican side.] But one thing is true: Your candidate whom you nominated has not been on speaking acquaintance with the platform of the Democratic Party since it was promulgated.

Now, we have had a Wilson before. My mind goes back to 20 years ago in this very House of Representatives, when we had a college President, a professor in politics, a doctrinaire, a free trader, and he was the leader of your party on that side, and for a time he piloted the ship of state, but he piloted that good old ship upon the rocks of free trade and national disaster [applause on the Republican side], and the American people have not forgotten the name of Wilson. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, passing on to your platform, after you had nominated your candidate you adopted this plank in your platform:

We approve the measure reported by the Democratic leaders in the House of Representatives for the creation of a council of national defense, which will determine a definite naval program with a view to increased efficiency and economy.

That was reported from the Senate Naval Committee and was put on the naval appropriation bill when it was considered in the Senate, but a Democratic Senator made a point of order on it and it went out.

Now, the material part of that plank is this last clause:

The party that has proclaimed, and has always enforced, the Monroe doctrine and was sponsor for the new Navy, will continue faithfully to observe the constitutional requirements to provide and maintain an adequate, well-proportioned Navy sufficient to defend American policies, protect our citizens, and uphold the dignity and honor of the Nation.

That is what you wrote in your platform, and after that platform was adopted in the Democratic national convention you held three or four caucuses for no other purpose than simply to make those words a lie. [Applause on the Republican side.] Your action in all of the caucuses except the last caucus was against battleships.

And you did that, notwithstanding that in the concluding paragraph of your platform you said:

Our pledges are made to be kept when in office as well as relied upon during the campaign—

A mockery in the face of your caucus action, as indeed was your caucus action a mockery to your naval plank.

But, sir, you were repudiated from one end of this country to the other by the public press. One of the greatest newspapers in the country, in one of its editorials, said this:

Politics is a pressing personal or partisan interest. The result has never been more flagrantly illustrated than by the Clark-Underwood organization of the House of Representatives. The most spectacular and immediately serious of its follies is the refusal to sustain our moderate naval program by voting two battleships necessary, according to expert opinion, to maintain our naval efficiency at the proper standard. This action has been persisted in since the declaration of the Baltimore platform for an adequate Navy—a beautiful illustration of the worthlessness of a platform pledge, couched in glittering generality and unsupported by sincere convictions or direct responsibility.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. From what paper is the gentleman reading?

Mr. FOSS. From the Chicago Tribune. Not only have you been denounced by the press of the country, gentlemen, but also by prominent Democrats within your own party. Every man here will agree that William Randolph Hearst is a prominent Democrat, perhaps the greatest newspaper publisher in this country, and this was the message of comfort which he sent to you after your caucus action, when the naval bill had come from the Senate with a provision upon it for two battleships:

[By cable to the Chicago Tribune.]

PARIS, July 25.

William Randolph Hearst, the American newspaper publisher, in a signed statement on American politics to a correspondent, says:

"The failure of the Democrats in Congress, in defiance of their party platform, to provide a Navy adequate to the Nation's needs utterly discredits Democratic promises and Democratic patriotism. No reliance can henceforth be placed upon a party which has no regard for its own honor or the Nation's dignity and safety.

"NO PARTY FOR PATRIOTS.

"Patriotic citizens can not be expected to vote for Democratic candidates who repudiate their solemn pledges and default in personal and patriotic obligations.

"It is not wise to intrust the powers of government to a party of narrow sectionalism and small Americanism which has no conception as to the Nation's dangers or the Nation's duty or of the Nation's destiny.

"CALLS PARTY UNSAFE.

"It is actually not safe to repose the fate of the greatest Nation in the world to the care of the party which proposes to contract our national possessions and which refuses either to protect our interests abroad or safeguard our citizens at home.

"The Democracy's repudiation of its platform pledges is merely squalid dishonesty, but its default in its patriotic duty to the Nation is nothing less than treason."

What was your last caucus action upon this great subject of the national defense, which has never before been submitted to caucus action? What was your resolution?

Resolved, That the former action of the Democratic caucus in regard to battleships be, and is hereby, modified so as to permit any and all Democratic Members who desire to do so to vote in the House for one battleship only, and to permit the Democratic members of the conference committee on the naval appropriation bill to agree to one battleship.

No Member is bound by this resolution to vote for one battleship should he not desire to do so.

There never was a more stringent caucus rule put on the members of a party than you have put upon your own members upon this great nonpolitical question.

When you were a party of the minority, you talked upon that side for years about the drastic rules of the House and CANNON'S rules and constitutional rights, and constitutional oaths of Members of Congress, and the duty of Representatives to be moved only by the dictates of their own consciences; and yet you have violated all your words of the past by this most stringent gag caucus rule upon a great national, patriotic question, infinitely above party, and the American people will hold you responsible for it on next election day. [Applause on the Republican side.]

You think you are going to win. The great trouble with the Democratic Party has been overconfidence. It has been on the ragged edge of victory more than once, but always failed to land. The Democratic Party always gets an enlargement of the head, and then later loses the enlargement, head and all.

That has been your history all the way through. Instead of holding your heads high and following your own unpatriotic and uncertain leadership, and trampling upon your planks adopted in the national convention of your party, you ought to be down on your knees in humiliation and prayer, seeking Divine guidance.

I will ask the Clerk to read from a Democratic newspaper the prayer which you ought to be uttering.

The Clerk read as follows:

A HEARTFELT PRAYER.

O Lord, now that everything is coming our way, purge every Democratic soul of hot air and vainglory and insert large installments of common sense in every Democratic cranium, and oh remember, Lord, our proneness to make fools of ourselves just when we have the world by the tail and a downhill pull, and see that we don't get in bad this time.

[Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, the Republican policy on the subject of the Navy is well known to the country. The Republican Party was the father of the new Navy. It was in Garfield's administration that the first steps were taken toward the building of a new Navy. Our Secretary of the Navy at that time, Mr. William H. Hunt, called the attention of the country to our condition in his report of 1881 to Congress:

The condition of the Navy imperatively demands the prompt and earnest attention of Congress. Unless some action be had in its behalf, it must dwindle into insignificance. From such a state it would be difficult to revive it into efficiency without dangerous delay and enormous expense. These things ought not to be. While the Navy should not be large, it should at all times form a nucleus for an emergency. Its power for prompt and extended expansion should be established. It should be sufficiently powerful to assure a navigator that in whatever sea he shall sail his ship he is protected by the Stars and Stripes of his country.

On the 29th of June, 1881, Secretary Hunt appointed a board of naval officers, with Rear Admiral John Rogers at its head, to report upon the Navy, and "to determine the requirements of a new Navy."

On November 7, 1881, this board reported, and recommended the building during the eight years following of enough vessels to make our Navy consist of 21 ironclads, 70 unarmored cruisers, 20 torpedo boats, and 5 rams. This really was the first definite step toward the beginning of a new Navy. Secretary Hunt, however, was soon succeeded by Mr. William E. Chandler as Secretary of the Navy, who, in his report of November 29, 1882, called the attention of Congress and the country to the deplorable condition of our ships. He reported that the available armored vessels were only 13 single-turreted monitors, and the available cruisers were 37. He also recommended at that time that we should not repair these old ships in cases where the estimated cost of repair would exceed 20 per cent of a new ship of the same size and the same material, and this provision was enacted into law.

This was an important step at that time, inasmuch as it shut off the needless repairs of old ships and emphasized the importance of building new ones.

But the first authorization for new ships came soon after in the appropriation act of March 3, 1883, when the new cruisers,

Atlanta, Boston, Chicago, and dispatch boat Dolphin, sometimes called the A, B, C, and D of the new Navy, were authorized. The first two of these ships were cruisers of about 3,000 tons each, and had a speed of 15½ knots. The Chicago was a larger cruiser, with a displacement of 5,000 tons and a speed of 18 knots. The Dolphin had a displacement of a little less than 1,500 tons, and her speed not quite 16 knots. These ships were all built by John Roach & Sons, at Chester, Pa. The total cost of these four vessels aggregated $4,268,801.

Two years later, in 1885, Congress authorized the construction of two more protected cruisers, the Charleston and Newark, and two gunboats, the Petrel and Yorktown. This added 10,000 tons more to the new Navy, and thus it was under the administration of President Arthur we began the building up of our new Navy through the authorization of these eight war vessels above described.

Under Cleveland's administration, when Mr. William C. Whitney was Secretary of the Navy, other ships were added to the Navy; but the present Democratic Party can not claim any credit for this or prove thereby its sponsorship of the Navy, as alleged in its platform, for Cleveland and his administration were afterwards repudiated by the Democratic Party, and Cleveland in turn repudiated the Democratic Party, and especially so when it fell into the personal possession of William Jennings Bryan.

But I will overlook this and give the party more credit than its due.

During the period of the building up of the Navy, reaching back to 1883, we have had in this House 10 Republican Congresses and 5 Democratic Congresses. During the 5 Democratic Congresses you have authorized in new ships 144,000 tons. During the 10 Republican Congresses, just twice as many, we have authorized over 1,066,000 tons of new ships. [Applause on the Republican side.] That is the difference between the Democratic policy and the Republican policy on the Navy. Our policy has been two battleships a year.

Mr. Speaker, this is no time to cut down the efficiency of the American Navy. The Senate passed a resolution almost unanimously the other day, which I will read to you:

Resolved, That when any harbor or other place on the American continent is so situated that the occupation thereof for naval or military purposes might threaten the communications or the safety of the United States, the Government of the United States could not see, without grave concern, the possession of such harbor or other place by any corporation or association which has such a relationship to another Government, not American, as to give that Government practical power of control for national purposes.

Does that resolution necessitate any less Navy than we have? Should we not rather increase the Navy? Then, too, we are building the great Panama Canal and opening up a great sea heretofore isolated and making it a new Mediterranean and changing the trade courses of the world. Does not that necessitate our maintaining the efficiency of our Navy?

Not only that, but in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty we have guaranteed the neutrality of the canal. What will guarantee the neutrality of the canal? The Sermon on the Mount, the Ten Commandments, or the Golden Rule in this stage of the world's civilization? Dr. Eliot, former president of Harvard College, who has just returned from a trip around the world in the interest of international peace, in which he has visited many nations, made the statement in the public press the other day that he thought the millenium was a long way off. Then, too, there is the Monroe doctrine which we must maintain, and it takes a navy to maintain these great interests of ours upon this hemisphere as well as upon the other. So I call upon you one and all, those who believe in our national defense, to vote for this proposition which I present to you to concur in the Senate amendment.

Gentlemen on the other side of the House have been thundering in newspapers, stating how many Democrats will vote for two battleships. I urge them here and now to come to the front and join with this side of the House, which will be practically solid for two ships.

I call on the Democrats on that side of the House who believe that the country is infinitely higher than party to join with us upon this motion to concur in the two-battleship amendment.

We will have an opportunity now in a comparatively short time to vote on this question, and it is not a question that any Democrat on that side can hide behind a gag-caucus rule and justify himself before his own constituents, because this question has never been a party question. It is above party; it is a great patriotic question. In the language of the old saying, "At the water's edge all politics cease." We may differ as we please here upon the land on questions of the tariff, and on questions of the currency, but when it comes to the water's edge, when it comes to our national defense and the maintenance of the honor of our country and the respect of the American flag, then every man should be above party, he should stand for his country, and that is the question which is presented here to this House. [Applause.]

EDITORIALS FROM NEWSPAPERS.

WILSON AND THE NAVY.

Thousands of voters who had decided to support Wilson for President are reconsidering their decision to-day. They are doing so because the Democratic majority in the House has given another demonstration of its unfitness.

In the face of growing navies the world over, in the face of growing international complications, in violation of its party platform the Democratic caucus has voted to refuse to concur with the Senate in building even one battleship to defend American institutions. The reason for the refusal is well known. The Democrats want to spend on unnecessary public buildings and fake internal improvements the money needed for national defense. The method they choose to carry out their dishonest purpose—the causus—is undemocratic.

On a nonpolitical subject nearly one-half of the Democratic Members yield the good of their country to the pork-barrel greed of their fellows. Of the full membership of the House there is a large majority in favor of national defense, but political "rules," as usual, are used to overcome the public welfare.

Naturally, the voters are asking themselves if the Democrats will violate a platform pledge so brazenly within a month of making it and in face of an election, what will they not do in a year, with no election to steady them? The Democrats have furnished the first argument against the election of Dr. Wilson.

[Chicago Record-Herald, July 28.]

"ECONOMY" AND THE NAVY.

The House Democrats have held another caucus on the naval appropriation question and have again voted to authorize no battleships this year.

UNDERWOOD and other leaders opposed this policy, and it is said that Woodrow Wilson is also against it. CLARK, however, is for it—a fact not mentioned in the Hearst papers. It is contrary to the spirit of the Baltimore platform. Why, then, this stubborn attitude? The Senate would accept the compromise of one battleship this year, and what argument is there against so mild and economical a program?

The House has not been severe or consistent in its alleged policy of economy. That is notorious. Why, we repeat, this sudden passion for economy at the expense of the generally approved naval policy?

The United States is not threatened by or preparing for war. It doesn't have to compete with England or Germany in armament boosting. Still, a reasonable naval policy has been indorsed by Democrats as well as by Republicans. To stick to it is the course of mere common sense. The "economy" plea is too hollow to impress anyone.

[Chicago Inter-Ocean, July 27.]

TEARING DOWN THE NAVY.

Some sensible House Democrats are trying to get another party caucus on the naval appropriation bill. These sensible Democrats do not wish their party to go before the country on a record of willful neglect of the public defense and of tearing down the Navy.

That is the record the Democrats have so far made for themselves. In a misdirected effort at "economy" and under the influence of universal-peace shriekers and arbitrate-everything fanatics the House majority cut out of the naval bill the two new battleships which are absolutely necessary to maintain the Navy at its present strength.

When the bill got over to the Senate some of the Democrats there joined with the Republicans in putting back into it these necessary additions to our fighting fleet. The bill is now in conference, and at a caucus the other day the House Democrats again voted to stick to their "no-battleship" policy.

When the Senate amendments were made, it was generally understood that the House Democrats had realized their gross blunder and would rather welcome the opportunity to get out of the unpopular position of hostility to the Navy into which they had been led by the peace fanatics.

However, since that the Democratic Party has nominated for President a wabbling academic agitator who is for any and every uplift idiocy that promises him a handful of votes. So the peace fanatics of the House are again on top and pluming themselves on the "magnificent example of cessation of armaments" that we are going to give.

A strong Navy, at least as strong as it is now and growing with the Nation's growth, is our best assurance against war and that peace will continue.

Neglect of the Navy is particularly dangerous now that England and Germany have openly engaged in a naval race, whose probable end is world-wide war.

With its usual incompetence the Democratic Party seizes this moment to persist in tearing down the Navy.

[New York American, July 26, 1912.]

FALSE TO THE NAVY PLANK, FALSE TO THE WHOLE PLATFORM.

The action of the House caucus on the Navy question leads the Democratic Party to the brink of party disaster and party dishonor.

How can the voters of the country have confidence that any promise of the Baltimore platform would be performed by a triumphant democracy if the party insists on using such power as it actually has to break the first platform promise that it has a chance to keep?

The Navy plank of the Baltimore platform commits the party to a naval program of "increased efficiency." It recalls the fact that the Democratic Party, in the days of Cleveland and Whitney, was "sponsor for the new Navy," and it promises that that party will continue "to provide and maintain an adequate and well-proportioned Navy, sufficient to defend American policies, protect our citizens, and uphold the honor and dignity of the Nation."

This pledge has been shamelessly repudiated, both in spirit and letter, by the action taken Wednesday in the House caucus.

The sentiment of the whole American people on this question is voiced in the following striking epigrams from the Navy Department:

"Battleships are cheaper than battles."

"A strong Navy is the cheapest insurance."

"The Monroe doctrine is international law only while backed by the fleet."

"Twelve-inch guns speak louder that Hague arbitrators."

"The sea is a highway for a strong navy, a closed path to a weak one."

In the face of such an action as that taken by the Democrats in the House, what could be more satirical than the fair-sounding words written at the conclusion of the Baltimore platform: "Our pledges are made to be kept when in office as well as relied upon during the campaign."

Surely the array of Democratic promises will neither be kept in office nor relied upon during the campaign if the first of them all is to be so conspicuously canceled at the very beginning of the electoral struggle.

Men who are so openly faithless "in a few things" will never be made rulers "over many things." And this saying will prove itself with a vengeance since the "few things" are the ships of the American Navy, upon which the Nation has set its heart, and since these are the things that are to be made fewer by a bold breach of democratic faith.

The Senate has passed a bill that provides for an adequate Navy, but the Democratic Party is not in control in the Senate. The Democratic Party is in control of the House of Representatives. And the party must stand or fall by the action of the House.

Such a catastrophe as now threatens the Democratic Party can not be considered accomplished until the fatal step has actually been taken over the brink of the abyss. There is still hope, though a well-nigh desperate hope.

The American records with satisfaction the gains for an honest naval policy that have been made in the House caucus. At the first caucus on the naval program there were only 30 votes for the new battleships. On Wednesday there were 62. The adverse vote on Wednesday night stood 70 to 62.

The American will fight on to the end for the sake of the Navy and for the honor of the party.

Certainly there should be another caucus, if there is to be any Democratic Party in the presidential race.

[Philadelphia Inquirer, July 26.]

WORTHLESS DEMOCRATIC PROMISES.

We direct the attention of the Democrats of the House to the following declaration in the platform adopted by their party at Baltimore:

"The party that proclaimed and has always enforced the Monroe doctrine and was sponsor for the new Navy will continue faithfully to observe the constitutional requirements to provide and maintain an adequate and well-proportioned Navy sufficient to defend American policies, protect our citizens, and uphold the honor and dignity of the Nation."

How worthless are Democratic promises and how quickly forgotten! The Democrats of the House, in caucus assembled, once more have determined that not one single new battleship shall be added to the Navy.

Talk about the Monroe doctrine! Why, there isn't an intelligent Democrat in the lot who does not know that the Monroe doctrine is dependent entirely upon a competent Navy. And yet these Democrats intend to force the American Navy to a humiliating position below that of Japan.

That is what they will do if they are allowed to carry out their policy. Shall they be allowed?

The Senate should remain in session until the snow flies rather than permit the Navy-wrecking Democrats of the House to have their way.

[The New York Sun, Aug. 16, 1912.]

MORE PROMISE BREAKERS.

Hear the strong, patriotic voice of the Democratic caucus of the House of Representatives:

"Resolved, That the former action of the Democratic caucus in regard to battleships be, and the same is hereby, modified so as to permit any and all Democratic Members who desire to do so to vote for one battleship only, and to permit the Democratic members of the conference committee on the naval appropriation bill to agree to one battleship. No Member is bound by this resolution to vote for one battleship should he not desire to do so."

Not two battleships, but one battleship, by kind permission of the caucus, and nobody is bound to vote for even one. One or none a year; this is the "adequate and well-proportioned Navy sufficient to defend American policies, protect our citizens, and uphold the honor and dignity of the Nation," which the Democratic national platform promises with such fine sound, apparent earnestness, and presumed good faith.

Plenty of "pork" for one's district, and a grudging, miserly one battleship a year for national defense.

Does Democratic patriotism, as represented by too many of the Democrats in Congress, stop where, according to the old saying, partisanship should stop—"at the water's edge"?

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly that the advocates of peace and righteousness have not a more eminent champion. For some reason or other, one of which I may touch upon later, there has been no great anxiety on the part of the opposition of any battleship to meet the advocati diaboli. I am not unmindful that in a great crisis in the history of the chosen people a mere stripling was selected to attack the full-armored Philistine [laughter], and that at another time a certain man drew a bow at a venture and smote the King of Israel between the joints of his harness; and thus sustained, I thank God and take courage. [Laughter and applause.]

I will take as a text for my remarks the quotation from that magnificent speech of Woodrow Wilson, made Thursday last at Gloucester, N. J.

I have not heard of the farmers waiting for a hearing before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate in order to take part in determining what the tariff schedule should be. While you are feeding the world Congress is feeding the trusts.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

That is a clear and succinct statement of the political issue, and proves Lord Brougham's statement when he says:

Let the soldier be abroad if he will, he can do nothing in this age; there is another personage, a personage less imposing; in the eyes of some, perhaps, insignificant. The schoolmaster is abroad, and I trust to him, armed with his primer, against the soldier in full military array.

[Laughter.]

The Washington Times is very critical of the Democrats of the House because they have not passed during the sessions of nearly 14 months any antitrust legislation, and yet it is advocating Congress playing into the hands of the greatest of all trusts, the Steel Trust, by building two of these Leviathans, antiquated almost before they leave the ways, antiquated before their keel is laid, antiquated before the contract is let for their building, antiquated before the appropriation is made for building them. The battleships that this clause calls for by the amendment of the Senate are out of date, and no up-to-date nation would think of constructing such battleships.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. THAYER. No; my time is limited and I decline to yield.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I was just going to ask the gentleman if that would not apply to all the other navies?

Mr. THAYER. It would not; it would not apply to England, it would not apply to Germany, and it would not apply to Japan.

Mr. Speaker, the Baltimore convention was supposed to be peculiarly free from the influence of the trusts. Shall we Democrats of the House unwittingly fall under their domination? I am perforce addressing my arguments to the gentlemen of my own political faith. However divided they may be on other issues, Armageddon and Golgotha, the Hill of the Meeting of the Troops and the Place of Skulls, are united on this jingo legislation. [Laughter.]

It therefore behooves us to look suspiciously on legislation advocated by our political foes.

Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide,
In the strife of Truth with Falsehood, for the good or evil side;
Some great cause, God's new Messiah offering each the bloom or blight,
Parts the goats upon the left hand, and the sheep upon the right;
And the choice goes by forever 'twixt that darkness and this light.

As a Representative from a New England district I can not refrain from protesting against this wanton and willful waste of the people's money, to the destruction of themselves and not of a foreign enemy, if this proposition for two battleships or for one meets the approval of the House. Coming from a district which would suffer as severely as the great metropolitan centers in case of an invasion, that phantasm of intellects as keen as that of the gentleman from Alabama—that nightmare, "the last infirmity of noble minds"—I desire to proclaim why I am opposed to the further increase of our already swollen Navy. It is no false idea of economy which influences me in this matter.

If a large Navy is really needed now is the time to build it. But I deny the necessity. Let us not take counsel of our craven fears. Let us not be egged on by Republicans to such vast expenditures that our dreams of relieving the necessities of the toiling millions must fade into thin air before the hard realization of providing a revenue for all of these huge extravagances. Come, let us reason together and see whether there is one scintilla of need of increasing our armament. My district, which is a productive district, as distinguished from the trading districts of the metropolis, has evidently not heard the terrifying sound of battle afar off. These editorials which I will insert in the RECORD, from two Republican papers published in Worcester, show the feeling which is supposed to reflect the opinion of the people. If the doctrine of two battleships is a Republican doctrine, I commend to the consideration of my friends on the other side these two editorials.

Now the big navies are necessary to prevent starvation among the people of the big powers. That is the cry of the militarism of the world. The fact that it is not fundamentally true will not be observed for many years, because it is true on the surface, and the people seldom scratch deeper for their ideas. Dr. Charles W. Eliot discovered that condition in his last trip around the world, though he does not tell the story in just that way. He says he sees no chance for immediate disarmament, because of the fear which keeps up the armies and the navies. The fear is the artificial condition made in Great Britain and Germany and Japan and sustained by elaborate show of statistics. It is claimed that neither of these powers dares to discard its navy, or reduce the naval forces, or to keep them as they are, because of the supposition that in case of comparative weakness any other sea power might shut out of their markets the raw materials for their factories as well as the food materials for their people.

Then the strongest nation is the weakest. That may seem to be paradoxical, but it is one of the important facts to be considered in the consideration of peace problems. If a nation has to construct and support a great battleship to protect its people against famine in potatoes, another against famine in oil, another against famine in rice, another against famine in wheat, and so on through the whole list of food materials, clothing and household and factory necessities, to prevent the warships of other nations coming along and forbidding the commercial ships of any nation bringing supplies to the nation in need, then the world has been civilized wrong. And there is no doubt it has in many respects. The nation which has to do that, or which thinks it has to do that, is weaker than the nation which does not believe it, regardless of the power of the nation with the great navy.

Centuries ago men thought they must wear armor to fight in. That made them so clumsy they made a ridiculous show in battle. The ridiculous show of the nations with great navies now is just as much more so as the battleships and their forces of men and guns are greater in bulk than the armor of the old heroes of battle. They are overdressed nations, carrying loads that make them look foolish, and hence weakened by that much. It is entirely simple to enter into an international agreement to prevent the seizure in war time of any private property. That would prevent any attack on ships of commerce. It would in effect abolish war, because all property of nations could be exempt under the same agreement, and then there would be nothing to fight about.

Dr. Eliot does not pretend to accuse men of conspiracy in persisting in the great armaments, but what he says may be construed that way. Billions of dollars are invested in the industries which supply nations with ships and arms and clothing and other munitions and supplies for war. In the event of a world declaration of peace these billions would lose somewhat of their face value, a large proportion, and hundreds of thousands of men would be thrown out of employment. The position of the nations then is like a man holding a hot potato and not daring to drop it for fear of its smashing and burning him worse. The nations are cowards. The original idea that "in union there is strength" has been carried too far. In too much of union by nations as units of population there is weakness. Only in a nation of the whole world is there complete strength, and that will be weak in some ways until all the ideas of war are abolished. Dr. Eliot found the world hungry in many ways because of the great cost of war preparations, and yet not daring to abolish war because of fear that some monster might come along and prevent any nation from bringing food to its people.

Sweden is looking for a battleship to be paid for by popular subscription. That is the safest way, if any country must have a battleship. In that case the people know what they are buying and now much it costs them in cold cash. They can remember what they paid, each one of them, and proceed for years to regret it all they like. They will not repeat to the number of 26 big Dreadnoughts, not in a thousand years, in Sweden or in the United States.

[Worcester Evening Gazette, Wednesday, July 24, 1912.]

MORE BURDENS FOR THE PEOPLE.

It is now asserted that Germany has been making overtures, successful overtures, to Austria and Italy to the effect that they join her in the battleship building race. It is reported that these two nations have agreed to take a hand. This puts a sterner face on the problem which has confronted England to keep ahead of Germany as a sea power. It was a strain on her resources to maintain supremacy over Germany, and her navy makes a burden which the people feel. But the present prospect is that she must bestir herself to the point where she will be not only superior to Germany, but to Germany's allies. France appears a bit concerned also over Germany's activities in the naval line and announces a purpose to strengthen her own navy. Possibly France is doing this at the suggestion of England. Two nations against three would appear to be the game which is now being played among the great European powers. But back of it all is the cold fact that the people are paying for the candle in the cost of the great floating forts which the nations are hurrying to create.

If there is any sentiment in favor of battleships in the rest of the State of Massachusetts it has failed to reach my ears. The Boston Chamber of Commerce has sent me copies of resolutions adopted by it in regard to about every matter of legislation before Congress this session, but not a lisp against battleships, while the following editorial from the Boston Herald shows that paper's attitude.

[The Boston Herald, Thursday, Feb. 8, 1912.]

HOW MANY BATTLESHIPS DO WE NEED?

Secretary Meyer is displeased with the proposal of the Democrats to cut down the two-battleship program this year. He says: "We have our enormous extent of coast line; we have Alaska, Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines, and we have the obligation to guard and protect Cuba. * * * The only sure defense of the country and the only assurance for safety is for the fleet to be able to seek out its enemy on the high seas and to cripple or destroy it."

How about all this? We have never yet been attacked in our 123 years of history. We began every war we ever had. We lost by foreign bullets in all of them combined less than 15,000 citizens. Is it likely that nations which never attacked us when we were weak will attack their best customer when it has become strong? Length of coast line need not alarm us, since, in 1907, The Hague conference prohibited bombardment of unfortified places, leaving, however, their right of planting mines to prevent landing of troops. Only the few fortified spots on our long coasts need now concern us.

The "enemies" whom our fleet must pursue and "cripple" at sea are nonexistent. We can keep them nonexistent. England, France, and Germany stand ready to pledge arbitration of every question with us. Russia is eager simply for an ice-free port. She is as negligible as Austria and Italy. We are told that Japan has ordered more new battleships than we. Yes; and why? Because her danger is ten times as great. With millions of sullen Koreans to care for, with her Formosa and Manchurian possessions to maintain, oppressed as she is by taxes of from 30 to 40 per cent on incomes, she would commit suicide were she to attack the Philippines; it would involve division of her fleet. The treaty signed with her last February sidetracks practically every quarrel that might arise between us. Where, then, are these "enemies" whom these short-lived battleships must be built to cripple? China certainly will not need their attention in the next 10 years. Have we not enough already to protect us from the assaults and ravages of the little republics to the south of us?

"Our Monroe doctrine is as big as the Navy and no bigger," says the Secretary. Our Monroe doctrine accomplished its chief good when we had proportionately, to European countries, a very small Navy. We compelled England to arbitrate the Venezuelan boundary case when our Navy was about one-sixth its present size. The Porter-Drago agreement of 1907, which withdrew all danger of European aggression to settle contractual debts is ignored in the Secretary's rash statement. With the completion of the Panama Canal a defensive alliance of these countries would make them all impregnable against invasion, each coast easily sending its ships to aid the other, in case there was ever need of it, as there probably never would be.

Mr. Speaker, history and experience prove that there is not and never has been the slightest danger of aggression of a foreign power. It seems to me that there is a crass ignorance concerning the trend of modern diplomatic history; and events which have occurred in the past two or three years have not seemed to open our eyes to our impregnable position. The loudest outcry against discontinuing the Republican practice of building several battleships a year is that we will sink in the relative scale of total war tonnage. To those who have read carefully the report of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], in charge of the naval appropriation bill, his tables therein are an incontrovertible answer to such an assertion. England and Germany vie with each other in building and maintaining a great navy, while France follows close behind, and Russia and Japan have entered the race, with Italy and Austria bringing up the rear. What they are doing may have some justification from political and trade relations over there, but we who should reap the advantage from their crazy contest for supremacy are urged, forsooth, to give up all the advantages therein and join in a mad scramble for navy numericalness.

Let us see what it has cost European nations for Government expenditures. The following table shows the percentage of the total income of the nations spent for this purpose:

	Per cent.
England	11.4
Germany	13.1
Japan	24.3
Russia	26.2

Our own expenditure for Government purposes is 10 per cent of our national income. England and Germany are well represented in the cartoon of the day, entitled "Just Kids," as blowing balloons marked "Navy"; and the question is, "Whose wind lasts longer?" or, "Whose balloon bursts first?" Japan pays more than 20 per cent of its national income for Government expenditures, and the people are starving; of which the Tokyo Journal of Economics says:

Taxes on this total income, including those payable to the national treasury as well as for provincial and municipal taxes, aggregate $219,151,383, or $4.40 per capita. Deducting the taxes the net income of each Japanese amounts to $19 per year, or $1.50 per month. Imagine the lot of a man who is forced to live on a scanty income of $1.50 a month! I do not lose sight of the fact that the well-to-do pay proportionately larger taxes, thus lessening the burden of the poorer classes, yet the fact remains that a nation which has to pay as taxes as much as 19.4 per cent of its income is not in wholesome state.

The Yorodzu (Tokyo) tells us how some children are obliged to attend school without taking any luncheon, and how the when rice was comparatively cheap:

England is suffering to almost the same extent. Her increased naval armament is an awful burden that has to be poor are cutting their rations, which were never generous, even borne by the already underfed and tax-harassed working population of the world's greatest empire. Starvation and misery in dockland have reached a terrible condition. Children are dying by hundreds owing to lack of sustenance.

The attitude of the nations with great naval armaments is like that of a cat with its back to the wall facing two dogs. The minute one dog turns to another foe, the cat disposes of the other. So that no nation would dare to be aggressive toward the United States for fear not only of defeat, but also of loss of its autonomy. England will never permit another power to cut off her food supply from the United States, and France must retain trade relations with us in order to maintain her own people. Germany has been put out of commission as an attacking power for many years. Her high tariff, her subsidies, industrial and ship; her militarism and her naval obsession have driven her to the verge of bankruptcy, and in the Morocco incident the financial potentates of England, France, and the United States firmly and forcibly compelled her to be a good child and give up all thoughts of fighting. Thus the Empire installed at Versailles bowed its haughty head to the vanquished at Sedan.

The financial power is the power which makes for peace and is much more effective when invested in productive enterprises than in a "run down at the heel" battleship, destined in a few short years for the junk heap. England and France would not permit, if an attack were possible, an invasion of our rights, and no nation has the resources to begin war without financial assistance. The fact is that the United States is as strong as the combined navies of England, France, and the United States, which is 3,951,070 tonnage to 2,730,961 tonnage of all other the powers; about one-half as much again. England would never have permitted a Spanish fleet to sail if there had been any doubt of its fate. Every dollar sunk in battleships renders the country so much the less able to wage a conflict. If the cost of our Navy, $415,000,000, were in a productive fund, it would be sufficient to compel peace at any time. At the time of our greatest naval weakness we had no difficulty in enforcing the Monroe doctrine.

There is serious doubt, too, whether our Navy, as planned and as being built under a Republican administration, is at all efficient; whether England, Germany, and Japan are not obtaining better results and value, dollar for dollar, than we; whether our ships are not lacking in speed and are not too heavily armed for most effective use; whether other types of ships would not be as useful and infinitely less expensive than the battleship or cruiser. Why only the other day our whole battleship line of six ships was destroyed by submarines in mimic war.

SUBMARINES DESTROY SIX WARSHIPS IN MIMIC BATTLE.

NEWPORT, R. I., July 25.

Theoretically the United States lost half a dozen of its biggest battleships to-day in an engagement with submarines. These battleships, the Florida, Delaware, North Dakota, Utah, Louisiana, and Kansas, making up the first and second divisions of the Atlantic Fleet, was outside of Narragansett Bay awaiting the attack of the submarines. They were surrounded by a screen of about 15 torpedo-boat destroyers, all on the alert for the "enemy." Suddenly the men on watch discovered what appeared to be scopes of approaching submarines and the vessels turned their attention to disabling them. But these supposed periscopes proved to be "dummies" which the "enemy" had set afloat for the purpose of deceiving the battleships, and while these dummies were being made the object of attack the real submarines dived under the line of destroyers and came up almost under the battleships. It is said to be the first instance of the use of dummy periscopes in a naval war game. The submarines arrived here to-night, and the other warships that have been taking part in the maneuvers will come in to-morrow.

Also as to general efficiency:

United States battleships so often stub their toes on the bottom of oceans that it is plain the Navy should either make special seas for its ships to maneuver in or take to hydroplanes. Built for the political sea, the unwieldly craft of the waters hang too low for practical purposes.

Would it not be well if we must have new battleships to wait until we have a change of régime and use it to the advantage of our Navy and not of the trusts? The recent admiralty tests, not yet reported, which show the ineffectiveness of our shells; the great decrease in armor of the modern and best battleship cruisers from 17 inches to 7 inches; and their great speed, nearly 50 per cent greater than ours, show that we have much to learn, or at least to put into practice in regard to new construction. That shipbuilding interests and armor-plate companies are as active in England as in the United States, witness the following, by Mr. F. W. Hirst, editor of the London Economist. That competent and capable critic and publicist, in explaining the alarming increase in the income tax and death duties in three years, said:

If our military and naval expenditure had remained stationary, I do not think either the income tax (which nearly trebled) or the death duties need have been higher now than they were in 1908; but that would not have suited the armor-plate press.

"The armor-plate press." There you have the ghastliest danger at this moment threatening Great Britain, the war nations of Europe, the United States, and even Japan. Mr. Hirst says, commenting on "the seriousness of naval competition," that in Britain alone "during the last three years our naval expenditure has risen by £12,000,000." But anything less "would not have suited the armor-plate press."

But the note of hope is in the fact that the people are beginning to ask about the special interests and private syndicates back of the armor-plate press. In Britain there are six armament companies, representing in share and debenture capital £28,000,000, whose profits year by year would be wiped out by restriction in building of armaments by British or foreign governments. The lists of shareholders in three of those companies have been scrutinized, and are found to include names of an astonishing number of dukes, marquises, earls, barons, baronets, knights, members of Parliament, military and naval officers, financiers, journalists, and newspaper proprietors. There you have the power behind "the armor-plate press." Every noble order, every social influence, every effective agency of public discussion and of popular agitation is seen to be directly and financially interested in keeping high the military and naval expenditures. And those expenditures are voted by Parliament under pressure. Back of that pressure are the "war scares" of the "armor-plate press." And back of the "armor-plate press" are the armament syndicates. Russia is worse than Britain. Germany is no better. Are there no war syndicates with their "armor-plate press" in America? Are there no beginnings in Canada? When the ugly truth is out, the war scares will cease to terrify, and the full-blood profits of the war syndicates will not be paid.

Such a condition is a disgrace to civilization and to the religion of the Prince of Peace, which we profess. Think of such conditions existing in the year of our Lord 1912. Lloyd George aptly said:

The stain on the national flag is just as deep if that flag floats over slum-bred children and ill-paid, ill-fed, ill-housed men and women as if it were to droop in defeat on the field of war.

It is greater.

While I am opposed to the appropriating of any money for war and battleships by this Congress, if one is to be built, let it be of the best and not an antiquated one, for which the Senate amendment provides. The Secretary of the Navy recommended to Congress the construction of two slow, heavily armored battleships. A Republican Senate has placed the item in the naval bill, notwithstanding that the evidence as taken by the House Committee on Naval Affairs confirmed the opinion held abroad that such ships were worthless on the high seas and that fast battleships are needed to make the slow battleships that we have even defensible. A synopsis of this evidence is as follows:

1. England, Germany, and Japan possess fast battleships—nine, six, four, respectively—of at least 28 knots speed, mounting as heavy guns as any battleships and protected by armor of from 7 to 9 inches in thickness, which is impenetrable at the battle ranges imposed by the latest improved torpedo; therefore these ships are equal to any battleships for battle purposes.

2. Slow battleships of the Dreadnought type are defenseless against torpedo attacks at night or in a fog. (Admiral Bacon, p. 905, House hearings; Lord Charles Beresford, p. 907; Admiral Twining, p. 909.)

3. Torpedo boats and destroyers are defenseless against fast battleships, which, having the same speed and greater radius of action, can overhaul and destroy them with their long-range batteries.

4. A slow battleship fleet, although possessing a large fleet of torpedo craft and auxiliaries, would be deprived of them as a preliminary step by an enemy possessing fast battleships, and therefore would be defenseless.

5. Slow battleships can not refuse battle, and therefore must be maneuvered in large fleet in order to be able to meet any force that may be concentrated against them.

6. A fleet of such ships dominates little more sea area than a single fast battleship unit, is no menace to the movement of fast colliers or supply and troop ships, and therefore presents no opposition to invasion, which is the prime function of a Navy.

7. Our Navy possesses no fast battleships. Therefore—

(a) Our torpedo craft, supply ships, and colliers could be destroyed with immunity on the open sea by either England, Germany, or Japan.

(b) Our battleship fleets being deprived of their necessary protectors could be destroyed at night or in a fog by the torpedo boats of those countries.

(c) If our fleets were sent to sea in the most defensible formation of "double line ahead," with our auxiliary ships between the lines, the formation could be destroyed by fast battleships passing ahead of the lines and dropping mines or firing torpedoes into the path of our fleet, as shown by the prize essay by Capt. Cuffe. (House hearings, p. 909.)

Therefore our Navy is defenseless and useless without fast battleships, and further additions of slow battleships adds nothing to the fighting efficiency of our Navy.

Therefore, if we are to have one battleship, I shall offer a motion at the proper time to instruct the conferees that they ask the Senate conferees to agree to the construction of one first-class battleship cruiser, to have the highest attainable speed and the greatest attainable radius of action, with appropriate armor and armament, so that it may have the highest possible life and efficiency, without becoming obsolete.

We may not succeed at once in overthrowing this Frankenstein of militarism, but, as sure as dawn doth follow night, in the end will come the disarmament of nations. Let it come, then, not from exhaustion, but as a free-will offering to liberty. But to each of my colleagues who has this cause at heart, I say:

Charge once more, then, and be dumb!
Let the victors, when they come,
When the forts of folly fall,
Find thy body by the wall!

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to continue for 20 minutes, and that that time be not taken from the hour and a half divided between the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that he be permitted to continue for 20 minutes, the time to be added to the agreed time for debate upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I made an agreement between the leader of the majority of this House as to the time to be consumed—one hour to be allotted to this side and half an hour to the other—and the gentleman from Tennessee was also a party to that agreement; and I feel, in justice to the leader on that side of the House, who is not here, that I must object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERLEY). The roll call discloses the presence of 231 Members of the House, a quorum.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call of the House be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will open the doors, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] is recognized.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, I shall make no campaign speech. I hold the walls of this Chamber too sacred to be desecrated by a partisan harangue, and I take this occasion to voice my protest against a practice prevailing here by long-established custom.

I am opposed to an appropriation for two battleships. I am opposed to an appropriation for one battleship. I am opposed to any appropriation for battleships. If we are to take our place among the nations of the world as first standing for peace and against war, then we should declare our position by an appropriation for peace and not for war. [Applause.] But if we must appropriate for one battleship to appease the insatiable demands of the militarism of to-day, let us save at least the principle of the cause of mediation and appropriate as much to promote peace as we appropriate to build warships. [Applause.]

But this appropriation for warships will not make us stronger to cope with the nations of the world. It will only prompt like appropriations by other nations. If we increase our Navy to-day, England will increase her warships to-morrow, and then in turn France will excel England and Germany will outrival France. And then we must build again to keep pace with this mad rivalry in arms and armament. [Applause.] The grounds which are urged to-day to increase our Navy, can and will be urged again and again. Must this drain upon the nations still go on to exhaust all human resources and prostrate the civilization of the world? [Applause.]

This appropriation will not only burden the people of our own land, but it will be caught up in the spirit of war and military rivalry by all nations to be multiplied and weighed upon all the people of the world. It will wrest food from the hungry, clothing from the half-clad and the naked, fuel from the cold and the shivering, and shelter from the homeless and unhoused.

These warships, to be built, will fill the world with blood, anguish, and devastation if they are used, and their cost will bring want and destitution to the human race, whether they are used or not used.

But they tell us our commercial interests are demanding an increased Navy. I answer that this comes from a commercialism built upon trade in warships, warship supplies, and the instruments of human slaughter—a commercialism which seeks to open markets by force and to hold them by intimidation; a commercialism which would exchange both human blood and public treasure for private profit; a commercialism which is to-day calling upon this Nation to enforce conscienceless agreements made in the course of foreign investments and insisting upon war and bloodshed for sordid gain; a commercialism which would coin human life, blood, and quivering flesh into stocks and bonds and hoarded money; a commercialism which would prostrate all the charities of the world to gain an advantage in trade or to secure an increase in markets.

I am opposed to the domination of such a commercialism in the affairs of this Nation. I am opposed to the policy of peace by intimidation. I am opposed to this Nation entering upon a rival contest with the powers of the world in the vain and inglorious effort to excel in the instruments of war and human slaughter. I am opposed to draining the resources of this great Nation and dwarfing our institutions of charity and peace to bind upon our civilization the burdens of a barbarous age. I am opposed to this declaration by our Government, in disregard of mediation and the great peace movement of the world, that we are still relying upon force as the arbiter of justice and holding to the standard that might makes right.

The strength of this Nation to maintain domestic peace and to preserve order within does not rest with a standing army, but it rests with the patriotism of our people, with their devotion to our institutions, and with our guaranty of human rights and the equality of all men before the law. We can so ignore and disregard the principles of equality, justice, and right that all the armies we could train could not suppress revolt. Or we can so deal with our people and so assure them of equal and exact justice, of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, that peace and order can be maintained without a single soldier.

And our security abroad and our prestige among the nations of the world does not depend on warships nor upon naval display for intimidation, but upon a policy of equity and justice toward all nations—the small as well as the great, the weak as well as the strong, the defenseless as well as the powerful, the ignorant and beclouded as well as the civilized and enlightened. We can pursue such an unjust policy toward other nations, so alienating their support and engendering hostility, that all the warships we could build would not protect our shores from invasion. Or we can pursue such a just and equitable course toward our sister nations, so binding to us friends and allies, that all the navies which could be sent against us could not prevail over our own and our allied forces.

The mission of this Nation is not that of conquest, but to promote liberty and the self-government of men. To-day only a policy of subjugation and the holding of dependencies abroad calls for an excessive navy. The principles of free institutions not only forbids this policy, but self-government can be better taught by example than by force and intimidation. We can not teach freedom by involuntary rule. We can not teach liberty by a restriction of human rights, which we claim as inviolate to enjoy ourselves. We can not teach self-government while denying the principle of the "consent of the governed." Let us be faithful to our mission and renounce the policy of war and conquest, and in its stead hold up our beacon light as an example and a guidance for the world to follow.

The annual expenditures of the United States for the Army and Navy is, in round numbers, $300,000,000. To comprehend the magnitude of this vast sum and the appalling waste and loss to the people which it represents, it is only necessary to consider some of the services it would give if diverted from the channels of militarism and employed in the arts of peace and civil life.

If available for education, this expenditure would annually give $10,000,000 to establish and maintain a great national university three times as great as our largest university.

It would give $48,000,000 to establish a new university in each State supported annually by a million dollars each.

It would give $96,000,000 to establish 100 new public high schools for each of the States supported annually by $20,000 each.

It would give $24,000,000 to establish five new normal schools for each of the States supported annually by $100,000 each.

It would give $24,000,000 to establish five new technological schools for each of the States supported annually by $100,000 each.

It would give $21,000,000 to establish 30 new agricultural schools for each of the States supported annually by $15,000 each.

It would give $48,000,000 to the common-school fund, or $1,000,000 annually to the school fund of each of the States.

It would give $10,000,000 with which to purchase textbooks for all pupils in all schools, public and private, in all the States of the Union.

And it would give a quarter of a million dollars to each of the States annually for public libraries.

The annual cost to maintain the military of the world is more than $2,250,000,000, a sum which bewilders the human mind and defies comprehension. And the waste in war in property alone is incalculable, while the value of the human life sacrificed is without attempt at measure.

The awful waste and expenditure of war would feed the hungry, clothe the naked, shelter the homeless, and educate and civilize the barbarous and beclouded nations of all the world.

We are appalled at the recitals of history, recounting the horrors of ancient wars, the long catalogue of barbarous atrocities, the battlefields running red with blood, the wounded, the mangled, and the slain; the cries, the wails, and the moans of the dying, hushed by the tread of sweeping cavalry pressing hard upon the vanquished in retreat; the slaughter of the captured, and the anguish in the homes of the thousands dead—yet all this will be mild tempered and merciful as compared with the future, if wars shall now continue among the nations of the earth. With aeroplanes from altitudes of miles dropping bombs and explosives into cities, armies, and fleets; with concealed mines exploded by electricity; with ponderous guns of modern construction hurling death from distant fleets and entrenchments, and with instruments of death and destruction in course of invention and yet to be perfected and brought into action in the future—a declaration of war between formidable nations would drench the earth in blood and make the land and sea a crowded sepulcher of the dead. The first engagement would sweep the earth with a shower of steel and a billow of fire, leaving in the wake of destruction not a vestige of a living thing that breathes.

It is time to pause to consider the multiplied horrors of modern warfare. It is time to call a halt to the training of armies and the building of navies. It is time for mediation and a great peace movement of the world. And I want the Stars and Stripes to lead the way for the dove of peace around the earth, declaring to all the nations the diplomacy of good will and arbitration.

The advocates of battleships as a peace movement, having failed in their two-warship program, but not despairing of universal tranquillity among the nations of the world, are to be before us with a conference report recommending one battleship, which, while not ample to further advance peace, as they claim, is sufficient, until the next session of Congress shall have convened, to hold the cause of mediation in statu quo. And while accepting one battleship as partial and inadequate means of conciliation, as serving only the present, permanent support of international arbitration, they tell us, calls for at least two battleships to hold the policy of peace by intimidation from serious impairment.

And when we shall have carried out their full peace program by the construction of two battleships, England will offer the same apology to her subjects when she levies increased taxes to further augment her navy, in answer to our challenge, and France will excel England, invoking a sense of the same humane spirit, and Germany will likewise plead for peace when she outrivals France. And then with the horizon already darkened by fleets of warships, and arsenals groaning with the weight of arms and munitions of war, the great civilized nations of the earth must start upon another cycle of military rivalry and progression to excel in the implements of death and human carnage.

Not only do they declare the navy to be the only guaranty of the world's peace, but great emphasis is placed upon its strength and size and completeness of equipment. Nations are only aggregations of men, and as such aggregations are moved and swayed, and held by the same passions, impulses, and restraints. What is true of nations is true of individuals, and if the claim be true that arms and weapons are the only security for peace, then, reasoning from analogy, the neglect of an individual to go fully armed with the modern weapons of defense would be a signal for an onslaught. A breach of the peace would at once occur and society would be convulsed by mortal combat and shaken by physical encounters. If this theory of peace be sound, all laws prohibiting the carrying of weapons are a menace to peace and should be repealed in the interest of order and tranquillity among men.

No peace advocate has ever contended that war could be obviated by mediation with barbarous and uncivilized nations. But we do claim that war among civilized nations can be prevented by peace agreements. Civilized nations have already abolished the use of the chain shot in modern warfare. If nations can abolish the chain shot, mowing men down in swaths, like grain before the reaper, then the killing and the mangling of the thousands by bullets, bombs, and mines can likewise be prevented by international agreement.

I am protesting against the further increase of our Navy without a word for mediation or a single movement for international peace. I am protesting against the further increase of our Navy as a wanton waste of public treasure and a vain and useless burden upon the people of the civilized world. I am protesting against the further increase of our Navy by building to the utmost limits of our taxing power to take from the people without other effect than to add to the common burden of all mankind. I am protesting against the further increase of our Navy as only prompting a like increase by other nations without raising the relative height of our own naval force above the naval force of other nations.

I, too, want this Nation to be a world power—not a world power for war, for death, devastation, and destruction, but a world power for peace, a world power to promote all the charities that soothe and heal and bless.

To-day we behold the spectacle of armies drilling in every land, with forts and breastworks overlooking every shore and held in constant readiness for action. We behold arsenals crowded with stores, arms, and munitions of war, and men working overtime to still further increase their reserve supply. We behold fleets of warships plowing the waters of every sea. We behold the agents of every nation preparing maps and charts of harbors, ports, and coast lines, to be held in secret for military use. We behold bristling armies and navies on every hand. We behold the earth trembling under the weight of muttering artillery, all the nations of the earth in military array and their assembled forces armed with instruments of death and destruction, waiting impatiently as for an impending struggle. We behold nations levying taxes to the limit of their overburdened subjects to still further increase their military equipment. Appalled and bewildered at the scene before us, we inquire: Why all this burden upon the people? Why all these armed forces drilling upon the land and maneuvering upon the sea? Why all these arms and stores and munitions of war held in readiness and reserve? Why all this waste and burden upon mankind? And we are told with a strange consistency that this is the policy of modern civilization to preserve peace and insure tranquillity among the nations.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all who speak upon this subject may have permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all who speak upon this subject may have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will make that request later.

Mr. PADGETT. All right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman withdraws his request.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, the former chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs paid himself and his committee a very high compliment, at least by innuendo, when he contrasted the action of the Republican committee and the Republican House for several years with the Democratic caucus and the Democratic House in its naval program, and the gentleman tried to administer what he thought no doubt was very wholesome advice to the Democratic Party when he warned them against the course they have been taking. So did the Secretary of the Navy a few days ago in an article which appeared in one of the Washington papers, as being authorized by him, when he attempted to show that the Democratic Party was running upon the shoals by adopting the "no-battleship" policy. Does any Member of this House believe if he and the administration thought it would mean the defeat of the Democratic Party to adopt the policy of no battleships that they would not be the first ones who would want the party to adopt a policy of that kind? [Applause on the Democratic side.] The old doctrine, "Beware of the Greeks bearing gifts," I think, will apply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] and to the Secretary of the Navy in their advice to the House.

Mr. Speaker, has any Member of the House stopped to think that the cost of one battleship alone would be sufficient to authorize 40 vocational schools under the Page bill, with $7,500 to each school in every State in the Union, which would give to the farmers' the mechanics', and laborers' sons of the country an opportunity for higher and better preparation in the vocations to which they expected to devote themselves? We passed in this House what was known as the Shackleford good-roads bill. It went to the Senate and the Senate, in its desire to substitute battleships for good roads, struck out the Shackleford proposition and put in the two battleships, costing $30,000,000. Have any of the southern Members considered that it takes 300,000 bales of the farmers' cotton to pay the cost of one battleship, to say nothing of maintaining it after it is built? Has any western Member considered the fact that it takes 15,000,000 bushels of his farmers' wheat to pay for one of these Dreadnoughts that is soon to be thrown in the junk pile? Yet we can not have any good roads; we can not have an appropriation for vocational schools. We can only get $17,000,000 for the Department of Agriculture because we must pay to the Ship Trust and the Armor Plate Trust and people around the navy yard the money to build a big battleship. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Some weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, I discussed the good-roads proposition embraced in the bills of Judge SHACKLEFORD and myself, and expressed the hope that instead of two big battleships we should cease talking of war with Japan for just one session and enter upon a policy of helping and encouraging our people to build good roads. The good-roads bill passed the House and went to the Republican Senate, there to find its graveyard.

Gentlemen, that has been the case during every Republican administration for many years. What has President Taft ever done to aid the man who toils? The bull moose is roaring about progress and progressiveness, but what progress did he ever make in relieving the grievous burdens of those whose shoulders are bowed under the yoke of his campaign manager, George W. Perkins, of the Steel Trust, and others of his favorites and courtiers?

His maladministration brought about the worst panic that we have had for years. In his time and again in Mr. Taft's administration the southern farmer's cotton went to less than 8 cents, while everything he had to buy went soaring every day.

It was in his administration that the two-battleship policy was adopted, and in every speech he is denouncing the Democratic House for not following in his lead.

Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of an adequate Navy, but the same Democratic platform that declares for an adequate Navy says that it should be a well-proportioned Navy, and the information given us by those in authority is that our Navy is not well proportioned—that we have a top-heavy Navy, a Navy with battleships but without auxiliaries and without torpedo boats or colliers to sustain and maintain them in peace or war. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] has said that he expected to see more of the smaller ships. If we reduce the program of two battleships a year by keeping up even the number of smaller ships that this bill provides for, we will approach equality between the larger ships and the smaller ones.

But not only are our battleships far outstripping the number of our smaller vessels, but the disparity in sailors to man them is far greater. I insert an article that appeared in the Washington Post a short time ago on this subject:

NO CREWS FOR DREADNOUGHTS.

Our naval officials usually find it more difficult to obtain authority to man the fleet than to get ships and guns. Somehow the landlubber Congress is made fast to the idea that when the cost of construction and fitting out has been provided for, everything is ready for the order to clear decks for action. As a result of this halfway policy of naval appropriations, our yards are filling up with warships put out of commission solely because their crews are needed in order to make up the quotas for new ships just going into commission.

The supreme folly of legislation is reached when it becomes necessary to send two or more serviceable ships to the scrap pile—for that is what going out of commission amounts to—and yet pretend that the tonnage has been increased to the full extent of the new ship's rating. Congress has been voting two battleships a year for five years now, the manning of which calls for about 10,000 men and officers, without having made any addition to the enlisted force or taken any steps toward training the additional number of officers required. In fact, the Naval Academy is turning out fewer future admirals than formerly.

Naturally the pinch has been growing more and more acute, until to-day the Navy Department is facing the alternative of making up a shortage of 5,000 sailors and 2,000 officers, either by congressional action or taking the crews off perhaps a dozen ships now in active service. With four dreadnoughts under construction, for which no crews have been made available, the vexed problem imperatively demands prompt solution.

In view of these facts, what folly does it seem for Members of Congress to be howling for more big ships, and even some Democrats declaring that we who believe in better schools and better roads and fewer battleships are jeopardizing the party.

We do not hear any protest from these gentlemen because we can only give $17,000,000 to the whole Agricultural Department, while we give $200,000,000 to the Army and Navy, and nearly another $200,000,000 to pensions.

They do not throw up their hands in horror because the Roosevelt and Taft administrations have so depleted the Treasury that we are unable to get a few millions to educate the sons of farmers, mechanics, and laborers to broader opportunity and loftier ideals, but if we touch their fetish—battleships—they implore us, by the shades of John Paul Jones, "Don't give up the ship."

We have listened to the heralds of war on this floor till we could hear the call to arms, see embattled legions in the death grapple, hear the booming cannon and the roar of musketry, see the ocean red with the blood of heroes, hear the groans of the dying, see litters bearing the dead from fields of gory glory, catch the last bloodcurdling shrieks of human victims offered up on the altar of the god of war; and then wake up to find it all a hideous dream, and not a war cloud above our heads and not an armored Jap in 2,000 parasangs of our shores.

Gentlemen, let us turn our thoughts from bloodcurdling stories of war and try to be fairer to our constituents at home. In the early dawn of creation God placed man in the Garden to care for it, till it, and eat the fruit of honest toil. Thus the avocation of the farmer comes down to us hallowed by the blessing of Him who was "before the morning stars sang together or the sons of God shouted for joy."

To those of us who sprang from the farm there is ever present the lure of the soil, beckoning us back to our first love. To me the brightest hope of my life is that some day I may get back to the farm and live and die amid the whitening cotton and the waving corn.

With the little aid the Government is lending to the man behind the plow, more wonderful strides have been made in agricultural development than in any other line of industry.

In Alabama we have one agricultural school in each congressional district. In my district the school is located on the top of Sand Mountain, a beautiful plateau, where a few years ago lands were selling for $2 per acre which are now bringing $10 to $30 per acre.

Where a few years ago the deer stand and the turkey blind prevailed have sprung up two beautiful little cities, and around them are elegant farmhouses and prosperous, happy farmers. An intelligent, law-abiding rural citizenship all over my district has displaced the wildcat distillery, and schools and churches dot the land, where God is worshiped and intelligence prevails.

A few years ago the Government demonstrator was ridiculed by the farmers, but now thousands of plats are being worked under Government instruction, and boys' corn clubs and girls' tomato clubs are springing up in every neighborhood.

Last year a boy in my own county raised 212 bushels of corn on an acre of land, and grew it at a cost of less than 9 cents per bushel, and now the name of that boy, Junius Hill, is known throughout the land.

The man who did more than anyone else to encourage this kind of agricultural enterprise was not the President, but the late Dr. Knapp, and the South is to-day honoring herself by raising voluntary subscriptions to erect a monument to the name of that great benefactor.

A few years ago the boy with a college education thought it was belittling to soil his hands with the stains of the plow or the hoe.

Now the farmer boy is the prince, whose lofty throne none dare assail. A few years ago the farmer and mechanic parent encouraged the bright, precocious son to enter the learned professions, while the mediocre was forced to drive a plane or drive a mule. But now the cry of the soil and of the mechanic arts is for educated laborers in every sphere.

Will Congress lend its aid to this persistent call?

If we will leave off just one battleship a year and devote the price to actual farm development, the cry of back to the soil will be an assured fact.

This Democratic House has passed bill after bill to lighten the cost of the blankets and clothes which the workingman's children wear, only to meet the President's veto. We have passed bills to cheapen the price of the sugar which they eat, and of their plows, their reapers, their wire fencing, their bagging and ties, and many other necessaries, but the Senate or the President has balked every worthy step.

The people will not be deceived any longer. Their wrathful indignation drove many of the satellites of greed from this temple in 1910, and when November comes their voice will again be heard. The dawn is breaking; and the will of the people, like the will of God, will prevail.

They tried Roosevelt for seven years and have tried Mr. Taft four, and they found them so busy in a mimic warfare with the trusts that they could not heed the cries of those who needed help.

Things so went from bad to worse during each administration that those who toil could not keep the wolf from the door of those they love.

Let the armor-plate factories take a rest; let the shipbuilders have a vacation; let the sailors come ashore for a spell. Let us try vocational education. Let us aid the farmer's and the laborer's boy and girl, and not build dreadnoughts to fill the coffers of greed.

One of my philanthropic constituents, Senator Brown, of Ragland, Ala., is leading a movement to establish a great vocational school at his place. Let such good work go on. Let us appropriate a few of the Government's millions to encourage the arts of peace, and when we have done so no nation will seek war with us whom they respect, because we trust to God and right to protect our land. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I would not desire to take the time of this House in this discussion to any extent were it not for the fact I asked the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] to yield to a question, and he would not do so. In his speech he said of Thomas Jefferson that we are following him in his plan of not having a Navy. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that Thomas Jefferson, in his second administration, expended $16,000,000 for the Army and Navy, within two millions of dollars of the sum which Adams expended when actually preparing for war with France. Mr. Jefferson was in favor of peace. He knew that he had a young Nation that had already changed the Constitution on two occasions. He knew he had two countries which he would probably have to oppose by reason of the measures they had instituted and put in force, both old and thoroughly trained in the art of war by their European engagements and battles. Under his administration William Pinkney, of Maryland, that eminent statesman, was sent as minister to England in order to unravel the diplomatic entanglements and maintain peace for this small but growing country. At the same time he was expending during this second term to the extent of $16,000,000 to build and maintain the Army and Navy out of the then very small revenue of this country of small territory and smaller income. He was a President who desired peace, but was preparing as best he could for an emergency should it come.

I deny the assertion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] that he was allowing the Army and Navy to run down. On the contrary, he was endeavoring to build it up during his second administration. During his first administration he realized that his administration must economize. He expended only $8,600,000 upon the Army and Navy during that term. Under the administration of Adams the expenditures had become so large that people were crying out against them.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say in conclusion that, while I have always desired and wanted to vote for two battleships for the Navy, I realize that in union there is strength, and that the successful government of this country depends on majority rule if it wishes to succeed in the administration of its affairs. The three Democratic caucuses which have discussed this matter decided against the building of any batttleships, but at the fourth it was decided to release all Members to vote for one battleship if they so desired, and while I desire two ships I propose to abide by the rules of caucus and vote for one battleship, and I hope that at the next session we shall authorize the building of another. I believe the Democratic Party in caucus is able to say what is best for the interest of the Nation and I know there is no intention of that great party to in anywise lessen its strength and efficiency. Everybody wants an adequate Navy; it is only a question of how fast we can build the ships and man them, and as fast as that can be done they will be built.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The Democrats have not decided on one battleship, if I understand the proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] has expired.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KINKEAD].

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I stated yesterday that on two occasions had I voted against my colleagues on the Democratic side of the Chamber. On one occasion, following the distinguished leadership of the then minority leader, the present Speaker of the House [Mr. CLARK], I voted to establish a tariff commission. The second occasion was somewhat similar to this. The question of battleships was before the House, and, caucus action having been taken, it was decided by the Democratic Party to stand for two battleships. Believing that the sentiment of the country was in favor of the more liberal policy with regard to battleships, I disregarded caucus instructions on that occasion, as I propose to disregard them on this one. And may I say to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM], who has just taken his seat, that this is not a caucus question. This is not a Democratic question which confronts us at this hour. The Democratic Party solemnly pledged itself to build at least two battleships each year for the Navy.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I can not yield at this time. If I have any time remaining at the end of my speech I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. So that I say that no man on the Democratic side of the House need feel any compunction to-day when he does as many of us will do—vote at this time for two battleships.

Personally, I am not prepared to set up my judgment against the judgment of this Nation. All of us realize that probably 90 per cent of the newspapers and magazines of this Nation are in favor of building two battleships, and I would say that represents at least the same percentage of the people of the United States; and I propose to vote to-day as an American, setting myself as an American before my partisan allegiance. [Applause.]

But I want to say to the gentlemen in charge of the bill on this side of the House, that when he quotes to me William Randolph Hearst, he quotes a poor political mentor, and if I should be driven at this time to vote against my convictions it would be because of the advocacy of this gentleman of the battleship program which I propose to support. [Applause.]

I am not one of those who believe that this is done in a spirit of commercialism. I am not prepared to say that the men who are foremost in the activities in behalf of two battleships are doing so to support a shipbuilding trust. But even if they were, I would do as I am going to do at this hour—vote for two battleships—because that monopoly at most can continue only until March 4, next year, when we shall have seated in yonder chair in the White House a Democrat of the Jeffersonian type [applause on the Democratic side], a Democrat who is to-day without a peer in the long line of distinguished Democrats in this Nation. I refer to the distinguished governor of my honored State, Woodrow Wilson. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I hope to see the day arrive when battleships are no longer required. I believe that before the battleships which we are now about to authorize shall have been built we will have taken our place among the nations that are perfecting their plans for the development of airships, and I believe that the money we are expending now would be better expended if we should invite the best minds engaged in aerial shipbuilding to this Nation and pay them an adequate sum for their services. But, gentlemen, I hope to see the time come when battleships and airships other than those used in commercial activities will be thrown into the scrap heap and the money thus saved expended upon good roads and the improvement of our waterways. I hope to see the time when less honor will be done to the men who wear the saber and carry a gun. And I believe that I can fittingly conclude at this time by reading a short extract from one who has long since passed away, but whose name will be honored as long as American citizenship holds sway, no matter how we may differ on theological subjects—and I am as far from Ingersoll as the North Pole is from the South. Standing at the tomb of the great Napoleon, he said:

A little while ago I stood by the grave of the old Napoleon—a magnificent tomb of gilt and gold, built almost for a deity dead—and gazed upon the sarcophagus of rare and priceless marble, where rest at last the ashes of that restless man. I leaned over the balustrade and thought about the career of the greatest soldier of the modern world.

I saw him upon the banks of the Seine, contemplating suicide. I saw him at Toulon. I saw him putting down the mob in the streets of Paris. I saw him at the head of the army of Italy. I saw him crossing the bridge of Lodi, with the tricolor in his hand. I saw him in Egypt, in the shadows of the pyramids. I saw him conquer the Alps and mingle the eagles of France with the eagles of the crags. I saw him in Russia, where the infantry of the snow and the cavalry of the wild blasts scattered his legions like winter's withered leaves. I saw him at Leipzig in defeat and disaster, driven by a million bayonets back upon Paris, clutched like a wild beast, banished to Elba. I saw him escape and retake an empire by the force of his genius. I saw him upon the frightful field of Waterloo, where chance and fate combined to wreck the fortunes of their former king. And I saw him at St. Helena, with his hands crossed behind him, gazing out upon the sad and solemn sea.

I thought of the orphans and widows he had made, of the tears that had been shed for his glory, and of the only woman who ever loved him pushed from his heart by the cold hand of ambition. And I said I would rather have been a French peasant and worn wooden shoes. I would rather have lived in a hut, with a vine growing over the door and the grapes growing purple in the kisses of the autumn sun. I would rather have been that poor peasant, with my loving wife by my side, knitting as the day died out of the sky, with my children upon my knees and their arms about me—I would rather have been that man and gone down to the tongueless silence of the dreamless dust than to have been that imperial impersonation of force and murder known as "Napoleon the Great."

And, gentlemen, as man develops he places a greater value upon his own rights. Liberty becomes a grander and a diviner thing.

As he values his own rights he begins to value the rights of others. And when all men give to all others the rights they claim for themselves this world will be civilized and warships will cease to be a bone of contention. [Applause.]

I hope that this House will adopt the Senate amendment and will vote for two battleships, believing at this time that this program meets with the almost unanimous demands of this Nation and will in the end bring us closer to the Master's desire of "Peace on earth, good will to men." [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HARRIS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HARRIS] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, a majority of this House are now looking forward eagerly to the day that they think is coming, when they are going to take possession of all the affairs, foreign and domestic, of this great Nation. They are claiming just now that they are the only Members of this House who are filled with patriotism and with patriotic purpose.

While I do not believe the day of your dreams is to arrive, I yet want to say something to you about your program, as you have laid it out in this Congress up to this hour. You are asking to take possession and control and guidance of all the affairs of this great people, with its expanding national life and its new points of contact with all the other peoples of the world in their expanding national life. I hope that the day will never come, if your dreams come true, when you will find yourselves in the position where you are confronted with the mailed fist of other nations, with the honor and the dignity and the safety of this people to be responsible for; and as the result of your proposed program now in matters of national defense, and in your program of opening the markets of the world to all the opposing forces of the earth, I do not wish you so ill, gentlemen, if perchance you come to power, as that you shall find yourselves with hands unweaponed and bare as those of a new-born child when a humiliated people—humiliated by superior force of arms—distressed by reason of interference with their industries, may rise and quote these words to you reproachfully:

You take my house when you do take the prop that doth support my house. You take my life when you do take the means whereby I live.

If that day comes, I shall be sorry for it. I do not want to see it come, because even if political success comes to you, although I am a Republican, I shall still be a citizen and a lover of this country; and in whosesoever hands the power may rest, I want it to be supported by the means of maintaining the dignity, the honor, and the comfort of this great people. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FOSS. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PICKETT].

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Speaker, the declaration in the recent national Democratic platform adopted in Baltimore, "Our pledges are made to be kept when in office as well as relied upon during the campaign," is, in view of the attitude of the Democratic side of the House, on the pending question, a species of political humor.

We have witnessed the Democratic Party caucus take action adverse to the resolutions adopted in their recent national convention and again we have beheld them heroically endeavoring to hold another caucus and finally succeeding in doing so after a compromise with themselves.

This is no departure from their usual rule. When the act providing for publicity of campaign expenses was pending before the House, an amendment was offered by a Republican Member, making it applicable to primary as well as general elections. This amendment was vigorously opposed by the Democratic side of the House and although it prevailed in Committee of the Whole, was, on the motion to recommit, made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], the chairman of the committee, defeated in the House. The amendment was afterwards added in the Senate and finally incorporated in the law, but it became a part of the law only because of the position taken by the Republican Senate, supported by the Republican Members of the House.

When the resolution submitting the amendment to the Constitution, providing for the election of the United States Senators by direct vote of the people was introduced, during this Congress, by a gentleman upon that side of the aisle, it also provided for a further amendment to the Constitution, withdrawing the supervisory power of control of the Federal Government over the places and manner of electing United States Senators, which additional amendment was not only objectionable in itself, but if adopted would have placed in jeopardy the approval of the whole amendment when submitted to the various States. The purpose of this further amendment was fully discussed at the time and vigorously opposed by the Republican side of the House. It was carried in the House by the Democratic side. Fortunately the gentlemen upon that side of the aisle were finally forced to accept the resolution in the form in which it was passed and submited to the people, by the action of the Republican Senate and the Republican Members of the House. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Further instances could be cited if time permitted. I am simply alluding to these now in view of the language quoted from the Democratic platform, that "Our pledges are made to be kept when in office as well as relied upon during the campaign." [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FOSS. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR].

Mr. FARR. The people want two battleships, not because they desire war, but to protect the country and to prevent war. It is a duty you owe and I owe to the people to build up the Navy and to make it as forceful as the requirements of peace necessitate, and as vigorous and formidable as the exigencies of modern warfare demand. Then we shall have peace with honor and not humiliation; and if it be war, we shall be ready with a mighty power at sea, and its inspiration to a strong, patriotic, but peaceful people to meet any emergency that may arise. God grant that we shall never have another war, but we must be ready. Unpreparedness in the past has been the most costly part of war in loss of life, health, and treasure, and wars have occurred that military and naval adequacy would have prevented. The people have learned this lesson, and favor as powerful defenses as the country can afford. The masses know they have to assume the responsibilities of war and must fight the battles and suffer the losses in life and money. They know that wars draw their lifeblood and resources from the home of the man on the farm, in the workshop and mine, and from the toilers in general.

With the great unrest that prevails throughout the world; with England, Germany, Russia, and Japan expending vast sums on naval expansion; with the responsibilities of the Panama Canal and the Monroe doctrine more and more a vital question, it is not the time to curtail naval expenditures, but to add to our naval strength.

Let us maintain our position as a first-class naval power. Many reasons, both commercial and military, strongly urge a naval increase. It is not a partisan or party question, but a national and patriotic duty.

Mr. FOSS. I have one speech more on this side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] has six minutes remaining.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HAMILTON].

[Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to enter into a lengthy or elaborate discussion of the question of the naval program. I may say that the Navy consists of a great deal more than battleships. We have in the Navy ships and guns and powder and men, but the greatest of these are the men. [Applause.] In this program we are providing what we think is a reasonable, proper, and adequate supply of new vessels to the Navy. We have added 4,000 additional men to the enlisted personnel. We have added 400 marines. We have added 13 marine officers. We have added 30 paymasters. We have provided for a world-wide wireless-telegraph system for the protection and guidance and use of the Navy, as well as the service of the American people and the service of humanity, to protect it in the time of peril and disaster. [Applause.] That wireless system will cost a million dollars. We have added a Medical Reserve Corps and a Dental Corps to the Navy to take care of the health and preserve the vigor and strength of the men who enlist in the Navy for the protection of our people.

I do not wish to make boasts, but, as the gentlemen upon the other side have seen fit to criticize, we are willing to lay this bill which will be passed by a Democratic House down beside any bill passed in the last 20 years. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It has more and better constructive legislation in it. It has more in it for the betterment and the real upbuilding of the American Navy than any previous bill that has had the indorsement of the Congress in the last 20 years. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I have nothing further to say upon the matter and am willing for the gentleman to conclude his remarks and let us have a vote.

I will add, Mr. Speaker, that I said that a number of auxiliary vessels had been added, and I will mention the fuel ship, the submarine, and other vessels that round out and make a well-proportioned and developed Navy, in a proper way. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I have a birthright in the Society of Friends, and they bear testimony for peace and likewise against slavery. My earliest recollection is of the good old Quaker minister quoting the words, I believe, of the Prophet Isaiah, that the day would come when the spears should be beaten into plough shares and the swords into pruning hooks.

Over 3,000 years have passed by. We have got to take humanity as we find it. We have nearly one hundred millions of people in the United States; we have the Monroe doctrine; we have a greater coast line than any nation on earth; we have the Panama Canal near completion, and are now putting out our hand to enforce the Monroe doctrine. There is Cuba, for whom we are responsible; Porto Rico added, the Philippines, the Sandwich Islands; we are keeping peace down in Central America, in San Domingo, and enforcing the Monroe doctrine, saying to all the world, "Keep your hands off," and the only way we can enforce that doctrine is to follow the example set by President Cleveland touching the boundary of Venezuela. Are you going to do it by holding prayer meetings? God knows I wish that all the world would stop war, but you have got to deal with the human race as you find it.

Look at China, with four hundred millions of people. Her territory is divided into zones dominated by Germany, by France, and by Great Britain. There you are! She has no navy, no proper means for public defense, and little Japan dominates her.

Now, from a practical standpoint, an efficient Navy is an insurance policy. Nobody will attack us if we are well prepared; not if we keep and maintain an efficient Navy. Take the nations of the Old World. Take Germany, France, or Great Britain, and we would be powerless before them without an efficient Navy. Therefore the best way to keep peace with nations, as well as with individuals, if they attempt to punish you or deprive you of your territory or your rights, is to say, "You have got me to reckon with," and the best way to keep peace in the present conditions, and will be for many decades, and perchance centuries to come, is to be prepared, if necessary, to fight for it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Quaker, as I am by birthright, representing in part a Friends' constituency, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRAY] represents a much larger Friends' constituency, I shall support the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

With the feeling against slavery, with the feeling against war in the Northland in the great struggle for the Union, the Friends sent more soldiers into the Union Army to fight for the Union, according to their numbers, than any other denomination in the United States. I like the Friends. Possibly my friend from Indiana may think that he is making hay by his talk here to-day. I do not think he is. I shall vote to maintain the naval policy. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired, and all time has expired.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Illinois by the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 78, line 16, by striking out in the word battleships the letter "s" and inserting after the word "battleship" the word "cruisers," so that it will read "battleship cruisers."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the amendment. The motion of the gentleman from Illinois is to concur, which is a preferential motion which would bring the two bodies together. This motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts would be in the nature of a motion to concur with an amendment, which is not of so high a privilege as the motion to concur. Hence, if he attempts to amend the motion to concur, it reduces it into a motion to concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman if he thinks that is the result of the status of the matter?

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman from Illinois moved to concur with the Senate amendment. The effect of that would be to bring the two bodies immediately together. That is a preferential motion over any other. To modify it in accordance with the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts would resolve it into a motion to concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. But the motion to concur with an amendment takes precedence.

Mr. PADGETT. Not after a conference.

The SPEAKER. Has there been any conference?

Mr. PADGETT. There has been a conference and a report.

The SPEAKER. But a part of the report was set aside.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the two Houses have attempted to get together by going to conference. They have been in conference, and I think under the precedents the preferential motion is to concur. Before going to conference the preferential motion is to concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. That is true. The Chair had occasion to go into that question very carefully a little time ago. The amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts is out of order. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to agree with the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Foss) there were 61 ayes and 111 noes.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—years 78, nays 150, answered "present" 14, not voting 148, as follows:

YEAS—78.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with my colleague from New Jersey, Mr. SCULLY. If he were present, he would vote for one ship and I for two.

The SPEAKER. How does the gentleman vote now?

Mr. BROWNING. I desire to answer "present."

The Clerk called the name of Mr. BROWNING, and he answered "Present."

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I voted "yea." I have a general pair with the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. JAMES. I find he has not voted, so I desire to withdraw my vote of "yea" and answer "present."

The Clerk called the name of Mr. OLMSTED, and he answered "Present."

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have a general pair with the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. DAVIS. I voted "no." I find he has not voted, and I therefore withdraw my vote of "no" and answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on my motion to still further insist upon a disagreement to all the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman if we could not have a separate vote upon amendment numbered 26; if it is his intention to concur in that amendment when it goes back to conference? The amendment is in reference to making certain appropriations available for two years instead of one. I ask that a vote be taken on amendment numbered 26.

Mr. PADGETT. We will have no trouble about that. I ask for a vote upon my motion to still further insist upon the disagreement to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to further insist upon a disagreement to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman for two or three minutes. I wish to call attention to Senate amendment 8, which was agreed to in conference inadvertently in the form it is in, and for fear I may not privately call the attention of the gentleman to it I desire to do so now. It provides for destruction of papers in the files of vessels of the Navy that in the judgment of the commander in chief are not needed or useful in the transaction of current business and have no permanent value or historical interest; that such papers—may be disposed of by the commander in chief by sale, after advertisement for proposals, as waste papers if practicable, or if not practicable, then otherwise as may appear best for the interest of the Government, the commander in chief to make report thereon to the Secretary of the Navy.

The Constitution of the United States provides that the President shall be Commander in Chief——

Mr. PADGETT. I understand the gentleman.

Mr. MANN (continuing). Of the Army and Navy of the United States, and I take it that it is not the intention to have the President advertise for proposals for the destruction of files of papers, and so forth, and then report the result of that to the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. PADGETT. This officer by the regulations is called commander in chief of the ship or fleet.

Mr. MANN. If they will just add that in conference so it will be commander in chief of the fleet or ship and not the President, it will be sufficient.

Mr. PADGETT. That will be done.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following conferees. The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PADGETT, Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland, and Mr. FOSS.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who spoke upon the question of the increase of the Navy may be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD for five legislative days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken on this bill have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD for five legislative days. Is there objection?

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House conferees be instructed to ask the Senate conferees to agree to the construction of one first-class battleship cruiser, to have the highest attainable speed and the greatest attainable radius of action, with appropriate armor and armament.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against that, that the conferees have already been appointed. The motion to instruct is not in order at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think the motion is well taken, although he has not had time to hunt it up.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The question before the House was unanimous consent for the right to extend remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent for everybody who spoke on this bill to have the privilege of extending his remarks in the RECORD for five days?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I did not have an opportunity to speak on this bill, because there was no time. I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at half past 10 o'clock Monday morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 10.30 o'clock Monday morning. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I suppose the purpose of that is to either expedite the Unanimous Consent Calendar and possibly suspensions of the rules.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think there may be other business.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to meeting even at 9 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman from Alabama permit me a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. SLAYDEN. What will have the right of way on Monday in the way of business—appropriation bills or the Unanimous Consent Calendar?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Unanimous Consent Calendar has the right of way unless it may be set aside by unanimous consent.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on Senate bill 4862, the bill considered on yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PROGRESSIVE PROPERTY TAX.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting a petition in the RECORD in reference to a bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a petition.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is not this an ordinary petition which can be filed in the ordinary way?

Mr. JACKSON. I will say it is not an ordinary petition; it is a matter of considerable importance. When this was before the House, the author of the bill asked the privilege of stating, by means of the RECORD, the reasons for his bill.

Mr. BORLAND. Is the author the Member from Kansas?

Mr. JACKSON. I introduced it by request.

Mr. BORLAND. What bill is it?

Mr. JACKSON. It is a bill concerning taxation, and accompanying it——

Mr. BORLAND. I withdraw my objection; I thought it was another bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The petition is as follows:

A petition from Percy Daniels, of Kansas, for a progressive property tax on the holdings or possessions of multimillionaires.

To the honorable the Congress of the United States of America:

The undersigned, a citizen of Crawford County, in the State of Kansas, would respectfully represent that Kansas has twice officially indorsed, by petition of her State officers and concurrent resolution of her legislature, a measure then before Congress for levying and collecting annually a progressive tax on the property of all persons whose property within the United States aggregates more than $1,000,000 each, said tax to begin with a 1 per cent rate on the second million and to increase to an 18 per cent rate on all but the first million when the aggregate became more than $10,000,000; that the said Kansas resolution provided for the submission of a proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution, to the several States for their approval or rejection, granting to Congress full powers of taxation to remove any possibility that their purpose in said tax measure would be defeated by action of any court; and that I, the signer to this petition, am in favor of said amendment as defined in H. R. 80 of the first session of the Fifty-fifth Congress; and also of the adoption of a bill by Congress for levying and collecting such a tax; and for the apportionment of the proceeds among the States on the plan provided in said bill (one-third in proportion to wealth, one-third in proportion to population, and one-third in proportion to area); and that the first draft on this fund in each State shall be made by the United States Treasury Department for the payment of over-pensions to all pensioners who are residents of said State, and that the remainder of this fund from the proceeds of this tax shall be expended by the State authorities for such public improvements as are specified in said bill, and for the equipment and maintenance of an efficient National Guard. The legislatures of the several States are authorized by this bill to decide what portion of this residue (after payment of the pensions) of this fund shall be used for public improvements and what part for military purposes.

RECEIPTS AND DIFFUSION.

At the time the last estimate was made on the operation of this measure (in 1896) it would collect about $2,000,000,000 from a little less than 10,000 persons the first year; and the income therefrom would gradually grow less as the great fortunes of the country were cut down to the elastic limit it would establish, probably between $3,000,000 and $5,000,000, by its just, speedy, and scientific operations. On this basis New York would receive $175,333,333; Texas, $114,666,667; California, $88,000,000; Massachusetts, $82,666,667; Illinois, $76,000,000; Missouri, $68,666,667; Iowa $48,999,000; Colorado, $37,333,333; North Carolina, $36,000,000; Arkansas, $30,000,000; Rhode Island, $13,000,000; Delaware, $4,533,333; and Kansas, $45,333,333.

PENSION COSTS.

Next, the pensioners in the several States would be paid from these funds by draft of the United States Pension Bureau. The following from pension figures of 1894 gives the amount of pension then paid to the pensioners of several States as an illustration, as follows: New York, $11,937,643; Ohio, $14,737,192; Indiana, $10,841,566; Iowa, $5,760,364; Kansas, $6,048,592; Tennessee, $2,658,726; Texas, $1,030,283; North Carolina, $572,334; Georgia, $511,271.

WAR COSTS APPORTIONED.

At the same time these States were paying on war account, for pensions, interest, etc., about $2.50 per capita, which would amount for the State of New York to $14,994,632; Ohio, $9,180,790; Indiana, $5,481,010; Iowa, $4,779,740; Kansas, $3,567,740; Tennessee, $4,418,795; Texas, $5,588,807; North Carolina, $4,044,867; Georgia, $4,593,382.

INJUSTICE OF IT.

These figures illustrate the injustice to States in the pension payments and the methods of getting the funds to meet them. To the Southern States this has been an onerous burden, justifiable after the war closed, but no longer so. The Southern States have been punished long enough. The diffusion of these funds helps to make the States prosperous. It will be seen by these figures that Indiana, paying about five and one-half millions, received ten and four-fifth millions; Kansas, paying three and one-half millions, received six millions; Ohio, paying nine and one-fifth millions, got fourteen and three-fourths millions; New York, paying nearly fifteen millions, got nearly twelve millions; Tennessee, paying four and two-fifths millions, got two and three-fifths millions; Texas, paying about five and three-fifths millions, got a little over one million; North Carolina, paying over four millions, got $511,271.

INJUSTICE CORRECTED.

In the diffusion and restoration to the people of the immense fund proposed to be collected by the progressive tax bill, this injustice is wholly removed, as the whole pension burden is not only removed from the shoulders of the industrial masses, but whether a State has a large or a small pension roll, its people, as a whole, would receive just th same portion of the progressive tax. A State with a large pension roll would have a little less for public improvements and military expenses than as though it had a small list. Under this bill, 16 years ago Kansas and Georgia would each receive $45,333,333 the first year. But from this the Kansas veterans would draw $6,048,592 and the Georgians $511,271. So Georgia would have to use for the other purposes named in the bill nearly $45,000,000 and Kansas some over $39,000,000, but the people of each State, as a whole, would be benefited by the diffusion of just the same amount among their own residents.

THE ELEMENTS OF SUCCESS.

For this reason, and another of equal weight in the proposed distributing plan in this bill, in addition to the benefits and blessings this great readjusting process would certainly carry to the toiling myriads by the diffusion of $2,000,000,000 a year, it has been said, and truly said, that it carries within itself the elements of certain success whenever it becomes understood by the people.

SCIENTIFIC REPLEVIN AND SYSTEMATIC DIFFUSION.

Your petitioner, desirous of having the measure discussed and understood by the people, would respectfully represent that the bill provides that it shall take effect and be in force from and after the 1st day of January, 1914, and, while urging the passage of the bill without delay, would also request and petition you to pass a joint resolution submitting to the several States a proposed amendment to the Constitution to give to Congress full power of taxation, the same as was proposed in joint resolution No. 80 of the first session of the Fifty-fifth Congress, introduced by Mr. Ridgely. Such action on your part would give the States at the next session of their legislatures an opportunity to pass on the amendment before the date for the act to become effective. The people would then have before them a definite and specific illustration of how those favoring this just and corrective process propose to stop the "concentration" of the people's "capital," and to diffuse a reasonable part of that which has already been "concentrated" by such vicious and plundering methods as watering stocks and crushing competition by great trade combinations which have been made possible only by the vast sums already acquired through these piratical, arbitrary, and despotic processes. This whole measure embodies a process of scientific replevin and a systematic method of diffusion which would bless the whole people, including those who would be in the list of taxpayers.

The necessity for reaching this result through measures similar to those advanced in this petition is shown in the fact that the slickest band of corsairs the sun ever shone on is bleeding the people, through a process of what is euphemistically called stock watering, of millions of dollars every day—of nearly, at least, and probably fully, $25,000,000 a week.

A TIDE OF GOLD.

Yielding a steady tide of gold from the people's pockets to the capitalists' coffers, the upward of $8,000,000,000 of railroad water has sunk over 500,000 American homes beneath the sheen and glamor of its treacherous waves. The $1,000,000,000 of water in United States Steel stock has swallowed over 50,000 more, and of this over $180,000,000 went into the capacious pockets of Carnegie without costing him a penny, and thus he became great. But these immense systems of plunder are but a small matter compared with the billions and billions of dollars of what is euphemistically called "water" in the industrial stocks; and we have not touched individually on the charitable (?) Rockefeller or the neophyte (?) Morgan.

HOW GREAT HAS THE HARVEST BEEN?

The individual companies that were united to first form the United States Steel Trust had a combined capital of less than $400,000,000. They were united under the direction of Morgan & Co., who are said to have received $69,300,000 for doing the job, and $1,000,000,000 of water was added to the stock on which we are and have been paying for years interest at a rate of 40 per cent on the original investment.

Was there any wealth created by combining these companies? It represents no investment, and yet those who received this $1,000,000,000 of water have been drawing interest on it ever since, and the reported wealth of the country took a billion-dollar jump, a jump of 1 per cent on our then total wealth, a jump of a billion dollars in a night.

An article by Francis L. Stetson in the July Atlantic says that now 270,000 corporations have a capital of $88,000,000,000 in stocks and bonds, while the census of 1900 reports the total wealth of the Nation at less than $89,000,000,000—but a trifle above what the present capitalization of corporations amounts to. It does no good to cry "fraud"; it does no harm to them to prove it. This is the doings of one bunch of our 270,000 corporations.

A STUPENDOUS SYSTEM OF PLUNDER.

This watered-stock piracy has become the most stupendous system of plunder an enlightened people ever tolerated. No civilized nation ever before permitted so infamous a reign of injustice to stalk unrestrained and unopposed among their own people. No Christian nation (so called) has ever before so universally preached and commended the sublime truths of Christianity to the heathen and so completely ignored its teachings and rejected its precepts at home. What can stop the injustice, the contagion of corruption, the lawlessness of the powerful? Do you say education—a slow process of education? But the forces supporting present dominant theories, influences, and policies have more means and opportunity for sowing the tares of their heresies, can employ more able teachers, enlist more crafty ward heelers, gather more unscrupulous boodlers, and muster more ignorant dupes than the friends of justice. No! A slow process of education will fail!

A BREACH IN THE STOCKADE OF INJUSTICE NECESSARY.

Some bold and early available project of universal benefit, with positive and visible processes of relief, some sudden opportunity for a breach in the stockade of injustice that will enable the masses to see the chance for peace and prosperity beyond, where they may earn and enjoy the opportunity to rest beneath their own vine and fig tree, and that they have but to bridge the wallow of corruption and error which surrounds the stockade with the falling timbers of moldy tradition and perverted precedent of which it is made, and rush across to a new freedom and restored liberty beyond, will alone save us from continuing our now rapid march toward the maelstrom. Such is the menacing as well as disgraceful and discreditable condition in which we as a people now find ourselves.

THE BEST GOVERNED STATE RECOGNIZING HER RESPONSIBILITY.

One of the States which, in spite of her immense foreign population, is sufficiently swayed by the leaven of the sturdy and righteous Pilgrim Fathers to continue to be the best governed State in the Union, is already, though in a feeble way and with a palliative purpose, recognizing her responsibility for these deplorable conditions and bonding her people to provide shelter for her share of our impoverished.

It is a noble charity so long as we lack the nerve and sense to prevent its necessity. But with present conditions continued, we only invite its repetition. It is like putting cotton in our ears for corns. Noble charities will not retard the advance of an impossible socialism.

THE AX OF PROGRESSIVE TAXATION MUST BE LAID AT THE ROOTS OF THE UPAS TREE.

The ax must be laid at the roots of the tree. The great piles of inordinate wealth, representing little but stolen billions, must be attacked by the only force which can replevin and diffuse them and thus restore them to those whose labor and sacrifice they represent. And that is a progressive property tax.

A small tax on what the holders of "concentrated capital" can make by its use is neither remedy nor punishment. Nor is there any occasion for talk of punishment. The great promoters have only taken advantage of our stupidity and docility. Most of us would like to be millionaires. I would like to be one. The progressive tax which Kansas has twice indorsed would not make any less, but would increase their number by making it easier to become one. Fifty men with $2,000,000 each will bless more people and do more good than one man with $100,000,000. The reasonable objection to an income tax is that it will help to postpone the consideration of real remedial measures. There is no special harm in it so long as we are not ready to turn over a new leaf and become honest; but I hope we may soon have the patriotism and find the integrity, publicly and privately, individually and collectively, to become so.

For these reasons I earnestly urge you to consider and act on this petition at your present session, that the people may have the opportunity to elect legislatures that will indorse the proposed amendment to the Constitution at the next session of the several State legislatures, that we may force the lion of capital, subdued in its nature, curbed in its greed, and shorn of its fangs, to lie down in peace with the lamb of labor bereft of its envy and freed from its fear.

EXTRACT FROM THE PROGRESSIVE TAX BILL.

SEC. 21. That the proceeds of this tax in the States shall be expended for three purposes: First, for pensions for the veterans of the Civil War and also for the pensions for aged or disabled persons who have an income below a certain limit, to be established by State law, and paying the soldiers of the War of the Rebellion the difference between the coin value of the money they were paid in and gold; second, for building, enlarging, or repairing canals; for improving navigable streams and extending the mileage of navigable waters; for improving country roads and establishing a system of first-class highways; for building storage reservoirs along or at the heads of streams, for the purpose of decreasing floods and increasing the dry-weather flow of the streams; and for establishing and maintaining forest parks in the vicinity of or adjoining the reservoirs; third, for organizing, equipping, and maintaining a national guard.

SEC. 22. That pensions allowed by the United States for service in the war between the States shall be paid from this fund by draft of the Pension Bureau, or its agent, on the treasurer of each State for pensioners who are residents of the State.

SEC. 23. That payments for the balance due the ex-soldiers on account of the difference between the value of the money they were paid in and coin shall be paid by the same method as the pensions, but the time for paying this balance shall extend to double the time of the soldiers' services in the case of all who served over six months, beginning with November, 1914, in the same manner as are the pensions.

Your relator, in further support of his plea for the enactment of this measure, would respectfully refer you to his second petition to your honorable body on this subject dated August 18, 1893, and printed in Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 62 of 1894; and also to a consideration of the questions involved, the benefits to be derived from, and the necessity for so far-reaching and just a measure contained in an article on The Solution of the Flood and Drought Problem for the National Irrigation Congress of 1897, which can be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for 1898, pages 7520–7524.

All of which is respectfully submitted by

AUGUST 9, 1912.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Stuart, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 38) to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes.

INDUSTRIAL-COMMISSION BILL.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 21094, the industrial-commission bill, and agree to the Senate amendments.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask how much time it would take.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I hope it will not take more than a minute.

Mr. MANN. It will take some time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I would like to take up the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I withdraw my request.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF M'LEAN AGAINST BOWMAN.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the House resolution 687, relative to the contested-election case of Charles R. McLean against Charles C. Bowman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] calls up the contested-election case of McLean against Bowman.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, without reading the resolution, I would raise the question of consideration, and pending that I would like to ask the gentleman [Mr. ANSBERRY] to permit the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN] to make a statement in regard to that.

Mr. BOWMAN. I did not hear the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Ohio has called up an election case in which you are the contestee, and I have asked that you make a request concerning the postponement of the matter, raising the question of consideration upon the proposition.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask how much time will be allowed me for that purpose?

The SPEAKER. If the Chair was to decide it, he would allow about three minutes. That would be abundant time in which to consider the matter.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, I am advised that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] is ill——

Mr. ANSBERRY. No; I am here——

Mr. BOWMAN (continuing). That he can not wait here until next Thursday, upon the return of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY], who is the ranking Republican member of this committee. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] prepared the legal aspects in this case, and stated to me, and, as I understand, to many other Members of this House, that no law or precedent existed for the presentation of this case in its present form. My son, W. L. Bowman, of New York City, who argued this case before the committee, has been abroad at the Olympic games as a member of the fencing team of the United States. The vessel on which he sailed was disabled, so that he did not reach New York until day before yesterday, and has worked here almost every minute since. The minority view was only completed this morning. There has been no opportunity for Members to examine it in order to determine the merits of the case. In view of the circumstances I respectfully ask this body to defer consideration until the next session, when they will have a chance to examine into the merits of it, so that a proper conclusion may be arrived at.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] have 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COVINGTON].

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Speaker, two minutes will be sufficient time in which to state the attitude at this time of the majority of the Committee on Elections in the case of McLean against Bowman. It is not accurate for the contestee, Bowman, to say to this House that the postponement of this case is due to any illness or any request of the majority members of the committee. As a matter of fact, that request comes entirely, urgently, and with pleading from the contestee himself.

I want to say that neither the form of the report nor the circumstances of its presentation to the House are unusual. There is an abundance of precedents establishing the precise course of the majority of the committee, both with regard to the character of the resolution they have reported and with regard to the time in which they have reported it. Moreover, the report from the majority of the committee was filed some days ago. It deals with matters concerning the fraudulent and corrupt conduct of his election by the contestee that were fully briefed by the counsel for the contestee and the counsel for the contestant some months ago. No new circumstances have developed, no new information or evidence has been elicited. If the gentleman holding the seat from the eleventh district of Pennsylvania, in the face of the fact that the committee's report charges him with violations of law of the most flagrant character, and with gross bribery and corruption, and in the face of the fact that specific instances of deceit and personal dishonor are laid at his door still desires to have the case postponed, and is willing to have to face his constituency, without having a chance for a final vindication by Members of this House, the majority of the members of the committee have absolutely no objection.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, the falsity of the remarkable statement made here by the contestee in this case that the committee could not proceed because of the illness of myself is apparent by my physical presence here upon the floor and is not warranted by the statement which I made to the members of the committee with reference to the condition of my health. I never was in better shape in all my life. However, in fairness to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN] I say to the gentlemen of the House I did state that I would like to have this case taken up to-day for the reason that I have a malady, which comes upon me annually in August and which usually arrives before this time, the hay fever, and which compels me to seek a different atmosphere than that which can be found in Washington or at my own home.

But I never asked either the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN] or anyone else to delay any business of this House, particularly the case in which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN] is so much interested, for my convenience, for I consider the charges of corruption and bribery contained in the report of the Committee on Elections No. 1, of which I have the honor to be the chairman, to be too serious to trifle with, particularly since they affect the character of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN], not only as a Member of this House but also as a citizen of his own district, and in view of the fact that he is a candidate for reelection I shall be willing to suffer the inconvenience arising from the malady to which I have referred and shall stay here until Judge PROUTY returns, regardless of whether he will be here next Thursday or a week from next Thursday, in order that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN] may have the opportunity, which he apparently seeks to evade, of clearing himself of the charges contained in the majority report and supported by the testimony taken in the contest case of McLean against Bowman. I take it that any man who is entitled to a seat in this House would not care to carry the burden which he is compelled to carry by reason of the character of the charges made by the committee in its report affecting the conduct of this Member and his manager at the election at which he received his commission to be a Member of this body. For, as I said before, this report charges him and his manager with corruption, bribery, and making a false sworn statement to the clerk of Luzerne County, Pa., and the record in this case proves beyond question the truth of the charges set forth in this report. It can not be said, as has been said in other cases charging corruption in the elections, that the responsibility for spending large sums of money was not brought home directly to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN], because a reference to the record which I hold in my hand, particularly to the first 500 pages of it, demonstrates that you can not read 3 pages that will not contain testimony which does not point the finger of truth to bribery and corruption. And this testimony of course will sustain the committee's report.

In view of that report and the statements now being made by me, it seems to me that any man who is worthy of being a Member of this House and who desired to protect his own good name would not seek by lame excuses to prevent the House from investigating the charges which have been made against him, but on the contrary he would be here demanding his right, which is a right of the highest privilege, that these charges be immediately investigated to the end that his good name and the good name of his district might be cleared at the hands of his colleagues.

He should immediately wire Judge PROUTY, of Iowa, or, in the absence of Judge PROUTY, procure some one else to represent him, and I suggest to the gentleman that among the men on this floor on his side of the House there are several who have served on this committee and who have had a large experience in cases of this character, and if the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires he can secure the assistance of his colleague, who is amply able to take care of every question raised in the majority as well as the minority report and who I am sure will be glad to defend his colleague. I refer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania who is of Mr. BOWMAN'S political faith and is now sitting here in this House, Mr. OLMSTED.

I would not under any circumstances, nor can I conceive how any man could, rise in this House and ask that a case be continued that charged such a serious offense against the laws of his own State and against good morals as this report charges the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN]. However, if he sees fit to insist upon his demand, I am satisfied, but I want to once more assure you, gentlemen, as I have before assured him, that I for one am willing to stay here and help try this case, involving, as it does, his honor and the honor of his district, even if we have to stay here a month longer by reason of it.

Now, I do not propose to let the statements which I have made with reference to corruption in this man's district, of which he had knowledge, go unsupported. I propose to read from the record, which I hold in my hand, testimony which corroborates the statement which I have made. I might say, also, that it is conceded, as charged in the report of the majority, by the minority report that the contestee's manager, Jonathan R. Davis, expended for "special watchers" the sum of $2,393, and that his definition of "special watchers" was "possibly giving men money to go and buy Democratic votes." It appears that under the laws of Pennsylvania poll men or watchers to the number of three may be employed, and Davis's testimony as to the number who were employed designated as "special watchers" is conclusive evidence that these men were employed in violation of the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, and that they were hired with the knowledge of and for Mr. Bowman.

On page 67 of the record occurs this testimony by Davis:

Q. Who is the next you got?—A. F. J. McCanna, Pittston.
Q. How much did you give him?—A. $100.
Q. You knew that he was a Democrat?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. What did you give him that money for?—A. For the employment of special watchers.
Q. You gave him $100 to purchase the services of special watchers for Mr. Bowman, did you?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Mr. Bowman knew that you paid him $100?—A. Yes.

And Davis further testifies that he barely knew this man, and that he also had paid him $150 for services in the primaries. The record is silent as to the "special watchers" that this man McCanna hired at Mr. Bowman's request. It is thus brought home not to his manager, Jonathan R. Davis, but to the contestee, Mr. Bowman, himself that money was expended for corrupt purposes, bearing in mind always that this is not an isolated instance by any means. For right on page 69 of the record we have this:

Q. Go on with the next, Mr. Davis.—A. Lawrence Cosgrove.
Q. That is Duryea?—A. Yes.
Q. How much did you give him?—A. $150.
Q. Did you not know that he was chief of police of Duryea?—A. I have heard that he was.
Q. Did you ever talk to him?—A. I said "How do you do" to him.
Q. Is that the only conversation you ever held with him?—A. Yes; I think that is the only conversation I had.
Q. Who mentioned or urged the advisability of sending him a check for $150?—A. Mr. Bowman.
Q. Do you not know that he professes to be a Democrat?—A. No; I never heard of it.

On page 65 of the record, while Jonathan R. Davis was testifying relative to money expended for "special watchers," which he himself defined as being "possibly giving men money to go and buy Democratic votes," we find the following:

Q. Give us some more.—A. Here is one that I bought and which went wrong.
Q. Who is he? What is his name?—A. Fred Shoemaker, Parsons.

On page 68 of the record Davis testified that George H. Butler, a lawyer, received $40 for "special watchers," and that John W. Crooks, employed in the Lehigh Valley Coal Co.'s office, received $100 for the same purpose; and on page 72 of the record he testified that J. D. Cooper, of Plymouth, received $200 for "special watchers." On the same page the testimony shows that William A. Wallace, superintendent of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co., received $60 for "special watchers."

On page 75 appears the testimony of Davis that John C. Lewis, a hotel keeper of Plymouth—and a hotel keeper in Pennsylvania, as a rule, means that a man has a bar with a hotel attached—got $150 for "special watchers" from a man named F. E. Williams, who came in and handed to Lewis an envelope with the statement that it was sent to him—Williams—by Jonathan R. Davis and that it was all that was sent to him. Lewis testified that he had not seen Jonathan R. Davis about this money before it was handed to him, and we find upon investigation that $50 of this money was given to one C. H. Marks, the attorney for the township, and not the famous lawyer who so insistently demanded that the "sale be stopped." Here is the way Marks received his money, as testified to by Lewis on page 191 of the record:

Q. Where did you see Mr. Marks the next day when you gave him that money?—A. At the same place.
Q. Did he come in to see you?—A. Yes.
Q. Did you send for him?—A. No.
Q. And you had no talk with him about the money until he came in and got it?—A. Yes.
Q. Where was that?—A. I took him into the adjoining room.
Q. Was there anyone in the barroom at that time?—A. The bartender.
Q. And you took him into a side room?—A. Yes.
Q. Why didn't you give it to him in the barroom?—A. I don't know.
Q. Yes; you do. Why didn't you give it to him there?—A. I couldn't give any reason.
Q. You gave it to him secretly in the side room?—A. Yes; to use for that purpose.
Q. And when you got him inside you gave him the $50?—A. Yes; and told him to do what he could for Mr. Bowman.
Q. To get votes for Mr. Bowman?—A. Yes, sir. I gave him $10 or so afterwards.

This record is filled with circumstances and admissions fully as damaging, if not more so, than this one. Several items were left out of Mr. Bowman's sworn statement of expenses which would excite suspicion in the mind of anyone, notably the instance of the $700 paid to Davis by check of Mr. Bowman on the 14th day of November, 1910. We have here the remarkable instance, if we take the testimony of the contestee and his manager, Davis, that Bowman purchased a worthless, broken-down taxicab, which he did not inspect, of Davis for $700 and that Bowman had not examined nor used the machine thereafter up until February, 1912, the time of the hearing in this case. This, taken in connection with the fact that an erasure on the stub of the check indicated that this check was given for political purposes, added to the testimony of Bowman and his young lady bookkeeper, irresistibly forces us to the conclusion that the testimony with reference to this check is false and perjured and that this money was used for wrongful purposes, which the contestee, Mr. Bowman, sought to conceal. Then we have a similar check, or rather a check issued in December or January, 1911, in favor of one Geiring, connected with a Wilkes-Barre newspaper, who had been exceedingly friendly with Bowman. The check was altered from "political" to "duty," and Geiring's name was erased. Bowman testified that he cashed the check himself and gave Geiring $50 in gold because he thought it would be nicer.

I want to refer briefly to the fact that Mr. Bowman was a candidate on the Prohibition ticket, and therefore one would naturally assume that he represented their principles; and still we find, according to the testimony in this record, that the Nanticoke News, under date of October 14, 1910, contained the following paid advertisement, which was paid for by Mr. Davis, the agent of Mr. Bowman, out of moneys provided for by Bowman: "The attempt made by some political trickster to array the saloon men and the liquor interests against Mr. Bowman has proved futile. The question of local option will never be heard of in the House of Representatives. Should such a measure be introduced, the respectable, law-abiding liquor dealers can trust Mr. Bowman. We know his neighbors in the business in Pittston can trust him. If you doubt this assertion, we refer you to Brewer Dick Hughes or Liquor Dealer John Kehoe, of Pittston."

Eight days after this Mr. Bowman succeeded in having his name substituted on the Prohibition ticket for that of Mr. Robert R. Robinson, and as a preliminary Bowman called upon Agib Ricketts, the chairman of the Prohibition Party, and told him that he would provide anything which was necessary to procure the Prohibition nomination, to which the old gentleman replied hotly "that the Prohibition Party is not in for graft in any manner or form."

So we have the example of this gentleman who obtained the nomination on the Prohibition ticket by doubtful means—and the word "doubtful" is used advisedly—dealing with the liquor dealers, and was referring them to Brewer Dick Hughes and Liquor Dealer John Kehoe for indorsement as to his position on the all-absorbing liquor question. Mr. Bowman on this proposition has shown his ability to "hide with the hare and run with the hounds."

The minority report in this case is the weakest report which has ever been written in answer to such an indictment as the majority has made in this case. Why is that? Both Judge PROUTY and Mr. WILLIS are men of ability and under proper circumstances could have made a report which would have been both conclusive and convincing. I answer my own question by saying that they could make no such reply because of the absolute paucity and barrenness of this man's defense. He has no defense. If he had a defense, he would not be putting himself in the humiliating position of coming into this House and alleging that the reason why he wanted his case put over until next December was because of the apparent illness of the chairman [Mr. ANSBERRY]. If you will honestly give us the real reason, if you want to have your name cleared, give us the real reason why you will not face these charges. You know that to do it you might just as well write your resignation. Your only reason in turning your back upon these charges is to escape the responsibility of your own corrupt acts.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. ANSBERRY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My understanding was that this case was to be called this morning and that both sides were to be heard. I should like to know just what the arrangement is under which we are now proceeding, because apparently it is a one-sided proceeding.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Here is the proposition: Two members of the Rules Committee absolutely block business in this House. Ask some man on your side to tell you.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I should like to know whether the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN] understands that there is to be but one side heard and whether that is a part of the agreement?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that in the present juncture of affairs neither side is being heard. The gentleman from Illinois asked for a reasonable time for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN] to say what he had to say, and the other side asked that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] have 20 minutes in which to make a statement.

Mr. MANN. They are carrying out an agreement to which both sides are agreeable.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If this is in pursuance of an agreement, that answers my question.

Mr. ANSBERRY. The gentleman can get the reason from his side. I do not care to answer the question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I should like to know whether my colleague [Mr. BOWMAN] is a party to this agreement?

Mr. ANSBERRY. He is a party to this agreement.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is he a party to an agreement that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] shall make an attack upon him to which he is to have no opportunity to reply?

Mr. ANSBERRY. I do not know and I do not care whether he is or not, but I will say to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] that if his colleague Mr. Bowman, desires we will take up the whole case at this time here to-day so that he may be heard and others may be heard in his defense—if he has a defense.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANSBERRY. No; I have not time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. ANSBERRY. It is shown by the record in this case——

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. The point of order it that I understood the motion in this case was to postpone the consideration of it until the next session.

The SPEAKER. The 20 minutes time belongs to the gentleman from Ohio. If he wants to yield he can.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I do not want to yield, and I do not want this taken out of my time.

In this county there are 60,000 miners. Most of them are men of foreign birth and men with unpronounceable names, who are largely controlled by the mine bosses—by the superintendents or the officials of those mines. I hold in my hand a list of mine bosses, superintendents, and others connected with the mines as officials, and there are about 50 names on the list of men who received all the way from $20 to $140. Some of these items were concealed when the contestee filed his statement under the laws of Pennsylvania. It has been shown in this case that two of the men who received large sums of money and whose names were kept out of the report were personal friends, who had been in business with Mr. Bowman for 18 years, and the reason is apparent why he did not want their names in that statement. Those men, who had hundreds and thousands of men under their employment, used that money to coerce those men and purchase their votes under the form of employing special watchers.

I did not voluntarily agree to pass over this case for this session; but if the contestee in this case is willing to go before his people under the stigma of the indictment in the majority report, with the weak reply that was made—and the reply was made weak because you had no defense—if you are so hard pressed that you must accept this alternative and are willing to go before your people under the cloud of such a charge and once more solicit their support, in the face of the fact that I here and now offer to wait until Judge PROUTY returns, I say, if you still insist on having this case go over until next December, it must be for the reason that you fear you will be overtaken by the punishment which your corrupt acts merit.

Mr. LAFFERTY. My point of order is that the gentleman from Ohio is addressing himself directly to the contestee.

The SPEAKER. That is against the rule, and the gentleman from Ohio will proceed in order.

Mr. ANSBERRY. If the contestee in this case is willing to ask for a continuance, and come before this House and state something which is not a fact in order to get that continuance, and go before his people asking for reelection, I am willing that he shall do so, in order to get the business of this House out of the road so that the House may adjourn.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman is willing to withdraw his demand for immediate consideration?

Mr. ANSBERRY. Yes; I withdraw that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN] may extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I object to that, Mr. Speaker. I would not object to his having 10, 20, or 40 minutes on the floor in defense of himself and in reply to what I have said, but I will not consent to his printing in the RECORD that which he dare not say here. I will not object to his making a statement on the floor, but he can not put it in the RECORD under "leave to print" with my consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask that the minority report be put in the RECORD. That is only a matter of common fairness.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to print the minority report in the RECORD.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me if the minority report is printed the majority report ought to be printed also.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to print the majority report with the minority report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The majority and minority reports are as follows:

[House Report No. 1182, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

M'LEAN AGAINST BOWMAN.

Mr. ANSBERRY, from the Committee on Elections No. 1, submitted the following report, to accompany House resolution 687:

The Committee on Elections No. 1, to which was referred the contested-election case in which George R. McLean is the contestant and Charles C. Bowman is the contestee, respectfully submits to the House of Representatives the following report:

In the general election held in the eleventh district of Pennsylvania on the 8th day of November, 1910, for Representative in Congress, George R. McLean was the candidate of the Democratic Party and Charles C. Bowman was the candidate of the Republican Party. Bowman's name was also on the ballot as the candidate of the Prohibition Party.

The returning board in this district, on the 12th day of November, 1910, reported that Charles C. Bowman had received on the Republican ticket a total of 13,662 votes, while McLean received 13,844 votes on the Democratic ticket, but Mr. Bowman received 722 votes on the Prohibition ticket, giving him on the face of the returns a majority of 550 votes.

McLean served on Bowman a notice of intention to contest the election on the 11th day of January, 1911, which notice, among other things, contained allegations of fraud, corruption, coercion, and intimidation of voters, and that the said votes cast for the said contestee on the Prohibition ticket should not be counted for the said contestee because of the illegality of Bowman's nomination as the Prohibition candidate, and the contestant closed his notice of contest with the following:

"This notice would have been given at an earlier date had I not been ill and prevented by the advice and compulsion of my physician from taking part in any professional business or political affairs from the 31st of October, 1910, until the 2d day of January, 1911."

The contestant alleged that the nomination of the said contestee as the candidate of the Prohibition Party, which was brought about by the substitution of the name of Charles C. Bowman, contestee, in place of Robert R. Robinson, who was nominated as the candidate of the Prohibition Party, for the office of Representative in Congress was in contravention of the rules of the Prohibition Party and against the laws of the State of Pennsylvania applicable to the same.

To the notice of contest the contestee on the 9th day of February, 1911, served a written notice in the nature of an answer to the notice of said contestant, and objected to the notice of contest of said contestant for the reason that said notice was not served within 30 days after the result of said election had been determined, and that there was no valid reason in law or equity or otherwise why said contestant should not have filed his notice within the time specified by the act of Congress, and that the grounds of contest stated in the notice of contestant were indefinite, vague, and uncertain, and denied any coercion, intimidation, or corruption on his part or on the part of his manager in said election, and specifically denied instances of coercion, fraud, and illegal acts on the part of said contestee, as set forth in the notice of said contestant, and the contestee further alleged in said answer that even though the things were true as alleged in notice of said contestant they in no wise affected the result of said congressional election as returned.

With reference to the substitution of the name of the contestee for that of Robert R. Robinson as the nominee of the Prohibition Party, said contestee claims that this substitution was strictly in accordance with the law and the rules of said Prohibition Party and in consonance with the laws of the State of Pennsylvania.

The contestee also alleged in his answer that the said contestant had entered into an illegal and fraudulent conspiracy with sundry brewing companies and liquor dealers' associations looking to the election of the said contestant over the said contestee and that the said brewing companies and liquor dealers' associations had spent money for the corruption of voters and purchase of votes and specifies that 800 voters were bribed and corrupted to vote for said contestant who otherwise would have voted for said contestee. Said contestee further alleged in his answer that said contestant in sundry precincts in said district deliberately procured false and fraudulent returns of votes that had not been cast for said contestant and that in certain other precincts named in said answer a large number of unqualified voters, aggregating 1,000, were allowed to vote, and said votes were counted for said contestant.

Contestee then closes his answer with this statement:

"And I aver that there was no violation of law which can possibly be deduced by inference or otherwise from the notice of contest which you have served upon me and which you allege was done by me or by my agent which was not actually done by you and your agents."

A large number of witnesses were called and examined on the part of the contestant and contestee, and the record of the testimony, containing something like 700 or 800 pages, together with the briefs of counsel, was submitted to the committee. The case was fully argued by counsel for both contestant and contestee, and it has been very carefully considered by the committee.

In addition to the other pleadings in the case, contestee notified the contestant of his intention to move before the Clerk of the House of Representatives in Washington on the 6th day of July, 1911, to suppress all testimony and exhibits of contestant, the principal ground being that the contestant had served no notice of contest until 63 days after the result of the election on November 8, 1910, was determined. The said motion was duly presented in accordance with this notice.

Section 105 of the Revised Statutes provides that—

"Whenever any person intends to contest an election of any Member of the House of Representatives of the United States, he shall, within 30 days after the result of such election shall have been determined by the officer or board of canvassers authorized by law to determine the same, give notice in writing to the Member whose seat he designs to contest, of his intention to contest the same, and in such notice shall specify particularly the grounds upon which he relies in the contest."

Under a strict construction of this section of the statute the committee would have dismissed the case, but the statute is in fact merely directory, and was intended to promote the prompt institution of contests and to establish a wholesome rule not to be departed from except for cause. Moreover, no statute can interfere with the provision of the United States Constitution making each House of Congress the judge of the qualification and election of its own Members. In this case the contestee permitted without objection in the House the reference of the matter of this contest to this committee for hearing, and after having taken testimony and presented argument on the merits he is in no position to object to such a consideration of the record as will determine in the public interest whether or not he is entitled to a seat in this House.

The committee is not, however, satisfied that the reasons alleged by the contestant are sufficient entirely to excuse him from serving upon the contestee his notice of contest within 30 days from the 12th day of November, 1910, and not believing that he should be a beneficiary of his own negligence under the findings of the committee, they have not considered the case from the viewpoint of reporting a resolution to seat the contestant.

With regard to the legality of the substituted nomination of the contestee by the Prohibition Party the committee has felt much doubt. The testimony shows much maneuvering by the contestee to get one Robinson, the original Prohibition candidate, off the ticket. The legality of the substitution should, however, have been tested by filing objections to the nomination papers with the proper official under the laws of Pennsylvania and the contest carried, if necessary, to the courts of that State. That the object of the contestee in securing the Prohibition nomination was to advance that party's interest is nowhere shown. The presence of his name in two columns on the ballot gave opportunity for illegal counting of votes for him beyond doubt, and the fact that Larkin, Prohibition candidate for governor of Pennsylvania, received but 242 votes in the district while contestee received 720 is a very suspicious circumstance, but with the legality of the nomination unassailed in the proper tribunal, and in the absence of specific proof of fraudulent counting of these votes, they can not be rejected.

Independently of the right of the contestant to claim a seat in this House, the testimony in the case does show such fraud and corruption on the part of the contestee, or his agents, at the election on November 8, 1910, as to compel the statement that there was no such free and untrammeled choice by the voters as is required to constitute a fair and legal election.

The Pennsylvania law relating to elections contains, among other provisions, the following:

"* * * Each party which has by its primary meeting, caucus, convention, or board sent to the proper office a certificate of nomination, and each group of citizens which has sent to the proper office a nomination paper, as provided in sections 2 and 3 of this act, shall be allowed to appoint three qualified electors, who must be three electors residents of the division in which they are authorized to act, as watchers in each voting place, without expense to the county, one of whom shall be allowed to remain in the room outside of the inclosed space. Each watcher shall be provided with a certificate from the county commissioners stating his name, the names of the persons who have appointed him, and the party or policy he represents; and no party or policy shall be represented by more than one watcher in the same voting room at any one time. Watchers shall be required to show their certificates when required to do so. * * *" (Act of 1903, sec. 1, P. L., 213.)

The corrupt-practice act of Pennsylvania, approved March 5, 1906 (P. L., 78), provides, "inter alia":

"SECTION 1. The term "election expenses" as used in this act shall include all expenditures of money or other valuable things in furtherance of the nomination of any person or persons as candidates for public office, or in furtherance of the election of any person or persons to public office, or to defeat the nomination or election to public office of any person or persons.

* * * * * * *

"SEC. 4. No candidate and no treasurer of any political committee shall pay, give, or lend, or agree to pay, give, or lend, either directly or indirectly, any money or other valuable thing for any nomination or election expenses whatever, except for the following purposes:

"First. For printing and traveling expenses, and personal expenses incident thereto, stationery, advertising, postage, expressage, freight, telegraph, telephone, and public-messenger services.

"Second. For dissemination of information to the public.

"Third. For political meetings, demonstrations, and conventions, and for the pay and transportation of speakers.

"Fourth. For the rent, maintenance, and furnishing of offices.

"Fifth. For the payment of clerks, typewriters, stenographers, janitors, and messengers actually employed.

"Sixth. For the employment of watchers at primary meetings and elections, to the number allowed by law.

"Seventh. For the transportation of voters to and from the polls.

"Eighth. For legal expenses, bona fide incurred, in connection with any nomination or election.

"SEC. 5. Every candidate for nomination at any primary election, caucus, or convention, whether nominated thereat or not, shall, within 15 days after the same was held, if the amount received or expended shall exceed the sum of $50, and every candidate for election, and every treasurer of a political committee, or person acting as such treasurer, shall, within 30 days after every election at which such candidate was voted for, or with which such political committee was concerned, if the amount received or expended shall exceed the sum of $50, file with the officers hereinafter specified a full, true, and detailed account, subscribed and sworn or affirmed to by him before an officer authorized to administer oaths, setting forth each and every sum of money contributed, received, or disbursed by him for election expenses, the date of each contribution, receipt, and disbursement, the name of the person from whom received or to whom paid, and the object or purpose for which the same was disbursed. Such account shall also set forth the unpaid debts and obligations of any such candidate or committee for election expenses, with the nature and amount of each, and to whom owing. In the case of candidates for election who have previously filed accounts as candidates for nomination the accounts shall only include contributions, receipts, and disbursements subsequent to the date of such prior accounts.

"SEC. 7. It shall be unlawful to administer the oath of office to any person elected to any public office until he has filed an account as required by this act, and no such person shall enter upon the duties of his office until he has filed such account, nor shall he receive any salary for any period prior to the filing of the same.

* * * * * * *

"SEC. 10. The decision of the court upon the audit shall be subject to appeal; but if the court shall decide that any candidate who has been elected has incurred any illegal election expenses, or has consented to the incurring of any illegal election expenses by any person or committee, the court shall certify its decision to the attorney general, who shall thereupon cause a writ of quo warranto to be issued; and if, upon proceedings under such writ of quo warranto, it shall be decided that the candidate in question has incurred any illegal election expenses, or has consented to the incurring of illegal election expenses by any person or committee, his election shall be declared void and his office vacant.

* * * * * * *

"SEC. 14. Any person who shall incur any illegal election expenses, or otherwise violate any of the provisions of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $50 or more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not less than one month or more than two years, either or both, at the discretion of the court."

It will thus be seen that the candidate is compelled to file a statement of the moneys expended by him in the campaign, and if he had a campaign manager that manager is compelled to file a detailed report with the proper officer of the county. The act specifically sets forth all the legal purposes for which money may be spent by a candidate or his manager or a party organization.

The expense account filed by the contestee under this act on the 3d day of December, 1910, shows expenditures of $7,194.40 for the general election, and among other things contains the statement that said Bowman had paid no money to anyone else save Jonathan R. Davis, chairman, and that said moneys were paid to the said Jonathan R. Davis between October and November, or approximately within that period.

This Jonathan R. Davis was the chairman of the Republican county committee in 1910, as well as the manager of the campaign of the contestee, and his statement of receipts and expenditures filed immediately after the election recites that he received and expended the sum of $8,984.84. The examination of both Davis and the contestee of contested-election case, as shown by the record, demonstrates that both of their filed statements of expenses were false, and it is conclusively proved by the testimony of the contestee himself that instead of expending $7,194.40 in the election he, as a matter of fact, expended $9,272.70.

That one might find it impossible to make an absolutely accurate statement of campaign expenditures to the extent of $9,000 is possibly true, but there are items which the contestee failed to include in his statement, so large in amount that when considered in connection with the fact that the expenditures of these sums were sought to be concealed by erasures on check stubs and alteration of memoranda, lead irresistibly to the conclusion that the contestee in making out his statement of expenses designedly sought to conceal the use of large sums of money which he had spent in connection with his campaign.

An interesting item in this connection is one of $700 disbursed shortly after the election in the shape of a check given by Bowman to his manager, Davis. That part of the testimony of Bowman relative to this item is extremely illuminating. It is as follows (see record, p. 24):

"Q. Mr. Bowman, did you make any payments by check to Jonathan R. Davis—any other payments?—A. I did not; that is for election expenses.

"Q. For anything?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. When?—A. On November 14 I gave him a check.

"Q. For how much?—A. $700.

"Q. Did you ever give him any other checks?—A. No, sir.

"Q. You never gave him any cash?—A. No, sir.

"Q. Did you authorize anyone to give him any cash?—A. No, sir.

"Q. Where is that check for $700 that you gave him?—A. Here.

"Q. What was that check given for?—A. That was given for a taxicab.

"Q. Did he hire taxicabs to you?—A. No; he bought a taxicab.

"Q. He bought a taxicab and sold it to you, is that it?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. When did he buy that taxicab?—A. I don't know that.

"Q. When did he sell the taxicab to you?—A. He sold it to me when I gave him the check.

"Q. Was that on the 14th of November?—A. The 14th of November; yes, sir.

"Q. Have you that taxicab now?—A. I have.

"Q. When did you first negotiate with him for that taxicab?—A. When I gave him that check, or a little before.

"Q. Was it before the day that you gave him the check?—A. It was a day or two before.

"Q. Where was it you negotiated for that taxicab?—A. In his office.

"Q. What did he ask for that taxicab at that time?—A. $700.

"Q. And you gave him that check without any demurrer, what he asked, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

"(Contestant offers in evidence check, as follows:)

"No. 16170. PITTSTON, PA., November 10, 1910.

"THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK:

"Pay to the order of Jonathan R. Davis, $700.

"C. C. BOWMAN.

"In print on the margin: 'C. C. Bowman, miner, coal shipper.'

"Now, gentlemen, this is your taxicab: 'For deposit only to the credit of Jonathan R. Davis, chairman. Miners' Savings Bank, November 19, 1910, Pittston, Pa. Pay to the order of any banker, bank, or trust company. Prior indorsements guaranteed. Wilkes-Barre Deposit Savings Bank, Wilkes-Barre, Pa. J. C. Bell, cashier.'

"Q. Mr. Bowman, I desire you to look at the indorsement on the back of that check, and I desire to ask you if the name of Jonathan R. Davis is written on it?—A. No; it is not.

"Q. What is the only writing under it?—A. What you have stated.

"Q. Never mind what I have stated. What is that in writing there—the 'only for deposit' in handwriting?—A. 'Chairman.'

"Q. And underneath, what name is that?—A. No name.

"Q. Above it, then?—A. 'Jonathan R. Davis.'

"Q. And above 'Jonathan R. Davis,' with stamp. Above 'Jonathan R. Davis' read this.—A. 'For deposit only to the credit of' and 'Jonathan R. Davis.'

"Q. Have you any other checks given by you to Jonathan R. Davis during this period of time?—A. No, sir.

"Q. Will you please hand us the checks that you were requested to produce that you have now before you for examination?

"(Witness hands counsel papers.)

"Q. Your check book, I understand, begins on August 30?—A. August 30.

"Q. You have testified this $700 check was given to Jonathan R. Davis; given in payment for a taxicab that you purchased from him?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. That you will swear positively to?—A. Yes; the 14th day of November, you will find it.

"Q. Mr. Bowman, I ask you to look at the stub of your own check book and read what is written there in your own handwriting.—A. I can't read it. It is not my own writing. I can't read it.

"Q. Whose handwriting is it?—A. The handwriting of my bookkeeper.

"Q. When did she make that entry?—A. I don't know.

"Q. You know that she made it when she made the check out, don't you?—A. I do not.

"Q. This is the check to which this is a stub, and it is signed by you, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. That check was signed by you at the time it was made out?—A. I suppose; I don't know; I suppose it was.

"Q. The handwriting of the check outside of your signature is the writing of your cashier?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What is her name or his name?—A. Nina J. Robinson.

"Q. Will you read what the entry is in her handwriting there on the stub of that check?—A. (Reading:) 'Check No. 16170. November 14, 1910. Order of Jonathan R. Davis for taxicab for political campaign, $700.'

"Q. You say that you purchased this taxicab after election?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Did you tell her what this check was for?—A. Not directly.

"Q. How did she know what entry to make?—A. I told her to draw a check for $700 to Jonathan R. Davis.

"Q. Was it then she made the entry on the stub?—A. I don't know. She certainly couldn't have made it—made the entry for the taxicab—if she did not know.

"Q. Did she make the entry at that time? I am not asking you for any process of reasoning. Did she make it; did she make the entry at that time?—A. Which entry?

"Q. The entry on the stub.—A. I suppose she did.

"Q. Was it the day that the check was drawn?—A. I don't know.

"Q. Were you there the day that the check was drawn?—A. Not in the room where she was. I was in another room of my own.

"Q. I am not asking you that. Were you in town that day?—A. I was in town.

"Q. Was the check given to you after it was drawn?—A. Yes, sir; after it was drawn.

"Q. Where was it given to you?—A. At my desk.

"Q. Was it detached from the check book at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Had you used this taxicab during the campaign?—A. No, sir.

"Q. Well, of course, when you saw this entry here—for political purposes; a taxicab for political purposes—you objected to it, didn't you?—A. No, sir.

"Q. Didn't you tell her that she had made a mistake?—A. I told her what it was for.

"Q. Give us exactly the words that you said it was for.—A. When she wanted to charge it to the proper account I told her what it was for.

"Q. What did you say?—A. I simply told her it was for a taxicab.

"Q. You didn't say anything to her that it was to be used for a political purpose?—A. No, sir.

"Q. Nothing at all?—A. No.

"Q. When was that she went to charge it, with reference to drawing the check?—A. I don't know how long it was.

"Q. Well, about how long?—A. I don't know. I have drawn a good many checks.

"Q. Can't you give us some idea about when?—A. When she got ready to charge that month's business. I think that was some time in December.

"Q. Did you draw any other checks to Jonathan R. Davis outside of the checks you have offered in evidence, outside of this $700 check?—A. Not that I remember of during that interval."

Another item in the statement which is not satisfactorily explained is the one of $50 to one Geiring, the editorial writer of a local paper in Wilkes-Barre. It appears in the testimony that Bowman first directed his bookkeeper to draw the check to the order of E. T. Geiring for $50, and then, according to the testimony, Bowman afterwards directed the check to be drawn to himself; and the name Geiring was erased, Bowman cashing the check and presenting Geiring with $50 in gold. The stub originally had the memorandum of "politics," which was erased and changed to "for duty."

Another $50 item was the check sent to one William Hollister the night before the election. (See record, pp. 29 and 30.) The examination of the testimony of Hollister, who was called as a witness, as shown on pages 283 to 290 of the record, which discloses the fact that Hollister and Bowman were associated for 18 years in the coal business, and the illegal manner in which the money was expended will furnish a reason for the failure of Bowman to include the item in his statement.

Another item of like character, and used for same purpose, was $26 paid to William P. Jennings by check. Jennings is district superintendent of the Pennsylvania Coal Co. and the Hillsdale Coal & Iron Co., subsidiary companies of the Erie Railroad. (See record, pp. 184 to 190.)

Another item was the check to W. B. Bertels. It transpires that Bertels was an official of the Prohibition Party who aided in the substitution of Bowman's name for that of Robinson as the candidate for Congress on the Prohibition ticket. The testimony of Agib Ricketts, a man 76 years of age, chairman of the Prohibition Party in Luzerne County, with reference to Bertels, serves to suggest a reason why Mr. Bowman failed to file this item of expenditure. (See record, p. 36.)

In this connection the testimony of Bowman's bookkeeper, Nina J. Robinson (see record, pp. 43 to 60), her reluctance to testify, and her vagueness of memory on some questions contrasted with the certainty with which she testified on other matters, considered with the testimony of her employer only adds to the certainty that the false election statement was intentionally made and filed by Bowman.

The statement of W. L. Bowman, of counsel for the contestee, at the arguments before the committee with reference to the expenditure of $700 by the contestee for the alleged taxicab purchase, demonstrates that the purchase of the taxicab was to cover up some illegal and corrupt expenditure of money at the election.

"Mr. BOWMAN. No, sir; but he bought the taxicab for his own use. It was not really a taxicab; it was a small automobile, but it has been characterized as a taxicab.

"Mr. COVINGTON. As a matter of fact, has that machine been used since that time?

"Mr. BOWMAN. No, sir; it's still in the repair shop, or, rather, in that automobile place.

"Mr. COVINGTON. Now, the indorsement on the back of that check states that it is for deposit only to the credit of Jonathan R. Davis, chairman. What is the purpose of that indorsement?

"Mr. BOWMAN. The very first check that Mr. Davis got from Mr. Bowman for the conduct of the campaign as manager for the Republican Party—county chairman of the Republican Party—the first check, for $2,000, was deposited in his own account, and then there was an account known as the political account, Jonathan R. Davis, chairman, and this check was put into that to balance the two accounts. In other words, that $2,000 which he first got from Mr. Bowman as a contribution to the Republican Party, that $2,000 went into his own bank—was put into his own personal bank book—and he used $1,500—$1,300, which is explained in the testimony—he used $1,300 out of his personal account for political purposes, and then he put this $700 in the account to balance it. In other words, he had two bank accounts, and the one check was put in to balance.

"Mr. COVINGTON. Does Mr. Davis pretend to explain the remarkable coincidence that he should have used just $1,300 out of the $2,000 deposited, and that the purchase price of the taxicab should have been just $700?

"Mr. BOWMAN. I can only say the figures are all there in the testimony. This testimony is so voluminous that I can not cover all of these things offhand, and I should like, if you gentlemen will permit me, to file a supplemental brief on those points.

"Mr. COVINGTON. This was not for political purposes?

"Mr. BOWMAN. It was not for political purposes.

"Mr. COVINGTON. Was or was not this indorsement put upon the stub of your father's check book: 'Check No. 16170, November 14, 1910. Order of Jonathan R. Davis for taxicab, for political campaign, $700?' That is on page 17, the sixth or seventh question from the bottom.

"Mr. BOWMAN. In reading that he read all that was on the stub at the time that this testimony was taken, but if you will read the testimony you will find that this was the situation in Mr. Bowman's office: That he has there a general manager, Miss Robinson, who has absolute control of his books. She is the bookkeeper, and he leaves the accounts and everything to her. In this case Mr. Bowman simply said: 'Draw Jonathan R. Davis a check for $700.' She had been drawing a great many checks for Jonathan R. Davis, and all of them were political checks, so naturally she put down on that book 'For political campaign.'

"Mr. COVINGTON. Is that her explanation?

"Mr. BOWMAN. Yes, sir; and later on you will find also that that $700 was charged in accordance with her stub to Mr. Bowman's political account in his books, and that later, when Miss Robinson was informed by Mr. Bowman—I forget just now the circumstances, but when she was informed that that check had nothing whatever to do with political work—that it was for a taxicab—she put in this part, 'For taxicab,' and the political account was then changed and the $700 put on the credit side.

"Mr. COVINGTON. This was bought after election, I believe. Does your father's testimony, or does the evidence show that he bought that taxicab without seeing it?

"Mr. BOWMAN. Yes, sir; he bought it on the statement of Jonathan R. Davis and others as to what he had paid for it.

"Mr. COVINGTON. How many automobiles had your father?

"Mr. BOWMAN. At that time he had only one, a large French car.

"Mr. COVINGTON. What kind of a car was this?

"Mr. BOWMAN. This was a small car, one of the small Nationals.

"Mr. COVINGTON. This is January, 1912. As a matter of fact, has the car been used yet?

"Mr. BOWMAN. No, sir; not that I know of.

"Mr. COVINGTON. It is still in the repair shop?

"Mr. BOWMAN. Still in storage. It was in storage at that time, when it was bought, and it has never been touched.

"Mr. COVINGTON. It hadn't been seen by your father?

"Mr. BOWMAN. In this campaign he could only use the one automobile, the big French car, but he expected to bring that smaller machine down here to Washington. It is much safer than the French car, which can't run under 20 miles an hour on high speed, which makes it rather dangerous to get around on the city streets with. We need it for our hills and bad roads up there in the country, but Mr. Bowman expected at that time to bring down the smaller car to the city. I personally had had that car in Boston and got arrested two or three times for exceeding the speed limit, and we thought the smaller car would be safer here.

"Mr. COVINGTON. Your explanation of the payment of the $700 for that taxicab is that your father, three days after he was elected, considering coming to Washington to live as a Member of Congress, bought the taxicab for the purpose of bringing it down to Washington in place of his nice French car?

"Mr. BOWMAN. Yes, sir; that's the explanation."

The testimony of Davis, the campaign manager of Bowman, if other testimony were lacking, conclusively shows the illegal expenditures of money for the purpose of corrupting the electorate in the eleventh congressional district of Pennsylvania at the election of 1910 in the interest of Bowman. Davis testified at great length. (See record, pp. 61–78, 83–97, 240, 251–264, 394.)

It will be observed that under the law of Pennsylvania, quoted in this report, it is lawful to have three watchers for a political party in each voting precinct. The record discloses the fact that Davis, manager of the contestee, Bowman, spent large sums of money corruptly and attempted to conceal these expenditures under the head of "special watchers"—that is to say, watchers other than those permitted under the law of Pennsylvania. It is shown by the testimony of Davis himself that he employed 311 special watchers, for which he spent the sum of $2,393.

On page 69 of the record Davis testifies as follows:

"Q. Now, in all these districts for which you say you paid money for special watchers, there were regular watchers of the party, were there not?—A. Yes.

"Q. Men that were paid for that purpose?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And these men were procured, the men that you say you gave money to for special watchers, they were procured specially in the interest of Mr. Bowman?—A. For Mr. Bowman."

The so-called "special watchers" were admittedly procured in the interest of Bowman, the contestee. They were paid with his money, either directly or indirectly, by Davis, his manager, and they performed no service permitted under the law in Pennsylvania. The record also shows that money was paid by Davis to voters as "special watchers" without designating any voting place where they were to serve, and in some instances to voters whom he had never before seen. The conclusion is evident that the $2,393 Davis admitted he paid for "special watchers" was in reality money for bribery in the interest of Bowman.

Look at the testimony of Davis with reference to $25 paid to Walter Richards, a mechanic, of Drifton.

"Q. What did you give him that $25 for?—A. For the employment of special watchers.

"Q. What do you mean by 'special watchers'?—A. Special watchers at the polling places.

"Q. What do you mean by special watchers? Do you mean by that giving a man money to go and buy Democratic votes? Is that what you mean?—A. It is possible.

"Q. You gave him possibly $25 to go and buy Democratic votes?—A. No; I didn't give him any to buy votes with.

"Q. You have so testified here.—A. I will withdraw it.

"Q. Then it was possible that $25 was given him for that purpose of buying Democratic votes?—A. I will withdraw that.

"Q. That is wrong?—A. Yes.

"Q. Then you made a misstatement under oath when you said that, did you, Mr. Davis?—A. I withdraw that.

"Q. I know that you do, but that is not the point. You made a misstatement?—A. I gave him that money, $25, to employ special watchers.

"Q. When you testfied here that the $25 was given him, possibly, for the purchasing of Democratic votes, you made a misstatement under oath?—A. I didn't mean that.

"Q. Well, what did you mean?—A. I didn't mean that.

"Q. What did you mean when you said that; when you said that the money was given to him, possibly, to buy Democratic votes; what did you mean?—A. I didn't understand it that way.

"Q. Well, then, what did you mean?—A. I meant that the $25 was given to that man for the employment of special watchers on election day.

"Q. I asked you what you meant by special watchers—if it was to buy Democratic votes—and you said possibly that was what it was for, didn't you?—A. I said that.

"Q. Is that what you meant?—A. No, sir; I did not.

"Q. What did you mean?—A. I didn't mean that anyone should infer that I meant that.

"Q. Now, Mr. Davis, tell me what you meant.—A. I meant that I gave him that money to employ special watchers on election day.

"Q. You have told us that, and I now ask you what you mean by special watchers and you state possibly to buy Democratic votes?—A. No; you put that in your question.

"Q. Was it to do that?—A. No, sir; it was not.

"Q. Tell us why you said that.—A. I can't tell why.

"Q. In other words, you gave him this money to buy votes?—A. No; I did not.

"Q. Then what do you mean by the employment of special watchers?—A. That is to do special work on election day.

"Q. What kind of special work?—A. Political work.

"Q. What kind of political work?—A. To assist in getting men to the polls.

"Q. You had men there; regularly employed watchers?—A. Possibly; we had a right to employ more men if we wanted them.

"Q. Did you want them?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. How many did you employ generally?—A. I couldn't tell you.

"Q. About how many? You were chairman of the county committee, and this was done at this time to buy Democratic voters and at another time to pay special watchers. How many general watchers did you have there?—A. I can't tell you.

"Q. You can't tell that, either?—A. No; he got the $25 cash and he got $25 in a check.

"Q. You gave him $25 in check and $25 in cash?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. For the employment of how many watchers?—A. For the employment of special watchers.

"Q. For how many; how many was he supposed to employ for that money, $50?—A. He was supposed to pay at the rate of $5.

"Q. How many did you have in view?—A. That would be 10.

"Q. In addition to the general watchers he was to get 10 more men, was he?—A. Yes.

"Q. What is the difference between watchers and poll men?—A. I don't think there is any, I repeat.

"Q. Only in the name?—A. That is all."

After Davis was compelled to admit that he had made a false statement he continued his testimony and slipped in his statement as to the real use of the money for "special watchers." (See record, pp. 65 and 66.)

"Q. Give us some more.—A. Here is one that I bought and which went wrong.

"Q. Who is he? What is his name?—A. Fred Shoemaker, Parsons.

"Q. How much did you give him?—A. $25.

"Q. He is a Democrat; professed to be?—A. I don't know so.

"Q. You have been connected with politics here for years, have you not?—A. Yes.

"Q. Don't you know that Shoemaker is one of the leading men in Parsons?—A. No, I don't.

"Q. Don't you know that he has been in politics for years?—A. I don't know.

"Q. Didn't you know what his politics were?—A. No, sir.

"Q. Where did you give him that money?—A. I gave him a check in my office.

"Q. Did he come to your office by appointment?—A. No, sir.

"Q. Did he just drop in there?—A. He came there for that purpose.

"Q. That is the first you knew about him when he came to your office?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And he asked you for $25?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Did you ask him what his politics were?—A. No; I assumed he was a Republican.

"Q. Did you ask him what his politics were?—A. No; I don't think I did.

"Q. You said nothing to him about his politics?—A. I don't believe that I did.

"Q. And you said you bought him for $25 and he went wrong; by that you mean——A. I have said—I didn't say that.

"Q. It is here on the record. You have said that.—A. I withdraw that.

"Q. You want to withdraw that again?—A. I withdraw the saying that he—I withdraw the saying he had been bought. I didn't buy anybody.

"Q. You withdraw that statement you made here on the record, that particular answer, your language being: 'Here is a man that I bought for $25 and he went wrong'? You don't want that to appear on the record, do you?—A. It is not a true statement; that is all.

"Q. Then you made an untrue statement on the record, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. You did; yes. Now, Mr. Davis, what did you give Fred Shoemaker that $25 for?—A. For the employment of special watchers.

"Q. Here was a man that you say you didn't know, didn't you?—A. I didn't say that I didn't know him.

"Q. I understood you to say that you didn't know him.—A. I knew there was such a man.

"Q. Then you didn't know him?—A. I didn't know him personally.

"Q. You didn't know his politics?—A. I assumed that he was a Republican.

"Q. You didn't know his politics?—A. I wasn't positive about that.

"Q. A man you didn't know—a man about whose politics you had no knowledge, except assuming to yourself that he was a Republican—came to your office and asked you for $25, and you gave him the $25?—A. Yes.

"Q. Did you caution him to take an interest in your candidate for Congress, Mr. Bowman?—A. I solicited for that purpose.

"Q. That is what you paid him the $25 for?—A. Yes, sir."

The record further shows that $100 was given to F. J. McCanna, a Democrat, for alleged employment of "special watchers" in Pittston, and that Lawrence Cosgrove, Democrat, and chief of police in Duryea, whose politics Davis swore he didn't know (record, p. 69), was sent a check for $150 by express direction of Bowman, the contestee. Davis does not even testify that Cosgrove was to use this money for any particular purpose, and Cosgrove was not called as a witness by the contestee to explain the use to which he put Bowman's money.

Bowman, the contestee, gives an unsatisfactory statement that the Cosgrove money was for "special watchers," and to set right stories about him. He, however, admitted that he didn't know what the stories were, and was not afraid of his character. (See record, p. 168.)

In the township of Plymouth $555 was paid by Davis, through various sources, for "special watchers." Contestee's brief (p. 77) shows that there were but 403 votes cast in the entire township. In other words, more than $1 for each voter was spent in this one small place for purposes not authorized by law. Such expenditure is consistent with nothing but bribery and corruption.

The instances of evident bribery in the interest of Bowman, the contestee, which are cited above, are not isolated, but the record is replete with evidence of the same character.

There is abundant evidence to show that the entire illegal expenditure of money for Bowman was to further corruption at the polls. For example, in the Hazlebrook district of Foster township, John Evans, superintendent of mines, was paid $110, and the judge of election testified (record, p. 462) that he permitted voters to indicate whom they wanted to go in and mark their ballots, and the testimony clearly shows that it was done, in contravention of the law (record, pp. 461–462).

Joel F. Stevens, judge of elections in Foster township, a miner employed by John Evans, testified that he permitted parties to go into the booth with voters, but how many he (Stevens) could not tell; but that among the number allowed to go in with the voters was his own brother-in-law, William C. Stevens, and that the Republican watchers would "step up" with the voter and the voter would announce that he wanted help and wanted one of the Republican watchers, mentioning his name, and then said watchers were permitted to go into the booth with voters.

In the northwest district, Upper Lehigh, Foster township, it is shown that there were five Republican watchers at the polls (record, pp. 452–454) marking ballots and going into the polls "to see that they voted the way the watchers desired." In this district there were more votes returned as cast than there were names on the voters' list.

In the third district, Milnesville, Hazle Township, one or two more than the customary number of watchers were employed, and these watchers took men into the booth and marked their ballots, contrary to law (record, p. 439), notwithstanding the protests of the Democratic watcher.

At Foster Township, Drifton district, four extra watchers in the precinct worked for Bowman. (Record, p. 422.) Walter Richards, manager of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co., received $50 from Manager Davis with instructions to get out and get Democratic votes. (Record, pp. 431–432.) In this precinct Charles Harvey, foreman of the same company, which company employs all the members of the election board, interfered with the Democratic overseer appointed in said district, and would not permit him to discharge his duties in challenging voters to produce tax receipts, etc. (Record, pp. 463–465.)

In the borough of Avoca, W. H. Hollister received $50 from Bowman direct, and testifies that he spent money of his own. (Record, pp. 283–284.) Thomas Rowland, a mine foreman and an election officer, had $10 to use for Bowman (p. 358) at this precinct, according to the testimony of Rowland, and men voted illegally who had assistance in marking their ballots. At this precinct the mine bosses were exceedingly active.

In the borough of Edwardsville money was used in great profusion. Kennedy, assistant chief of police, received $80 from Davis for special watchers. (Record, p. 634.) It appears that Kennedy had been arrested for election crookedness, and he himself said the Republicans employed him when they wanted an expert (record, p. 634), and acknowledged that he had a key to the room where ballot boxes were stored. (Record, p. 483.) Richard Jones, a mine foreman, received $95 from Davis to use in this borough. John R. Williams, chief of police, received $75 from Davis for special watchers for use in this borough (p. 76). It seems from the testimony that the election officers that night announced the vote—McLean, 48 or 49; Bowman, 14 (p. 647). Dr. J. E. Scheifly and Edward J. Evans, cashier of the Kingston Deposit & Savings Bank, testified that they got the same returns from Harkins, a member of the board, who had it written on a specimen ballot, between 9 and 10 o'clock election night, and that they met said Harkins in close proximity to the polling place (pp. 127 and 128); and Shields, a member of the board, testified that he gave each member of the board a specimen ballot with the result, as above tabulated, written upon it (p. 129); and William Kelly, one of the contestee's witnesses, testified that he saw the returns posted by the election board the night of election, and that the vote was McLean, 49; Bowman, 14 (p. 647). The testimony of Election Officer Shields discloses the fact that the returns were signed in blank by the board during the morning of election (record, pp. 132–134), and the judge, McFadden, says that the returns may have been so signed by the clerks (p. 612). Shields testified that he wrote out the returns of the election and tallied the vote as cast, and the returns as filed and from which the official count was made were not the ones written nor made by him (p. 137). Said returns and tally sheet as filed and officially counted show Bowman, 49; McLean, 42 (p. 137).

The eleventh congressional district of Pennsylvania, comprising Luzerne County, is one of the great anthracite-coal regions. More than 60,000 men are employed in the mines. More than $2,000 was paid to and expended by mine superintendents and foremen for purposes not authorized by law in the interest of Bowman, the contestee. The testimony shows that money was used corruptly in the mining towns, and that in those places the greatest results for Bowman were obtained. This, in connection with the testimony of Davis, the manager of Bowman, the contestee, that he landed nearly every mine boss he went after (record, p. 398), forces one to the conclusion that fraud and corruption were rife at the election through the illegal hiring of "special watchers," as a cloak for bribery, and through the misconduct of election officials and mine bosses in aiding fraud at various polling places. In addition, much of the more than $9,000 expended by Bowman is not satisfactorily accounted for by him or his agents. In consequence, we report that Charles C. Bowman, the contestee, was not legally elected a Member of the House of Representatives at the election on November 8, 1910, and we recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That Charles C. Bowman was not elected a Representative in the Sixty-second Congress from the eleventh district of Pennsylvania, and is not entitled to a seat therein."

[House Report 1182, part 2, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

GEORGE R. M'LEAN AGAINST CHARLES C. BOWMAN.

Mr. PROUTY, from the Committee on Elections No. 1, submitted the following as the views of the minority:

It is the opinion of the minority members of this committee that there is no contest pending in this case. Section 105 of the Revised Statutes provides:

"When any person intends to contest an election of any Member of the House of Representatives of the United States he shall, within 30 days after the result of such election shall have been determined by the officers or board of officers authorized by law to determine the same, give notice in writing to the Member whose seat he designs to contest of his intention to contest the same, and in such notice shall specify particularly the grounds on which he relies in the contest."

The result of this election was legally and officially determined November 12, 1910, and the contestant was advised of the result at that time. According to law, therefore, he should have given notice of this contest on or before the 12th day of December, 1910. The notice was, in fact, given on the 14th day of January, 1911. It will thus be observed that the notice was not served on contestee until 32 days after the time provided by law for the instituting of contest proceedings.

This statute above quoted is expressly made a rule of the Committee on Elections and is and should be binding upon the committee. It is, therefore, the contention of the minority that the giving of this notice is jurisdictional and that the committee has no jurisdiction to determine any question unless this notice has been given. It has been so ruled on several occasions by this House. In the case of Bradley v. Hynes (sec. 901, vol. 2, Hinds' Precedents), the rule is laid down as follows:

"The notice of contest being served after expiration of the legal time and the testimony taken without regard to the statutes, the committee did not examine the case."

This is exactly the situation of the present case. Neither the statute requiring notice of the contest, nor the statute fixing the time of taking testimony was observed. In the case of T. A. Thomas v. Arnell (p. 680, vol. 1, Hinds' Precedents) it is expressly held that the parties themselves can not waive the pleading. The syllabus says:

"The parties to an election case may not by mutual consent waive the requirements that an issue shall be made up by the pleadings of notice and answer."

The report in that case, which was adopted by the House, says:

"The committee were of opinion that it was not competent for the parties to entirely waive the requirements of the statute of 1851; that said statute was enacted not only to aid the parties in the preparation of their case, but also to secure a record and a distinct issue upon which the committee and the House were to pass."

To this end the statute requires the notice to be in writing and to specify in such writing particularly the grounds upon which he relies in the contest, and the answer to admit or deny the facts alleged in the notice and to state specifically any other ground upon which he rests the validity of his election. In that case, however, the House, while clearly recognizing the fact that no contest was pending, did, for equitable reasons, establish another rule and fixed the time for serving notice, "within eight days after the passage of this resolution."

This doctrine is fully established and maintained in O'Hara v. Kitchin (vol. 1, sec. 730, Hinds' Precedents). In that case the syllabus states the rule thus:

"The testimony of contestants being taken after the legal time and against the contestee's protest, the committee report that it should not be considered and that the sitting Member's title should be confirmed."

In the case of Teasce v. Bell (vol. 2, Hinds' Precedents, sec. 1073) the same rule is announced, and we believe that there is no case where a different view has been announced. We are not unaware of the fact that as this law was passed by Congress it may be set aside by the same power that enacted it. We can see that under the power contained in the Constitution, which says, "Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members"; that the House may prescribe other rules and regulations for the determination of contests. It is also indisputable that until such other rules and regulations are made the existing rules and regulations are binding upon the House.

There are very many cases cited in Hinds' Precedents confirming the doctrine that where the rule established by the law of 1851 was not applicable or grossly inequitable, the House had the power to prescribe different rules and regulations for the penalty. There are several cases where the parties have failed to give notice within the time prescribed by the statutes where the House, for equitable reasons, has fixed another time or mode in which notice might be given, but we believe that there is not a case cited in the precedents where a committee had reported the unseating of the Member where the notice was not given within the time provided by the statutes. We can see that if the contestant had been for any good reason prevented from giving notice in this case, he might have applied to the House for permission to give notice and that the House had the power to grant additional or different time, but no such request as that has been made of the House. The contestant filed his notice 32 days too late and took his testimony out of order, all under protest by the contestee, and we insist that under the precedents the committee had no power or authority to consider the case. The laws of Congress are certainly binding upon Congress until set aside by Congress itself, but the minority contends that even though the contestant was now presenting to the House the question as to whether or not he was entitled to further and additional time in which to give notice his showing does not entitle him to the application of the equitable rule. There is no showing in this record that would excuse the contestant from giving the notice within the time prescribed by the statutes. Certainly the House would not wish to establish a precedent that would warrant anyone in coming in any time he pleased and filing a contest. This would be unfair. No one would know when his seat was secure. Failure to file a notice might lull the sitting Member into such indifference as would allow the testimony by which he could defend his case to be lost or destroyed. The rule established by the statute is a just one, and this House ought to be slow in establishing another rule.

We insist that this record does not show that Mr. McLean, the contestant, used reasonable diligence. It is true that he was sick, but not so sick but that he transacted other business requiring more energy and concentration than the preparation or the direction for the preparation of a notice of contest. The evidence shows that the contestant was attacked with some intestinal trouble about the 31st of October, 1910. (Evidence, p. 7.)

It shows, however, that on the 5th day of November, 1910, he had so far recovered that two of his political friends, Messrs. McKenna and Kehoe, visited him (p. 624), and that the editor of the Times-Leader had a conversation with him either the 5th or the 6th, and during that time contestant claims to have written a political letter to the editor of the Wilkes-Barre Record (p. 183). The day before election he read, or had read to him, articles from the Record, and personally dictated a political letter for the Times-Leader, and had conferences with his brother manager and others. This was the day before election, which was held on the 8th. On that day he rode out and went to the polls and voted. He was up and around the 9th, the day after the election (p. 9). He personally wrote and signed a check for $25 on the 11th (p. 567). On the 12th he examined bills and wrote and signed several checks, some of them for political bills (p. 716). On that day he learned the official results of the election (pp. 682–683). The contestant was then evidently taken worse, and went to bed on the advice of his doctor (p. 716). During that time he drew at least one political check. Contestant improved rapidly in the few weeks that he was in bed.

By the 28th of November he had so recovered that he began checking over his political bills and making checks for the same. On the 28th of November he personally drew and signed 30 political checks, and personally made out his political expense account for filing, as provided by the laws of Pennsylvania. This account contained 43 items and was in his own handwriting (p. 631). This was on November 29, 17 days after he knew the result of the election and 13 days before his time was up for serving his notice of contest. If he was able to do this amount of personal work in preparing his own expense account, he certainly had strength enough to prepare and sign such a general notice of contest as is found herein, and if he did not have enough strength to do it himself he certainly had strength enough to request his brother manager or other attorneys to make out a notice of contest for him. Especially is this so since his brother manager and several of the attorneys who have acted as counsel in this matter were present and active upon contestant's behalf when the official returns of the election were for several days before the judges of the court of common pleas. They at this time decided not to make any objections or contest the returns, apparently having in mind a congressional contest before this House.

It will be noticed that on the 30th of November the contestant drew five checks (p. 716). On December 1 he drew one check, and had so far recovered that he saw the doctor for the last time until the 28th (p. 716). On December 2 he drew eight checks. On that day or the next he started for Florida, and before going he had consultation with Attorney A. C. Campbell, one of his counsel in this proceeding, and Jesse Jones, and discussed with Campbell the election (p. 363). If he was able to start for Florida, he was certainly able to file a notice of contest, and all of this was in ample time to have met the requirements of the statute; but for some reason he prepared no notice of contest until January 9, which was not in fact served until January 14. The real cause of delay, as admitted by contestant (p. 720), was the fact that the contestant did not know the law requiring notice to be served within 30 days; but ignorance of the law is never an excuse. It is also admitted that contestant's brother manager did not know the law until January, 1911 (p. 683).

Our contention on this phase of the case is simply this:

First, that the contestant did not give notice, as prescribed by the statutes; second, that he did not make application to the House for another or different rule for the conduct of his contest; third, that he had no equitable or just ground on which he could have appealed to the House for the right to institute a contest after the expiration of the time provided by the statute. We do not contend that the House has not the power to expel its Members for any or no reason, but the power to expel must not be confused with the right of a party to contest the seat of a sitting Member. They are based upon entirely different provisions of the Constitution and require entirely different procedure. To expel a Member requires "a concurrence of two-thirds" (see sec. 5, Art. I), but to determine a contested-election case only requires a majority. While we concede that the House might now, if it saw fit, expel Mr. Bowman for any reason it pleased, or for no reason, if a two-thirds vote could be commanded, we insist that there is no contested-election case pending before it, and therefore we think that the case should be dismissed, and we so recommend.

The report of the committee as voiced by the majority fails, we believe, to show any views disagreeing with those above expressed, since they admit the statute, its disregard by the contestant, and the contestant's lack of any excuse whereby he might have any equity which would require a hearing. With these facts admitted, we feel that all members of the committee are united upon this question of jurisdiction. We also agree with the majority report that the case can not be considered from the viewpoint of reporting a resolution to seat the contestant; and we further fail to find any precedent which would permit the consideration of the contestee's case solely under such circumstances.

The report states, at page 3, that since the contestee permitted, without objection in the House, the reference of this matter to the committee, he is in no position to object to the consideration of the testimony so improperly and illegally taken. We can not accede to such a proposition, and we are assured that it has no foundation in precedent or the existing law.

We further desire to state that at every stage of the proceeding counsel for contestee took proper exceptions to the illegal actions of the contestant and his counsel and contended that they were being improperly treated by the utter disregard for all the law and precedents in such cases. We further beg to state that at the proper time and in the ways suggested by the precedents, counsel for contestee have called attention to the failure of contestant's case. At all times before the committee having the matter in charge, contestee objected to the consideration of this case as being in direct violation of the act of the House requiring contest to be instituted within 30 days of the election; and unless the House, as the lawmaking body of the land, proposes to violate the law of its own making, and all precedents therein, the case here ends. But the majority of the committee, having considered the report as to the merits of the case, with which conclusions the minority do not agree, the following statement of facts is submitted:

Much of the evidence referred to would be rejected by any court, because it is largely hearsay; furthermore, it is incompetent in the consideration of this case because of the fact that much of it relates to occurrences which transpired during the primary contest and consequently beyond the purview of this contest as limited by the notice served by the contestant. The important and indisputable facts in the testimony create an almost incontrovertible position in fact and law and affirm the decision of the voters of said district and the official and judicial count of the judges of the court of common pleas which permitted the contestee to take his place in this honorable body.

In their consideration of this case the majority of the committee have failed to note the important landmarks. While they discuss items of $5 which they think might have been used for improper purposes, they fail to note that with a population of 343,186 but 59,352 persons were registered and capable under the registration requirements to vote. They apparently also fail to note that while 59,352 persons could vote, but 33,652 voted at this election, and only 29,767 for Congressman, the contestant and contestee receiving together but 28,218. When these figures are compared with the preceding congressional vote of 40,565, or with the vote of 29,589 in 1909, being the vote polled by the candidate for judge upon both tickets, it will then be easy to realize how impossible and improbable their conclusions are. It is thus apparent from the mention of the foregoing figures, first, that only a comparatively small percentage of the registered vote was cast, and second, as compared with the votes at elections immediately preceding the one in question, the vote cast was remarkably small. This negatives the idea that this election had not permitted a free and untrammeled choice of the Representative for the district in this House. Thus in the case of Walker v. Rhea, in the Fifty-sixth Congress, although it was admitted by the committee that there were frauds and irregularities, yet when they compare a population of 166,699 with a vote of 17,344 for the contestee and 16,595 for the contestant, it was held to show that said fraud fell far short of being sufficient to justify a change of the result. Our search of the law and precedents fails to disclose to us any instances where under similar circumstances a whole election has been set aside as is recommended by the majority report.

There is another satisfactory general test possible in this case. The decision of the majority is based almost solely upon the amount of money expended by the Republican county chairman and upon what they consider was possible to be done with such an amount. The statement regarding the amount expended by the contestee is not accurately set forth in the report at page 5. The evidence shows that the contestee contributed to the Republican county chairman for the election of the Republican ticket $7,533.25 and that the total amount expended for all Republican candidates was $8,988.82. The statement that the contestee as a matter of fact spent $9,272 is an assumption made by the majority and evidently built upon the unwarranted statement of contestant's counsel in his brief. The testimony regarding the same (pp. 267–271) shows that said sum of $9,272 was the total of the debit side of a private account book of contestee kept by the bookkeeper and supposed to represent what she personally considered political expenses between June 7, 1910, and January 6, 1911. The evidence further shows that many of these items belonged to the expenses of the primaries held June 4; others were not election expenses, strictly speaking, and in this amount no consideration is taken of a $700 credit on the other side of the account. We can thus safely take $8,988.82 as the total amount expended at this election as the total for all the Republican candidates. Now, let us compare that expenditure with other recent political expenditures.

In 1911, the election following this election, the brother of this contestant, who was the Democratic county chairman, filed an expense account of $19,429.33, while the Republican county chairman filed an expense account of $16,485. This was merely a county election and the expenditures were made after the testimony in this case was taken. The evidence shows that in 1909 the total Republican expenditures were $13,982.38, while the Democratic expenditures were $7,862.33. In 1908 the Republican expenditures were $10,966.30. The evidence does not give the Democratic figures. In 1907 Republican expenditures were $12,400.80. In 1906 the Republican expenditures were $9,693.24. Contestee also has the stamp of approval of this body upon expenditures of $9,550 by Contestee Shonk, Fifty-second Congress; the testimony there, as here, showing that such expenditures were "rather in conformity to the custom as practiced in Luzerne County," and hence the contestee was confirmed in his right to retain his seat.

The testimony also shows that party lines were badly broken in this election and that the Keystone Party, an independent movement, carried the county for the State officers, including governor. It also shows that the public press, and even one of the papers in favor of contestant and edited by one of contestant's college friends, rejoiced over this election as not only being one of the quietest (p. 81) but also as one of the cleanest (p. 641) ever held in the district.

We will now, as briefly as possible, take up the circumstances which have been cited as justifying the majority opinion and at least point out the evidence relating to those circumstances.

The statement that contestee failed to include large items of expense in his filed account is not sustained by the testimony. The account, as filed, amounted to $7,194.40, while his total expenditures were $7,533.25, a difference of $338.85, which is explained by bills received and paid after the account was filed and by one or two slight omissions unintentionally made by the bookkeeper who prepared said account. Much is said about the payment of $700 to Chairman Davis by the contestee a few days after the election, this payment being a personal transaction involving the purchase of a small automobile. For those who have the time to read it, the record at pages 24 to 26, 50 to 52, 87, 207, 208, 268, 272 will verify our statements that this transaction was a legitimate one. Mr. Bowman had a right to buy an automobile of Mr. Davis or of anybody else. This transaction occurred some time after the election, and there is not a particle of evidence anywhere in the record, nor has any suggestion been made from any other source that there was any agreement between the contestee and Mr. Davis prior to the time when the automobile was purchased. Because of inaccuracy on the part of Mr. Bowman's bookkeeper in charging this to the wrong account, the majority in their report have laid hold of this and sought to show that the transaction is unlawful. It seems to us that it is no concern of this committee, nor of the House, whether Mr. Bowman owned an automobile or whether he bought an additional one, or of whom he bought it. It is evident that this transaction can have no bearing whatever upon the question as to Mr. Bowman's election.

The $50 given Gierlag January 4, 1911, almost two months after election, and 22 days after the end of the statutory time within which this contestant could start a contest, is very satisfactorily and honestly explained (p. 43). The $50 used by Mr. Hollister and the $26 used by Mr. Jennings for workers are stated in the report as being excluded from contestee's filed statement, whereas, as a matter of fact, they are included in the amount of $7,194.40 as filed (p. 236). Similarly the payment of $25 on January 3, 1911, to Mr. Bertels is completely explained and shown not to be a political expenditure, and further the expenditure was made nearly two months after the election, 21 days after this contest should have been started, and 1 month after Mr. Bowman's account was filed. That explains why this item of expense was not filed. These items being all that could be found which in any way involved the contestee personally, the report then proceeds to discuss the action of the Republican county chairman. We first desire to call attention to the fact that, contrary to the statement in the report, Chairman Davis did not conceal his expenditures. They were all accounted for under their various heads, and receipts signed by the men receiving the money were filed for the entire amount, with the exception of about $80.

When the majority report admitted that the contestant could not reject the Prohibition vote cast for contestee, the decision was based upon the fact that the legality of the nomination had not been assailed in the proper tribunal. In what worse shape are they, then, in attacking the expenditures of the county chairman or this contestee when they did not make use of the Pennsylvania law permitting an audit of all filed accounts upon the petition of only five electors? (Act 1906, sec. 9, P. L., 81.) And how can they excuse the attack upon the official result of the election when this contestant, through his brother and through some of the attorneys who have represented him in this matter, appeared before the official accounting board, knowing the facts upon which their present claims are based, starting to contest the count and then finally desisting, and thus, to our minds, waiving whatever rights they might have had to a thorough, immediate, and proper inspection, not only of all the returns but also the ballots themselves?

Returning to the expenditures of the county chairman, it is frankly admitted that $2,393 of the money put in his hands was spent specially in the interest of the contestee for what are designated by all parties as special watchers. We can not follow the majority opinion that such employment is contrary to the Pennsylvania statutes, and thus we can not reach their conclusion that said money was corruptly spent. The language of the present law is identical with the act of 1874, under which it has been held that a candidate may employ and pay an elector to create an interest for him before election. In other words, to work for his election. The employment of such personal aids to get out the vote has been a custom of that district and other districts in Pennsylvania for almost time immemorial and has the sanction of the judicial decisions, both in the subordinate and appellate courts of Pennsylvania, interpreting the corrupt practices act of 1906. There is no testimony that the 311 men employed as mentioned personally voted for the contestee or that, save for the payment of said money, they would have voted otherwise; nor does this testimony indicate a single vote changed or the influencing of a vote caused by any of these particular men. We have always understood that some of the above-mentioned facts which are here lacking are essential for bribery; and although the majority report calls this bribery, they give us no precedents or law sustaining their contentions or upon which they could base such a conclusion.

Although we feel that the general considerations have made it unnecessary for us to take up the few instances specially mentioned by the majority, yet we will do so briefly, although the decision in these specific instances can have no effect upon the general question as to the election of a Member of Congress from the eleventh district of Pennsylvania, because if all the precincts in question were to be thrown out Mr. Bowman would still have a majority.

The testimony does not show any such expenditure as stated in the report for "special watchers" for Plymouth Township, and we feel that, even assuming that with what was paid for regular poll men and special watchmen more than $1 per vote was expended, it was pretty poor work when there were 356 other voters registered who did not go near the polls. The majority report has also fallen into the same grievous error as the contestant's brief; although one would suppose from the context that he was being told solely of that money expended specially for Mr. Bowman, an investigation shows that much of the money complained of was used as even contestant grants it properly can be used for regular poll men to work in getting out the vote in the interest of the whole ticket.

The few mining districts mentioned and certain statements and erroneous conclusions of law regarding them are well considered in contestee's brief and were carefully investigated by the committee. Suffice to say, the percentage of the vote rejected, should these be rejected, would be so small as to refute the claim that such fraud would vitiate the entire election.

From a careful consideration of the voluminous record in this case, and from a thorough analysis of the briefs and of the arguments presented to the committee, the minority has reached the conclusion that C. C. Bowman is entitled to a seat in this House as a Member of Congress from the eleventh district of Pennsylvania. Because of laches of the contestant there has really been no contest legally before the House. On the merits of the case, which, contrary to all law and precedent, the majority have considered in their report, we do not find sufficient evidence to warrant the conclusion of the majority. It can not be seriously claimed that the purchase of an automobile by the contestee some time after the election has anything whatever to do with the question as to whether he was elected to a seat in this House. Under what theory of law or common sense can it be claimed that a gift to an editor months after the election could corrupt any vote cast in that election? Twenty-nine thousand voters, representing 343,000 people, should not be disfranchised by vague charges of fraud and suspicion founded upon hearsay. The minority of your committee are unanimously and strongly opposed to bribery and corruption in every form; but it does not believe that the right of a Member to his seat in this House should be questioned by proceedings admittedly contrary to all law and precedent and by vague charges of fraud founded upon hearsay and built upon inference.

LEGISLATIVE EXECUTIVE AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up in the House the bill H. R. 26321, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to take up and consider in the House the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I understand the legislative bill reported in the House now is practically and substantially the same in most particulars as the bill which passed the House before.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Substantially so.

Mr. MANN. So, taking it up now is simply for the House to expeditiously dispose of something where consideration was given to the different items on a former occasion.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Every item in this bill has been carefully considered on a previous occasion except one legislative matter, which touches the penalty for a violation of a provision that is inserted by the Senate.

Mr. MANN. I understand the purpose of this request is to expedite the business of the House in order that the bill may quickly go to conference again, or the Senate agree to practically what the conference was before, eliminating certain features in order that we may bring Congress to a speedy close.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is the purpose of the request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill be considered in the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to make one other request. There are, as the gentlemen know, a few items in this bill that are subject to a point of order. I ask unanimous consent that the points of order as to these items may be waived in order that we may proceed with the bill.

Mr. MANN. Let the bill be read.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill, and read the provision abolishing the Commerce Court.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Speaker, touching the abolishment of the Commerce Court, I believe the bill now under consideration is the same as the bill that was considered and lately vetoed.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to say that full consideration was given to this section on a former hearing. A point of order was made, a special rule was reported from the Committee on Rules making it in order, adopted by a majority vote, considered by the House, and passed.

Now, under ordinary conditions I should make the point of order on this section now, because I am not in harmony with the proposed legislation. But here it is the 17th day of August. On a late call of the House our friends, the enemy, politically speaking, have ascertained that a quorum is present. I suppose if this bill had been considered in Committee of the Whole House, or even in the House under the five-minute rule, that it would have been Monday or Tuesday before consideration could be completed, and knowing that in the fullness of time you would have passed the bill in this shape, containing the provision for the abolition of the Commerce Court, I said to myself, What good is it, as everybody desires to go home, and in the end you would have passed the bill?

This bill received a vote, or, in substance, one like unto it abolishing the Commerce Court. I do not believe that it should be abolished. I have before spoken upon the question of its abolishment. I do not care to worry the House now. I voted against passing the bill over the President's veto. I do not know what the President may do when this bill goes back to him again. He is a coordinate branch of the Government. He has not an absolute veto, as the King of England has. The President's veto halts a bill, and defeats it unless two-thirds of the House and Senate pass the bill over his veto. I know what I would do if I was President. It is not necessary, however, to state what I would do, because they are not now electing young men to the Presidency. [Laughter.] Therefore, nobody cares what I would do.

But if I were a young man and President of the United States and were coerced out of my honest judgment and conviction, or the attempt was made to coerce me from exercising the power which the people had given to me as President under the Constitution, the alternative being that if I did not sign the great money bill to carry on the civil service of the Government the civil service should stop, then I would not be coerced. I would do my duty, if I were President, as I believed my duty to be, and I would not purchase money to carry on the civil service of the Government by being coerced to do violence to my judgment as Chief Executive of the Nation. Gentlemen may say do I know what will become of this bill after we pass it. I do not. I am not in the confidence of the President. He vetoed a similar bill, however, for two reasons, one touching the tenure of clerks in the departments and the other touching the abolition of the Commerce Court. The clause touching the tenure of office is left out of the bill, but I think that that is a matter of minor importance as compared with the abolition of this court so recently created. The object to be accomplished by its creation has been spoken of before and is known by the Members of the House and by the people. If, perchance, you pass the bill in this shape, sending it back again to the President and he should veto it, then, as one Representative, I shall voice my judgment to sustain the veto, and then if you fail to provide the money to carry on the Government—in the meantime lengthening the session of Congress that has already been drawn out almost to the crack o' doom—we shall have an issue upon which to go to the country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in making no objection to the consideration of this bill in the House, and enforcing no points of order on the bill, which points of order I reserved when the bill was reported to the House, I do not wish it to be understood thereby that we upon this side of the House agree to all of the items in the bill or agree to the amounts stated in the bill in the various cases, but the bill was considered under a different number upon a prior occasion at this session of Congress, and an opportunity was then given to discuss it and amend it in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. That bill was vetoed by the President and failed to pass over his veto. The Committee on Appropriations has reported practically the same bill which had previously passed the House under a different number, and it did not seem to me to be desirable to endeavor to extend the time which the session would last for the purpose of redebating items in the bill which were debated before. However, we do not agree to all of the items in the bill. I consider that this bill now is much in the same position as though it had been through the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported back to the House, and the gentleman from South Carolina was moving the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, as representing the minority of the committee, I simply wish to say that I desire to cooperate with the majority and also with the reading clerk in the expedition of this bill. For that reason I shall not occupy the time of the House in expressing the various objections which I have to the bill. I merely wish it understood that this is not the bill the minority of the committee desire, but we had our day in court and were beaten, and we appreciate that now the same result would be reached as before if we fought it through. Moreover, I have an abiding belief, for which I have good reason, that when this bill comes out of conference it will conform somewhat more to our wishes than now; in short, that it will be much the same as when it passed both Houses after conference.

When this bill was reported before, the minority of the committee took the unusual step of filing a minority report, and I now ask permission that the minority report may be printed as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The minority report is as follows:

[House report No. 633, part 2, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GILLETT, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted the following as the views of the minority, to accompany H. R. 24023:

The undersigned members of the Committee on Appropriations dissent from the report of the majority of the committee accompanying H. R. 24023.

It is not to be expected that an appropriation bill like this, containing thousands of items, will ever in every detail satisfy every member of the committee. We recognize that it is necessary to give and take and compromise, and while there are many different items which different ones of us would like to change, we should not submit a minority report were it not for three provisions which we think most unwise and injurious, and so important as to demand this protest.

We think a comparison of this bill and the Post Office appropriation bill, which has just been considered, presents an excellent exemplification of the old adage, "penny wise and pound foolish," and it is perhaps significant that the operation of the economies of this bill is confined to the District of Columbia, where there are no voters.

The three provisions referred to are the abolition of the Commerce Court, the abolition of the Bureau of Manufactures and commercial agents, and the fixing a term of five years for Government employees.

These are all matters of legislation and have no technical right in a general appropriation bill unless by virtue of the Holman rule, but as they are largely measures of administration we do not specially complain of them because they are here, but because they are bad legislation anywhere.

The Commerce Court has existed a little over a year, hardly long enough to thoroughly test its usefulness. It was established in order to effect greater promptness and uniformity in the decision of cases over which it was given jurisdiction and greater convenience for the parties interested. We believe it is accomplishing these results; that its record so far gives no proof that the purpose for which it was created will not be attained, and we think that its discontinuance would be a misfortune.

The Department of Commerce and Labor, through its Bureau of Manufactures, has aimed to collect and distribute information to the various industries of the country which it would be almost impossible for them otherwise to acquire and which is of great value. We are far behind other countries in this method of making our industrial life meet the exigencies of the day, and we believe the small amount of money appropriated for this purpose is well expended. It may be that some better cooperation between the different departments might be attained; but we believe the cutting off from the Department of Commerce and Labor this whole branch of activity is shortsighted parsimony and not true economy and would result in loss and not in saving to the country.

It is, of course, easy to effect an apparent economy by doing away with a court, or a bureau, or a department, or a whole branch of the service, or by wholesale reduction of force or salaries; but the question always remains, Does this saving compensate for the loss of the service? Is it real economy? That is to be determined by evidence and proof. We are aware of no such proof in the cases at issue here, and we think the people would be serious losers instead of gainers from the change.

We oppose a fixed tenure of five years for civil-service employees. Though here applied only to those in the District, if adopted here it would, of course, be extended to all throughout the country. We recognize the existing problems of superannuation, but we believe that to suddenly throw out every employee over 65 years of age is a crude and unreasonable method of meeting it, even if it has no political animus. It overthrows without any thorough investigation the existing system, jeopardizes the civil-service principle, and is a timid and unfeeling method of avoiding instead of solving the problem.

We think the arbitrary cut of 10 per cent throughout the War Department is unjustifiable. New methods adopted by the Chief of Staff may allow such a cut in some bureaus, but that does not make it possible in others unaffected by the reforms, and we have their testimony that it would cripple them.

Under this administration notable economies have been introduced, especially in the Treasury Department, and there is an apparent earnest attempt by the heads of departments to extend them, and we do not think it wise by such a drastic, arbitrary cut to discourage such efforts.

F. H. GILLETT.
E. L. TAYLOR, Jr.
J. G. CANNON.
GEO. R. MALBY,
JOHN W. DWIGHT.

I concur in the above views of the minority except that portion which refers to the Commerce Court. I favor abolishing the said court.

JAMES W. GOOD.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I have not had time to examine the bill, but I understand that several important items touching the State Department have been left out of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is true.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. And I understand they were not in the bill as originally passed by the House, but were inserted by the Senate, and that the House conferees agreed to them as amendments.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is true.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. And they are now eliminated?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They are now eliminated.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. With a view of having them reinserted in the Senate?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I presume the Senate will reinsert them.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I trust the conferees of the House will consent to such reinsertion, because these items, in my judgment, are probably as important as any contained in the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I shall not detain the House more than a moment. Every item and every section of this bill was thoroughly discussed when it was formerly before the House under a different number. The bill is in substantially the same shape in which it went to the Senate on the 10th of May last, with the exception that the fixed tenure of service in the classified service has been eliminated from it. We apprehend that the Senate will insert about the same amendments, and that the conferees will reach about the same result, and that possibly on Monday next we will have back here the bill that was voted for the other day, substantially, with the seven-year-tenure clause left out.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. From the Committee on Rules, I present the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

House resolution 699 (H. Rept. 1206).

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this order the House shall proceed to consider the report of the managers of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21969) to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone; that none of the provisions of said report shall be subject to a point of order; that general debate shall continue for two hours, unless sooner concluded; and that immediately upon the conclusion of general debate the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the motion to agree to the report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has the Chair ruled on the point of order which was made yesterday?

The SPEAKER. No; and if this rule is adopted the Chair will never be compelled to rule on it.

Mr. MANN. But it is very plain what the ruling of the Chair would be, after the ruling of the Chair to-day.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, another parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will a resolution offered as a matter of privilege and as a substitute for this motion have precedence of it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I offer——

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have not yielded to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has the floor, and the gentleman raised a parliamentary inquiry. Of course, the Chair will always hear a parliamentry inquiry, but the gentleman has not the floor for any other purpose. What does the gentleman ask to do?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to offer what I understand to be a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. Wait until we get this out of the way.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Panama Canal bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The point of order was that the report of the committee contravened the Constitution, section 7. I want to inquire whether that may be set aside by a rule?

The SPEAKER. Oh, no; the Chair never passed on the constitutional question. There were so many other things that ruled it out that the Chair never considered that part of it at all. That is a question that would take hours and days to debate, and there were enough extraneous matters in it to justify the Chair, if he had been compelled to rule, to have ruled them out on the point of order. The Chair took the line of least resistance.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If it is right there seems to be no reason to set aside a point of order relating to the report of the committee contravening a section of the Constitution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows; but this rule ends the controversy about whether it was in order or not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This rule is superior to the Constitution, then.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is out of order, under the rules of the House. Let us proceed to consider the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the Constitution is out of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not pretend to investigate the constitutional question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Supreme Court will settle that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair found plenty of extraneous matter to rule it out on. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone.

Mr. ADAMSON. If I can get order I would like to submit a unanimous-consent agreement that will shorten the time for the consideration of this matter.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ADAMSON. I was going to try to get an agreement about debate.

Mr. MANN. That was what I was going to question the gentleman about; so proceed.

The SPEAKER. What has the gentleman from Georgia to suggest?

Mr. ADAMSON. Well, I wish to say that this matter has been debated at great length several times. The conference report has been printed several times. I do not believe there is much inclination on the part of gentlemen here to prolong debate, and in the hope of curtailing debate and getting it out of the way in order to afford an opportunity to other pressing matters I ask, first, unanimous consent that there may be general leave for all Members for five legislative days to print on this subject. If the Chair will submit that request I will make another request.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let us see if we can not reach an agreement on the whole thing at once.

Mr. ADAMSON. What is the gentleman going to suggest about time?

Mr. MANN. The rule provides for two hours' general debate. Would it be embarrassing to make an inquiry of that side of the House as to whether gentlemen desire to consume very much time?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I certainly desire to consume some time.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. The arrangement yesterday contemplated about 30 minutes on this side.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like two or three minutes.

Mr. MANN. How much time does the gentleman from Pennsylvania want?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Half an hour. There are four distinct propositions in the bill that have never been debated in the House or Senate.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] if when we get through with this bill this afternoon we will have other things?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Some little things.

Mr. MANN. Will they be matters requiring a large attendance of the House?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think there are any other conference reports on legislative bills that will be on hand.

Mr. ADAMSON. I think if the gentlemen are modest in their demands that we can end in less than two hours.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON]——

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I have not an understanding with anybody but the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and if you will let me have a moment I think I can trade with him.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I am one of the best losers in this House, and I am always willing to abide by the determination of the majority. The committee has brought in a rule providing there shall be two hours for this discussion, and I am willing to submit to the decision of the Committee on Rules and speak for 30 minutes. It involves thousands of workmen in this country, but 30 minutes will satisfy me.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If I have the right to do so.

Mr. ALEXANDER. What workmen does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Those who build the ships, those who make the material that enters into the construction of the ships, those who delve in the mines, those who work in the forest, those who till the soil, and those who labor in the mills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentlemen that the two hours are running.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] will be content with his 30 minutes, all the rest of us will get along with a few minutes, and we can get through by 6 o'clock.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman can get through in that time, I will say 20 minutes.

Mr. ADAMSON. I ask unanimous consent that we vote at 6 o'clock.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] have 30 minutes, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that he may have 30 minutes, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to incorporate, as a part of my remarks, the speech delivered by Gov. Woodrow Wilson during the month of May in Indianapolis, together with a speech delivered by him on Thursday last in the city of Gloucester, State of New Jersey.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks to print two speeches of the governor of New Jersey together. Is there objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent also to print and extend my remarks, in reply to the speech delivered at Gloucester by Gov. Wilson.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] and the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KINKEAD]?

There was no objection.

PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, my heart has been in the canal enterprise from the beginning; not from the time it began to be talked about, it is true, for that has been several centuries, but since Congress and the American people began to give the subject serious attention. A great orator said that he "had sat by the cradle of Irish independence and had mourned at its bier." While I had the honor of helping to nurse the infantile canal enterprise into life, I have been more fortunate than that orator in my subsequent acquaintance with the project. Instead of having to mourn its failure and death, I am about to rejoice in the glory of its complete and final triumph. It is true I have not had my way in all things. It is seldom that mortals are permitted to have their way in all details and particulars. Substantial results usually satisfy numerous advocates urging variant arguments and pursuing different courses, using divers methods and disputing about plans and details.

When I came to Congress those two great Americans and statesmen, Senator Morgan and Col. Hepburn, were advocating the Nicaragua route, though by entirely different methods. To the efforts of those two great men is due the credit for inaugurating and securing canal legislation. I shall always rejoice that I was in part instrumental in bringing them together and seeing them united on the Hepburn bill, which, after being reported on my motion three times from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House, and after having passed the House twice, ultimately resulted in action by the Senate, which, having received the approval of the President, became a law. Pending those efforts at legislation necessary modifications of existing treaties were secured which permitted the United States Government to build, own, and operate a Government canal, which under the old treaty was forbidden, assuming the burden to protect and maintain its free, equal, and neutral use, and securing the right to take the emoluments arising from its control. It is true the final form of the canal bill was, by compromise, placed in the alternative and resulted in substituting Panama for Nicaragua. That was contrary to my judgment, and a great disappointment to me, and did great violence to the emphatic opinions of Col. Hepburn and Senator Morgan.

It now seems that the completion and successful operation of the Panama Canal will satisfy everybody and that the proposed canal route through Nicaragua will fade from consideration, if not from memory. It may never be known who was right, and it may be immaterial ever to determine that. A canal was what we wanted, and the advocates of Nicaragua, failing to secure recognition of their claims, waived their contention, yielded, and, cheerfully acquiescing, worked faithfully ever afterwards for the success of the Panama Canal.

Whatever glory should accrue to anybody for making the substitution, if it should prove to be wise, is due in larger measure than to any other man to Senator BURTON of Ohio. It is hoped that the glory of the enterprise will prevent any discredit from detracting from him or anybody else for the change.

Discarding unsuccessful methods pursued at Panama by the French and by other canal builders in other ages and countries, we first devoted considerable time and money to preparing for the work by sanitation and supplying all things necessary for the comfort of our workmen, with such remarkable success that we transformed traditional cesspools of vice and pestholes of disease and death into lovely and inviting regions of health and comfort, making health and life as safe, and social and moral standards as high, as anywhere in our own beloved country. As a result, we have almost finished the canal with little more outlay of money than was squandered and stolen by the French, who hardly made a beginning at the task of uniting the two oceans by a canal.

The freedom of the work from graft, scandal, and corruption stand without a parallel in construction history, as remarkable in business morality and rectitude as in physical achievement and engineering triumph.

Another change, however, was made contrary to my own view. One argument for substituting Panama for Nicaragua was that a sea-level canal was possible at Panama and not elsewhere. The promise of a sea-level canal reconciled me in some measure to the substitution; but here again I was overruled, and again whatever may be due of glory or discredit for the change belongs to the efforts and eloquence of the same distinguished Senator, BURTON of Ohio. Again we are compensated by the consolation that if a sea-level canal would be better than a lock canal nobody will ever know it. When the type of canal was changed it was said that if a lock canal failed we could still dig on until the oceans flowed together at sea level, but the engineers contrived dams and adjusted locks to them of such giant proportions, of such adamantine character, of such monumental durability that they will never result in failure. The dams are about one-half a mile thick, with such small slope on the downstream side that they look like and operate like a part of the natural landscape. They are a great deal more substantial than the contiguous land. They are constructed of material carefully selected and thrown together in a form most favorable to coalesce and unite in compact everlasting endurance.

They are made to extend into the hills wherein the locks are embedded in solid rocks, and the lock sides sitting diagonal to the lengthwise course of the dams make the seams of jointure about a third longer than the thickness of the dams, or a little over 3,000 feet.

Those dams are rapidly being covered with binding grass and tropical growth on the downstream gentle slopes. The upstream or lake side of the dams will be hidden by the water and appear to be only a few feet high. The whole appearance will present the aspect of natural bodies of water with natural banks, and the locks will be so operated that the alternate and slight filling and lowering the water will greatly minimize their mammoth appearance, and the whole grand scheme will present not only an assurance of everlasting security, but expose so little of the artificial aspect that Col. Goethals fears that in a few years our successors in Congress will be sending investigating committees to find out where and how so much money was expended.

As the lock canal was forced upon me against my judgment, I gracefully yielded and continued to work and shout for the canal. I still believe a sea-level canal would be better, just as I piously believe the Nicaragua route would be better, and I still asseverate the correctness of my judgment, secure in the absolute certainty that nobody will ever be able to demonstrate the contrary, and I expect to rejoice so much in the grand triumph of American achievement that I shall be glad that the incorrectness of the substitution will never be demonstrated.

Having followed Senator BURTON twice when he was wrong, it was unfortunate that we did not follow him again when in his third and last great effort he was right. Ably, eloquently, honestly, and patriotically he pleaded for the imposition of uniform tolls in the interest of the Treasury which needs the tolls to operate the canal, in the interest of all the people to whom the income from the canal belongs and in maintenance of our national honor by inviolable and scrupulous regard for the treaty stipulating universal equality of treatment at the canal. Unfortunately circumstances and events can not obscure or cure the result of this mistake, as in case of our other two errors. The consequences will have to be met by additional legislation when diplomacy shall have pointed the way, which will not be long. Diplomatic and commercial war will soon convert the innocent instruments of our blunder and thwart the designs of the guilty instigators of our mistake. Let us hope that the lesson to be so soon and certainly learned will not prove too costly to our commerce and prosperity nor humiliate our pride nor tarnish our national honor.

There are two considerations connected with the canal enterprise which enhance its value, both of an educational character and invaluable in their results. The first is the greed of certain ship interests, and certain cities which wish to divide profits in some way with the Ship Trust raised the question of railroad-owned ships monopolizing the use of the canal. There was merit in the proposition, although it originated in greed, and was admittedly a fight between two sets of grafters. The ship-subsidy crowd and their allied cities on one side and the railroad cormorants and monopolies on the other. The people began to study the situation, and while they recognized the danger of reducing the benefits to the public of the canal through the operation of railroad-owned ships, they realized at the same time that the coastwise trade liable to go through the canal could never be but a small per cent of the coastwise trade of the United States. An investigation gradually opened their eyes, and loomed larger as it dawned and glowed on their mental vision that in all the coastwise trade in the United States—oceans, bays, lakes, and rivers—the railroads by the operation of their own vessels had already driven competition from the waters and in most cases raised water rates to the level of railroad rates, and were operating monopolies to the injury of the people to an extent many times greater than any injury that could be inflicted in the small portion of the probable coastwise traffic through the canal. I have no doubt that the losses sustained by the people in that way if saved would pay for the canal in a very short time. Not only does the loss relate to overcharges on a particular shipment, but affects also the volume of traffic, because the people deprived of the profits are rendered less able to carry on such an extended business. The people are now awake, and have been awakened by the discussion growing out of the opening of the canal to their unjust treatment, not only in the way of driving competition off the waters, but discrimination and mistreatment in the way of connections with water craft, by which the people of all the interior country are virtually deprived of any benefits of river and harbor work or water transportation.

The subject is now before the people, and whether the evil be thoroughly or only partially corrected in this bill, the remedy will come, and come soon. The railroad companies may just as well put their houses in order. The people intend that they shall divorce the ownership of railroads from the ownership of competing water craft. If the canal should confer no other benefit upon the people of the United States, this lesson alone is well worth its entire financial cost. There is another lesson it has taught us. For many years the people of the West were the dupes of protective-tariff robbery, voting to continue the system which oppressed them, just as blind votaries would, in their idolatrous worship, fall before the supposed instrument of deity which destroyed them.

While they were constantly robbed, they did not realize nor believe it. Though Democratic orators went among them and told them that they were being robbed by the protected special interests in this country, they were told, on the other hand, that it was a Democratic falsehood. When they were told that the protected interests in this country sold articles of necessity to them at double the prices charged to foreigners after shipping them thousands of miles across the waters, they were told by the other side that it was a Democratic campaign falsehood. The robbery went on for 40 years, the people selling their produce in an open market in competition with all countries and buying everything they needed, under a protected market, at twice the prices paid by foreigners; going on at every election, blind devotees to a fetish, setting at naught the truthful councils of the Democrats, and voting election after election to continue the system which held them victims of perpetual robbery. When the canal legislation was initiated the protectionists were caught napping. They allowed a provision to slip in providing that all material and supplies needed by the Government on the Isthmus should be admitted free of duty. The first response to advertisement for bids showed that our protected American friends and neighbors charged on an average about twice as much as foreigners offered on the same articles. It raised a storm that can not be quelled. Both the last two Republican idols—Taft and Roosevelt—were on guard. Roosevelt was President and Taft was his grand high priest, the Secretary of War, in charge of the operations. They were about to act honestly and give the American people the benefit of the law and take the foreign goods at a just price instead of being robbed by domestic freebooters at double prices, but by some means a provision was made in substance that if in the opinion of the President the prices charged were not extortionate or unreasonably extortionate the American goods might be accepted even at the charge of a higher price. No morality was ever claimed for that performance, but robbery was legalized. It is a poor certificate to morality that a man's goods are accepted on the ground that his prices are not unreasonably extortionate, yet these patriotic fellow citizens of ours proceeded to rob the Government under the permission of the President and Secretary of War by virtue of that elastic statute. But it awakened the people. They were no longer deluded by the assertion that these were Democratic falsehoods made for campaign purposes.

When Dolliver and LA FOLLETTE and CUMMINS, and a hundred other Republicans of standing and ability, took up the subject and told their people the story of their wrongs and cited the action of Roosevelt and Taft, the two twin idols of the Republican Party, all skepticism was expelled, all doubt was removed. Not only was interest awakened, but resentment of the people was aroused and the reformatory wave has been rolling on in aid of honest and fair taxation, and it has assumed such immense proportions and promises such benevolent operation as to wipe from existence the last vestige of the Republican Party, the promoter as well as the political beneficiary of robber protection. That consummation, devoutly to be wished, so long hoped for, has been assured in the manner described, through the lessons taught in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal and the legislation attending it. If no other benefits should ever accrue to the American people from its construction, it has many times paid for itself if these lessons result in the emancipation of the popular mind from the domination of protective theories and rid the country forever of the Republican Party.

All things considered, the situation affords not only abundant reason for satisfaction, but should cause the heart of every American to swell with pride when we contemplate our unbounded success.

So many people indulged in stale, ribald jest, insinuating about petty errors and possible wrong, that I demurred to the practice of looking for flaws where there were none upon the flawless performance of a great work, nor did I wish to give sanction to the odious practice of making puns always at the wrong time and place; but when our ship docked last winter at Cristobal and Col. Goethals from the wharf greeted me with a cheery "How do you feel, Mr. Chairman?" instead of responding in popular slang by saying that I felt like a panamaniac or panacea or pandora or pandemonium, involuntarily the expression came bounding and unbidden from my exultant feelings, and I shouted back, "I feel like a panegyric," and I did; and I feel that way yet and more and more so every time I think about our great work down there, the crowning triumph of human genius.

The differences as to the method of governing and operating the canal and its inseparable adjunct, the Canal Zone, the divisions of opinion about population, theories of government, furnishing supplies, and treatment of vessels, have all been adjusted in so far as Congress can at this time adjust them, and we rejoice that we have fulfilled the expectations of the constructors by supplying at this session the desired legislation adequate in its provisions to permit the President to open for operation and exhibit to the world the benefits and glories of this unparalleled achievement, standing out unique in all respects among all the accomplishments of mortals. I would not be irreverent, nor can I be in this connection. The Lord made us and all things. He made the Isthmus and all its wonders. He made no mistake in leaving the chain of mountains separating the two oceans. He gave us the north and south divisions of the great American Continent, almost from the North to the South Poles. He did it for the purpose of giving us an opportunity to show what we could do. The situation was at hand, an opportunity to unite the two oceans, curtailing the sailing distance by 8,000 miles, bringing together in close communication States and cities widely separated, thereby improving and utilizing the physical situation for us and the rest of mankind for military, commercial, and social purposes, and in so doing furnishing to history for the encouragement and enlightenment and elevation of mankind the unparalleled exhibition of what can be done by honest and able men devoted to their duties in the way of business integrity, moral character, and intellectual might. St. Paul said:

> For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

My own disappointments as to the route, form, and tolls of the canal and the minor details in which from time to time I have been overruled and denied my own way in the matter are eclipsed, overshadowed, sunken, and forgotten in the overwhelming satisfaction and glory of our unparalleled success, which will stand as a monument to American skill, brains, and honesty till the stars shall fade, the sun shall die, and this world shall teem no longer with the busy sons of men.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I want to present briefly the vital matters in conference—how they were disposed of by the conferees.

When the House bill went to the Senate it contained a provision that vessels of the United States engaged in the coastwise trade should go through the canal free of toll. The Senate placed on the bill an amendment making the same provision with reference to American vessels engaged in the foreign trade. The Senate yielded wholly with reference to the last amendment, and it goes out of the bill.

The Senate placed as an amendment on the provision with respect to coastwise vessels the word "exclusively," so as to apply only to vessels engaged exclusively in the coatwise trade. The Senate yielded on that amendment, so that the provision placed in the bill by the House with reference to coastwise vessels remains unchanged.

There was a provision put into the House bill as reported with reference to preventing the railroad ownership of water carriers operated, or that might be operated, in competition with their rail lines. As to that provision, so far as the House is concerned, I feel it to be simple justice to say that it was largely prepared, if not wholly so, by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COVINGTON], a member of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The Senate amended that provision so as practically to provide that the ownership of water carriers by railroads competing with themselves should not be considered illegal until investigated and determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission to be competing. It was referred to in newspaper parlance as the "Bourne amendment." In conference that provision was changed so as to read as it now appears in the bill. The Senate amendment, called the Williams-Gallinger amendment, providing for the registry of foreign-built but American-owned ships was put in shape largely by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS], with the very valuable aid of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER], who is chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. The provision prepared by the gentleman from Minnesota and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] is in every way much better than the provision contained in the Senate amendment known as the Williams amendment.

I want to say here, inasmuch as I feel that it is just, that the committee received very material aid in the preparation of this measure from the gentleman from Missouri, the chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, as he had prepared a bill which was reported by his committee known as the free-ships bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will it disorganize the gentleman's remarks to state now what is the provision in the bill with reference to the ownership by railroads of ships that pass through the Panama Canal?

Mr. SIMS. The provision agreed upon by the conferees prohibits absolutely the passage through the canal of ships owned by railroads in competition with themselves.

I want to say further, on the side, so to speak, that the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries has brought in more good legislation at this session of Congress than has been reported from that committee in the 15 years in which I have had the honor to serve in this House. I want to say, in justice to the able and distinguished chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, that for nine long months he has given earnest, painstaking study and attention to this bill. I want to say further that there is not a provision in this bill that looks to the liberation of commerce and the prevention of monopoly that has not had his active and energetic support. [Applause.]

I think the provision in the bill which divorces water carriers from railroad ownership will be worth to this country in its effects and results the entire labor that has been expended on all the provisions of this bill.

I want to say, in justice to the entire Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, that so far as I have been able to judge—without respect to party and without individually naming the members, except the chairman and the ranking minority member, because they were on the conference committee—the entire membership, so far as this legislation is concerned and so far as every other measure pending before it is concerned, has been nonpartisan and liberal, and I believe every Member was actuated with a zeal solely for the public good, without regard to any special interest to be affected.

Mr. Speaker, I opposed free tolls. The commitee opposed free tolls on American-owned or on any other kind of vessels passing through that canal. I do not care whether we had a treaty restricting us or not. I do not care if we had owned that territory from the day that this Government was formed. When we expended the money of the people to afford a facility which private-owned and corporation-owned vessels can use to pile up immense profits, vessels so owned should at least be willing to pay a toll equal to the sum required for the payment of the current expenses incurred for the maintenance of that facility. [Applause.]

I think the House conferees are entitled to credit for inducing the Senate conferees to yield on the question of tolls on foreign vessels. That largely removes the question raised as to the violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty and places us in a better position in the eyes of the nations of the world. It will, I believe, largely eliminate trouble growing out of that cause and perhaps prevent the matter going to The Hague.

Now, I want to say that I think that that provision of this bill which provides for the American registry of foreign-built but American-owned ships and providing for duty-free materials for repairs will have more to do with the building up of the American merchant marine of the United States than any ship-subsidy bill that has been proposed in this House since I have been a Member of it. I think that that portion of this bill is worth the entire effort that the committee and the House have given this measure. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some uncertainty as to whether the first request that I made was put to the House. I do not believe it was put. I desire the Chair to put to the House my request for unanimous consent that all gentlemen desiring to print speeches in the RECORD on this bill shall have five legislative days in which to do it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SISSON). The gentleman from Georgia requests that all Members who desire to extend their remarks on this bill shall have five legislative days in which to print their speeches in the RECORD.

Mr. ADAMSON. Whether they speak or not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair put the request "All gentlemen who desire to extend their remarks" shall have five legislative days in which to do it.

[Mr. OLMSTED addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Do either of the gentlemen to whom time has been allotted by the House desire to proceed now?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My friend takes precedence always.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. None of those to whom I desire to yield are here now. I prefer to have the gentleman from Pennsylvania use some of his time.

Mr. ADAMSON. If one of the other gentlemen wishes to proceed, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman has 20 minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That time is under the control of the gentleman from Minnesota, is it not?

Mr. ADAMSON. No; it is under the gentleman's own control.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this is one of the most flagrant instances we have had in this session of the introduction of new legislation into a bill intended for a specific purpose. The bill is entitled:

An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone.

And as originally reported it attempted to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal. That is what the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee was charged to do, and it undertook to perform the duty of preparing a bill that should carry out the charge which Congress had imposed upon it.

The bill was forwarded to the Senate in regular course, and amendments were there added, some of which apparently were not germane to the bill. Now, after all legislative forms have been complied with the bill comes back, reported by the conference committee, not a bill for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone, but a bill to revise the tariff laws of the country, to override the navigation laws of the country, to provide for many different elements in legislation, that were not contemplated when the first reference was made to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

As reported by the conference committee, without warrant from the House, without the sanction of any amendment passed by the Senate, this bill proposes to regulate the construction of vessels in the United States.

I make the assertion that there is no authority under the rules of the House, no warrant of law, for the conference committee to provide a revision of section 4132, providing for the construction of vessels within the United States. That is wholly beyond the scope and power of the committee, since the original bill and the amendments thereto have reference, not to American-built ships in any particular but only to foreign-built ships.

In this respect the Speaker of this House, had he followed the decision he made this morning in the Alaska coal case on the naval appropriation bill, must have ruled that the point of order made by me yesterday was well taken. We had no such ruling, but we had an intimation that he would have ruled that way had he not been relieved of the opportunity. But he was saved from making that ruling by the report of the Committee on Rules, which proposed to make every amendment in this bill germane.

I make the assertion that the inclusion in this bill by a conference committee of the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila, with respect to registry in the coastwise trade, is wholly unwarranted by any authority vested in the conference committee. There was absolutely nothing in any of the legislation in this House, nor in any of the discussion pertaining to this bill, nor in any amendment proposed by the Senate, that had any reference whatever to the trade of the Philippines, or Guam, or Tutuila. The Speaker has been relieved of ruling upon that point of order.

I make the assertion also with respect to foreign-built yachts, pleasure boats, or vessels, that the committee had no warrant to report in respect to that provision. There was nothing in the discussion in the House, nothing in any amendments offered in the Senate to warrant the conference committee in including that provision in this bill, and the Speaker must have ruled that the point of order was well taken, had it not been for the rule brought in here, which expressed the will of the majority and the desire to override discussion upon this question.

I make the further assertion—and this is the most important phase of the present question of the invasion of the rights of the House—that the conferees had absolutely no right to insert in this bill that paragraph which provides for the admission free into this country of materials entering into the construction and equipment of ships. Here is a clear-cut invasion of the tariff laws, an invasion of the right of the House to deal with revenue measures. It is an invasion of the constitutional privilege of the House.

Yet when the point of order was made and the precedents were offered, and the matter was held under consideration, we were met, not with a decision of the question confirming the Constitution and defending the rights of the House, but met by a rule brought in here for the purpose of making everything germane, and asserting might over right in the House of Representatives.

Now, as to the merit of these propositions, are we to permit some one in conference, after both Houses have fully discussed the question within proper and legal limits, to take up entirely new and foreign matter, regardless of the rules of the House and Senate? If we are, then any bill referred to conferees may be made to create new matter, and suddenly, overnight, to institute new laws or to override existing laws, and this without notice to the people through their Representatives.

I object to the inclusion of these items in this bill, first of all, because they have no place there. The conferees exceeded their authority when they placed them there. The conferees violated the Constitution of the United States when they put tariff measures in this bill. It was a bill for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal. The conferees had no charge to institute new legislation; they were not authorized to deal with these important foreign questions. If they were, the people whom I represent, the people whom you represent, had the right to be notified in order that we and they could be posted as to what the great majority intended to do to them. I am of the firm belief that the passage of this measure, as brought into the House by the conferees without authority, will injure the shipbuilding interests of this country. It will drive away that labor which is profitably employed and be a boon to foreign labor which receives a lower wage.

Statistics demonstrate clearly that foreign shipbuilders, and particularly those in the yards of Great Britain, pay a wage rate that is less than one-half what we do in the United States for the work of the mechanic.

You propose, in this Panama Canal bill, that there shall be no protection to the American workingman. You propose that the man who gets $2.50 a day in the American shipyards shall be made to compete with the man who gets $1 a day in the British shipyards. There is no answer to that question except the degradation of the American workingman and the exaltation of his competitor on the other side.

But you do not stop with the shipbuilding industry in the United States. You propose to admit free of duty, in violation of the existing tariff laws and in violation of the Constitution—you propose to admit free not only those things that enter into the construction of a ship but everything that goes to equip a ship. What does that include?

I said a little while ago, in answer to the gentleman from Georgia, that those who are interested in this bill were not only those who work in shipyards but the tillers of the soil, the delvers in the mines, and the men who work in the mills. You attack their right to protection. You propose that everything that goes into a $6,000,000 battleship shall come into the United States free; you propose that everything that goes into the construction of any ship shall come into the United States free. The food that comes off the farm that feeds the sailor is to come in free; that touches the pocketbook of the farmer of the United States. You propose that everything that is used on board of a ship shall come in free—every rug, every piece of carpet that goes on the floor of the ship, every bit of upholstery, every curtain, every piece of linoleum, every piece of oilcloth, every article of glassware or cutlery shall be brought in here from foreign countries to displace just that much of American manufacture. That touches the mill worker in the United States; that touches the man and the woman who toil in the congested centers, and who in this year of our Lord are paid, as the statistics prove, at least three times as much as they are paid in Germany and at least twice as much as they are paid in Great Britain.

All this comes in without notice, with no opportunity for discussion in this House, in a bill providing a government for the operation of the Panama Canal. It is not correct legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the business associations of the city I have the honor to represent are against this Panama measure, not because they do not want the Panama Canal opened and operated as originally intended and as Congress ought to provide, but because of the inclusion into the measure of this extraneous legislation. Not only the trade bodies, like the Maritime Exchange, and the commercial institutions have arisen in protest against this measure as it is brought into the House, but thousands of workingmen in the district I represent have indicated their displeasure with the measure.

You on the Democratic side may think you are pleasing the workingmen of the country by instituting in this surreptitious way the policy and practice of free trade, but, in my judgment, you made one of the greatest tactical blunders of the session when you permitted your dignified Speaker to walk out of the chair without deciding the point of order that was made. You had to resort to subterfuge, you had to go secretly to the Committee on Rules to find a way to override the law and to override the rights of the constituents whom we all represent.

In my judgment you will gain nothing by this procedure. The people will understand the difference between protection and free trade as you propose it in this bill. You are trying to get it in here just as the nose of the camel is poked under the tent. Ultimately the whole body will appear, and the tent will go up into the air; but in my judgment the warning that is now given to the people as to the intent of the Democratic Party with respect to these things will be fully understood.

I have no desire to discuss this question further. It is too plain to need much argument, and as the House wants to adjourn, I shall close by saying: "Go on, majority; work out your will; if you think the views of a half dozen leaders who map out your course of action for you, and who thus propose to enter the free-trade wedge will profit you in the country in the coming campaign, go on." I am willing to stand and lose with the rest of my fellow countrymen. I am willing that the majority may work out its will and have its way, but I am not willing to sit idle, without protest, when I see the ax applied to our industries and know that ultimately the entire foundation of the protective system in this country must fall. I protest against the kind of legislation that has invaded the rights of this House in this bill. I protest against the conference committee, consisting of six men, framing and introducing legislation that creates, revises, amends, corrects, or abrogates existing law. I protest against any star-chamber proceeding in violation of the rights of the people in the House or in the Senate, that permits, by the mere operation of a rule over which the majority has control, the overthrow of long-standing existing legislation.

The people did not adopt the existing tariff laws of this country without full information. The people had no opportunity during the preparation of any one of the tariff-revision bills during this session of Congress to have a hearing before your Ways and Means Committee. The people will judge of your methods when they learn that through the subterfuge of a Panama Canal government bill you propose to tear down the tariff walls, even to the protection upon potatoes that go on the ship, or the garments or glassware and cutlery that seamen use. But if this is your way, so let it be. I can not defeat it, but I can protest against the measure. I protest against the manner in which it is brought in, and I do protest against that system by which a fair ruling by the Speaker can not be obtained. I protest against that system which enables a Committee on Rules to override both law and precedent, and I believe there will be less enthusiasm on the other side of the House when the people are fully informed upon to-day's proceedings. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Minnesota if he wishes to be heard at this time.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. No; I prefer to have the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] proceed, if he desires.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has exhibited great ignorance of the provisions of this bill with reference to free ships. The amendment to the Senate amendments Nos. 11 and 12 of section 5 of the Panama Canal bill, agreed to by the conferees, to which he registers such vehement protest, is as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 11 and 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the two said Senate amendments and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That section 4132 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 4132. Vessels built within the United States and belonging wholly to citizens thereof; and vessels which may be captured in war by citizens of the United States and lawfully condemned as prize, or which may be adjudged to be forfeited for a breach of the laws of the United States; and seagoing vessels, whether steam or sail, which have been certified by the Steamboat-Inspection Service as safe to carry dry and perishable cargo, not more than 5 years old at the time they apply for registry, wherever built, which are to engage only in trade with foreign countries or with the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila, being wholly owned by citizens of the United States or corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof, the president and managing directors of which shall be citizens of the United States or corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof, the president and managing directors of which shall be citizens of the United States, and no others, may be registered as directed in this title. Foreign-built vessels registered pursuant to this act shall not engage in the coastwise trade: Provided, That a foreign-built yacht, pleasure boat, or vessel not used or intended to be used for trade admitted to American registry pursuant to this section shall not be exempt from the collection of ad valorem duty provided in section 37 of the act approved August 5, 1909, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes." That all materials of foreign production which may be necessary for the construction or repair of vessels built in the United States and all such materials necessary for the building or repair of their machinery and all articles necessary for their outfit and equipment may be imported into the United States free of duty under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided further, That such vessels so admitted under the provisions of this section may contract with the Postmaster General under the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce," so long as such vessels shall in all respects comply with the provisions and requirement of said act.'"

He does not seem to know the provisions of the Payne tariff law, a bill for which he voted and in praise of which I have no doubt he has often said that it is the best tariff law ever enacted in this country. There is no provision in this bill relating to free shipbuilding material to be used in the construction of ships in American ship trade that is not contained in the Payne tariff law of August 5, 1909, except that the amendment agreed to by the conferees extends the provision of the tariff law and gives to American shipyards free material for repair of ships, as well as for shipbuilding, and removes all restrictions as to the use in the coastwise trade of ships built in American shipyards of free material.

Section 19 of the tariff law of August 5, 1909, provides that all materials of foreign production which may be necessary for the construction of vessels built in the United States for foreign account and ownership or for the purpose of being employed in the foreign trade, including the trade between the Atlantic and the Pacific ports of the United States, and all such materials necessary for the building of machinery and all articles necessary for their outfit and equipment, may be imported in bond under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and upon proof that such materials have been used for said purpose no duty shall be paid thereon, but vessels receiving the benefit of this section shall not be allowed to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States more than six months in any one year, except upon the payment to the United States of the duties of which a rebate is herein allowed.

That is the existing law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I know it is.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not care to be interrupted.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows that that is the limitation.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I permitted the gentleman from Pennsylvania to go ahead and make misstatement after misstatement with reference to the effect of the amendment agreed to by the conferees with reference to free ships and free ship material without challenging him, and I can not permit him to inject any more erroneous statements into my remarks. I have correctly stated the existing law, and the only effect of this amendment is to take away the limitation of six months and permit ships built in American shipyards to be used 12 months in the year. That is in the interest of our ocean commerce that the gentleman claims to be a friend of; that is in the interest of American-built ships and of the American shipbuilders, but the gentleman does not seem to know it. They have the privilege now, and have had it for years, to import duty-free material for the construction, outfit, and equipment of vessels, except if they built a ship in an American shipyard of imported material, the use of the ship in the coastwise trade is limited to six months in the year. By the amendment against which the gentleman from Pennsylvania inveighs so bitterly the conferees extend the privilege of using that ship in the coastwise trade 12 months in the year instead of 6, and is it possible that the gentleman is so ignorant of the tariff law that he does not know that? I wish to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING] to-day brought me a message from Mr. Samuel W. Knox, president of the New York Shipbuilding Co., to the effect that he had no objection to this bill as reported by the conferees, and particularly the amendment under discussion relating to free ships for the foreign trade and free ship material, and the other day the president of the Maryland Steel Co., Mr. Wood, said to me over the phone with regard to Senate amendment No. 11 that if it was made clear that foreign-built ships may not be used in the coastwise trade he would withdraw any further objection to it.

I do not want the workmen of the gentleman's city engaged in the great shipbuilding industry to be misled by any such statements as the gentleman has made upon this floor as to the effect of the amendment agreed to by the conferees. He is wholly wrong and his criticisms without force or merit. We are not building any ships for the foreign trade. More than 40 years have passed since the Civil War and we have only 872,671 nominal registered tonnage in the foreign trade, whereas we had two and one-half million at the beginning of the Civil War, the greater part of which was actively engaged in the foreign trade. If our American shipyards were now building ships for the foreign trade, then it might be said with some show of reason that this amendment might be prejudicial to them, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania in his opposition to the amendment is in line with many others who are determined that we shall not restore our American merchant marine unless we pay tribute to the trusts.

The gentleman says that the committee of conference had no right to amend section 4132 of the Revised Statutes and were guilty of usurping power in doing so. Why, if he had taken the pains to inform himself, he would have found that the committee did nothing more than to whip the Senate amendment into shape and revise the only section of the statute to which the amendment proposed by the Senate would be germane, and that is section 4132. It does not amend that section otherwise than to provide that foreign-built ships may be admitted to American registry for the foreign trade.

Senate amendment No. 11 provided that "all legal prohibitions upon the American registration of foreign-built ships built to engage only in foreign trade are hereby repealed." The Senate amendment, by implication, repealed so much of section 4132 of our navigation laws as forbids the registry of foreign-built ships for use in the foreign trade. The committee simply proceeded in an orderly way to accomplish the same result by amending said section 4132 in that regard without doing more. Then the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] again refers with great vehemence to that part of the amendment relating to foreign-built yachts and pleasure boats, and contends that the conferees have tinkered with the tariff law and again exceeded their powers. Again the gentleman is wrong. It may be illuminating to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to know that under the amendment as adopted by the Senate foreign-built yachts would be entitled to American registry without paying the 35 per cent ad valorem duty provided by the Payne tariff law, but the conferees were more jealous of the gentleman's industry than he seems to know. I suggested to the conferees to put in the proviso that foreign-built yachts, pleasure boats, or vessels not used or intended to be used for trade, shall not be admitted to American registry unless they pay an ad valorem duty of 35 per cent, as provided by section 37 of the Payne tariff law. Now, that is a great thing for the gentleman to protest against here. That is in the interest of his own shipyards; it will protect that industry to that extent. Why the gentleman should protest I can not understand.

I am sincere in my position as to the admission of foreign-built ships to the coastwise trade. I am willing that our American shipyards shall have a monopoly of building ships for our coastwise trade, but in view of the fact that we do not build ships for the foreign trade, except in negligible numbers, we can not possibly hurt the American shipbuilding industry by granting American registry to foreign-built ships for the foreign trade. The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries carefully considered this whole question before reporting to the House the Alexander bill providing the free ships. We undertook to provide that foreign-built ships might be admitted to the American registry for the foreign trade. The American shipbuilders stated before the committee in hearings on that bill and similar bills that it costs 40 to 50 per cent more to build ships in the United States than they could be built for abroad, and as it is our wish to give our manufacturing and other industries better facilities with which they may extend their foreign trade, the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries reported the free-ship bill, and the conferees have been generous enough to incorporate it in the Panama Canal bill as a substitute to Senate amendments Nos. 11 and 12, known as the Williams and Gallinger amendments, thereto.

I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania after he has considered the whole question will conclude that I am a better friend to his industry and of our merchant marine than he is, and a better friend to the American laborer than he is. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

The trouble with the gentleman is he does not understand the amendment agreed to by the conferees, and its effect on our shipbuilding industry, otherwise he would not criticize the work of the conferees. Instead of finding fault with them and charging them with exceeding their powers, he should thank them. If they exceeded their powers in any particular it was only by incorporating in the amendment the provision giving to American shipbuilders free material for the construction and repair of ships, and in removing the last restriction as to their use in the coast trade.

To restate briefly the transgressions of the conferees in the amendment agreed to by them to the Senate amendments Nos. 11 and 12, they make clear:

First. That foreign ships shall be admitted to American registry for the foreign trade only.

Second. That the Philippine Islands, and the islands of Guam and Tutuila shall be included in the trade in which such vessels shall engage.

Third. That the foreign-built ships shall not be more than five years old.

Fourth. That foreign-built yachts, pleasure boats, or vessels not intended to be used for trade, shall not be admitted to American registry without paying the duty of 35 per cent ad valorem, provided by the tariff act of August 5, 1909.

Fifth. That foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry may contract with the Postmaster General under the ocean-mail act of 1891, only when they comply with all the provisions of that act, instead of part of the provisions of said act as provided in the Senate amendment.

Sixth. That American shipbuilders shall have free material for the construction, outfit, equipment, and repair of ships, and removing all restrictions as to use of such ships in our coastwise trade.

A careful consideration of the work of the conferees will make all thoughtful people conclude that the protest of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is brutum fulmen.

At the opening of the Civil War the American people owned 2,500,000 tons of ships engaged in the foreign trade; at the close of that great struggle our registered tonnage had declined 1,000,000 tons.

The downward tendency was checked for a while with revival of business after the war, but the decrease began again in 1880 and continued with occasional interruptions until 1898, when our vessels in the foreign trade had a total tonnage of less than three-quarters of a million. Since then there has been some gain, but on June 30, 1910, our registered tonnage of every class, steam and sail, seaworthy and otherwise, measured only 872,671 tons.

There were many causes which led to the decline of our merchant marine in the over-sea trade. Among others, Dr. Johnson in his book on the Elements of Transportation mentions the following:

1. The substitution of steamers for sailing vessels, and substitution of iron instead of wood in shipbuilding.
2. As late as 1870 only 3 per cent of the tonnage annually constructed in the United States consisted of iron vessels, while at that time 80 per cent of the new vessels built in England were built of iron.
3. The withdrawal of Government aid to American vessels in 1858.
4. The effect of the Civil War on our shipping was disastrous.

Congress gave the manufacturers liberal protection by continuing the war tariffs. While reserving to American shipyards the monopoly of constructing vessels for registry and enrollment under the American flag, practically nothing was done to compete with that under the foreign flag.

Congress did not repeal the special taxes placed on our shipping during the Civil War period until 1868, and it was not until 1872 that materials might be imported duty free, and then only for use in construction and equipment of wooden vessels.

The builders of steel vessels were obliged to pay duty on imported material until 1890, and its importation under the tariff act of that year and under subsequent tariff acts was hedged about by such restrictions that the privilege was of no great value.

Now, for the first time since the Civil War, is the last restriction removed. Under the Panama Canal bill as amended in conference by the adoption of the free-ship-material section of the Alexander bill, the American shipyards may use imported material in the construction, equipment, and repair of vessels, steel or wood, free of duty.

Mr. Fassett, of New York, in a speech delivered in the House in the Sixtieth Congress, made the following admission:

This industry of carrying goods upon the high seas is the one American industry that has been slaughtered on the altar of protection. I agree with the gentleman from Missouri, for once, that the protective tariff has slaughtered our American merchant deep-sea marine.

With this obstacle now removed, may we not confidently hope that in the near future we may witness a gradual revival of our deep-sea merchant marine?

As to the wisdom of this free-ship amendment, I might quote many eminent authorities, but a few will suffice.

The New York Evening Post of April 11, 1912, in an editorial headed "Another appeal for free ships," has this to say, commenting on the views of Rear Admiral Chadwick in reply to a query by the Navy League:

ANOTHER APPEAL FOR FREE SHIPS.

The recent action of the New York Chamber of Commerce in demanding the abolition of the antiquated navigation laws which prevent our development of a merchant marine lends especial interest to a vigorous utterance of Rear Admiral French E. Chadwick, in reply to a query from the Navy League. That organization had inquired his views as to the restoration of our merchant fleet. He struck out with the vigor to be expected of the captain of Rear Admiral Sampson's flagship and his chief of staff in 1898:

"I would say that I am not in favor of subsidies of any kind. I think that all that is necessary to restore our shipping is to abolish the Cromwellian laws which now stand in our statutes, and thus give our shipowners a chance. Our oversea carrying trade has been protected to death, literally."

This was not, we believe, the answer the Navy League wanted. It, we fancy, desired to hear that our all-wise and paternal Government should proceed at once by bounties, subsidies, tariffs. * * *

The Navy League believes in a merchant fleet nursed into being and kept alive by artificial food. But Rear Admiral Chadwick knows by experience the evil that protection can do. He remembers "our building four large wooden side-wheel steamers for the Pacific Mail (about 1869), when the rest of the world was building iron screw ships, of which the White Star Britannic was a sample. Had we not had protection these preposterous ships would have been of the Britannic type and would have lasted and made money." And he adds, vigorously enough, "All the subsidizing, nursing, and coddling in the world can't avail against our present brutally ignorant and unbusinesslike system. I have had these opinions now many years, and to-day am as strong in the opinions I here express as ever."

Rear Admiral Chadwick then takes up the cases of Great Britain and Germany, pointing out that the former in 1848 abrogated laws of about the same tenor as ours. The English Government, as he declares, does not subsidize at all in the sense in which our shipbuilders would have us in this country. They do pay, of course, a compensation for mail services, but he naturally objects to the counting into the amount paid by England the cost of the Royal Naval Reserves and the Canadian fishing bounties, as was done under the head of subsidies in our Commissioner of Navigation's Report for 1909. Leaving out England's colonies, the total of subsidies, apart from Admiralty retainers for certain large ships, is only about $3,200,000, "a very moderate compensation for the world-wide mail service rendered." Naturally Rear Admiral Chadwick says that to maintain that England's vast fleet is kept up by subsidies is absurd. He quotes the secretary general of the Hamburg Line, Herr Huldemann, as citing the experience of England and Germany to show that with practically no subsidies—the smallest per ton of merchant fleet of any in Europe—England and Germany were able to "immensely increase their fleets" in the decade prior to 1909—England by almost 5,000,000 tons and Germany by more than 2,000,000 tons. Herr Huldemann sees clearly that the lack of growth in other countries must in part be ascribed to the "false educational influence the system of subsidies is exercising by the fact that it makes the receiver of the subsidy a Government pensioner and spares him the trouble of earning his bread by his own efforts."

Our first step, Rear Admiral Chadwick, like Grover Cleveland and many another student of the subject, declares, must be to have free ships. And he also touches upon a point which is not dwelt upon often enough. We have right along been sacrificing the shipowners to the shipbuilders. The would-be owner is forced into other lines of business because he has not the right to buy his ships where he may—as cheaply at least as the man who is competing with him. As soon as it is urged that we buy our merchant ships abroad, as foreigners used to buy of us when we could build better and faster ships than they, the cry of "spare the shipbuilder" is heard—the shipbuilder, whose American protected labor is beginning to bear something of the aspect of the protected labor of the American Woolen Co. in Lawrence—in one shipyard of which Rear Admiral Chadwick knows all the riveters are Syrians. The powerful, vested shipyard interests that have been kept alive artificially all these years by Government contracts and the navigation laws are not to be compelled to readjust their yards, enter into a fair and free competition with the rest of the world, and, in homely American language, "get cut and hustle for the business." They are to fall back upon the Government and live under its protecting shadow.

Mr. B. N. Baker, of Baltimore, one of the best authorities in the United States as to the effect of this legislation, speaking in the light of long experience in the steamship business, has this to say of the free-ship bill now incorporated in the Panama Canal bill:

MARCH 14, 1912.

Hon. J. W. ALEXANDER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Am very much interested in your bill, 16692, which I note was reported March 11 from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. If you can secure the passage of this bill, it will certainly add to our merchant marine, particularly as the bill gives the privilege to American citizens of buying ships for the foreign trade, and that these ships will be eligible for service under the ocean-mail act of 1891; also that they will be entitled to any benefits given to American vessels over foreign ships in the use of the Panama Canal.

My long experience in the steamship business justifies me in believing if this bill is passed and the Post Office Department will advertise for a line of steamers to the east coast of South America from any of the north Atlantic or Gulf ports and also a line of steamers to the west coast of South America through the Panama Canal, that our country will add more to its merchant marine in the next 2 years than has been added during the 21 years the ocean-mail act has been in effect.

* * * * * * *

This is the most sensible bill I have seen offered.

On account of the great difference in cost of a ship built in the United States, and also the additional cost of operating, it would be impossible, without the assistance of the ocean-mail act of 1891, for Americans to own and operate a steamship line. But this will give them the opportunity to do so.

Now, while the wages of the crew would be greater, it would in a measure be compensated for by the assistance given under the ocean-mail act of 1891. The cost of victualing the crew would be about the same. The ship purchased abroad at the lower cost, amounting to 56 per cent, the increase in insurance, interest, and depreciation would all be eliminated.

Then, too, the question of repairs at the extra cost of 20 per cent could probably be reduced by the admission of material free of duty to the extent of about 10 per cent; but labor would naturally cost 10 per cent more in this country.

I am firmly of the opinion, if such a bill passes, the time will come—and it is not very far distant—when our own shipyards will build at very nearly the same cost as abroad.

Yours, very truly,

B. N. BAKER.

The Panama Canal will soon be opened for traffic. There will be fierce competition for the ocean-carrying trade. We should be ready to command our share.

For years there has been a demand on the part of our manufacturers and merchants for better mail and cargo facilities to the ports of South America. If American citizens take advantage of this legislation we can have ships under the American flag, owned by American citizens, sailing to every port on the east and west coasts of South America.

Instead of doubling the mail pay provided for in the ocean mail act of 1891, as has been attempted for years past by the ship-subsidy advocates, the Postmaster General can employ foreign-built ships in that trade to carry the mail under said act at the compensation therein provided.

I call attention to these facts in the hope that the demand for subsidies may cease. If American citizens do not avail themselves of the privileges granted by this legislation, it will be strong if not conclusive proof that the seafaring life does not appeal to Americans and that we are content to have foreign ships, under foreign flags, carry our over-seas commerce.

A word more and I will conclude. Much has been said of the difference in the cost of operating a ship under the American and foreign flags. That cost has been grossly exaggerated as it relates to the foreign trade. Seamen's wages are regulated by the port from which the ship sails. For many years American shipmasters have had the privilege of shipping their crews abroad, and many avail themselves of that privilege, especially in the trade between American and European ports.

A bill, known as the "Wilson bill" (H. R. 23676), reported from the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman, is intended to make the seafaring life more attractive to American youths, and among other worthy objects, to equalize the operating expenses of ships.

I can not conclude without expressing to the conferees on the part of the House on the Panama Canal bill, Hon. WILLIAM C. ADAMSON of Georgia, Hon. THETUS W. SIMS of Tennessee, and Hon. FREDERICK C. STEVENS of Minnesota, my great appreciation of the honor done me in calling upon me to aid them in framing the free-ship amendment, and I indulge the hope that when my esteemed friend from Pennsylvania, Mr. MOORE, comes to understand the effect of the amendment better, he will have a better opinion of the results of our labors.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I wish to be notified at the end of 10 minutes. Mr. Speaker, I did not sign the conference report with my colleagues upon the conference committee because I could not agree to some of the Senate amendments to section 11. I wish to say, however, that in the drafting of section 5 it was my duty to confer with the gentleman from Missouri, Judge ALEXANDER, chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and the Commissioner of Navigation, and between them we did the best we could within the rules of this House to properly carry out the provisions of the Senate amendments as disagreed to by the House. The Senators did not see fit to yield. The conferees believed that the sentiment of the House would agree with the sentiment of the Senate, so we consulted the best authorities we knew—the chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, in whose judgment, experience, and integrity we all have very great confidence, and the Commissioner of Navigation, whose long experience and ability are acknowledged—so the amendments are the result of our labors, and so far as I am concerned I thoroughly believe we were within the rules of the House along the lines laid down so clearly and ably by the gentleman from Missouri. I think this House does not realize two things. First, that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, in the preparation of this canal bill, did not desire any of these extraneous matters to be in the measure. We did the best we could to exclude all of them, and the only reason that any of these provisions were included in the bill was the greed of the shipowners and merchants on the two coasts who demanded special favors for themselves irrespective of the honor or welfare of their country, and this compelled the introduction of outside matters. If they had kept their hands off in the preparation of this measure, we would not have had any of these amendments for discussion as we do to-day. The Committee on Interstate Commerce was not responsible for any of these amendments. The conferees of the Senate and House were not responsible for these amendments. They were inserted in the other body at the other end of the Capitol.

Their conferees would not yield, and we were obliged to take some of these amendments; but before we did that we consulted the best authority we could, and the amendments are before the House now in the report for consideration. There are 14 sections of this bill; 12 of them are unquestionable, and no one can doubt their soundness or wisdom. I think the authorities not only admit that the administrative provisions of the bill are excellent, but they are perfectly satisfied with them. The whole future work of the great canal will be carried on as it ought to be carried on to completion with the credit and honor of our country, and for that reason they ought to be adopted to-night, so that the work of permanent reorganization of the forces can be commenced at once. And in that work I think that this House and the country should know the great value of the services of the chairman of our committee. [Applause.] He has labored in season and he has labored out of season. He has labored patriotically and industriously, and he has done a work that the country will never realize the advantage of until the history of this gigantic work shall disclose the great benefit of his labors. So, I am glad of an opportunity, in these closing hours of this Congress, to bear witness to his ability, his patriotism, his zeal, and his fairness in relation to this measure. [Applause.] I am compelled, however, to differ with the conferees in the provisions of section 11 in three respects—that is, the railroad-owned section. With the section which passed the House forbidding the ownership of steamship lines by railroads in combination and in competition with themselves I thoroughly believe and am in hearty accord. It is perfected after a great deal of most intelligent work and a great deal of ability by the chairman and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COVINGTON], and I thoroughly believe in the provisions of it as it passed the House. I believe that the beneficial effects of it can not be overestimated by the transportation and mercantile interests of this country, but the Senate, however, amended it in three different ways and places with which I can not agree. First, they amended it by inserting the words "through the Panama Canal," with reference to the prohibition of vessels. I believe this makes it obvious that the treaties both with Great Britain and Panama are violated by the face of the amendments. The reasons are these, that the treaties provide that there shall be entire equality as to vessels and no discrimination between persons and vessels or anything else; that everybody shall be treated without any discrimination.

The substance of section 11 is that every common carrier, as a railroad, filing its schedules with the Interstate Commerce Commission comes within the provisions of the amendment. That, of course, would include the Canadian and possibly some of the Mexican railroads, which are common carriers, because they do file such schedules with the commission, and some of them own steamship lines competing with themselves in their own countries but not engaged in commerce within the United States. This bill does not limit the effect of that competition to the United States, but includes such within its native country. We can not assume in this way to regulate the domestic affairs of neighboring and friendly nations, but we certainly can not discriminate in favor of some foreign citizens owning ships and against others similarly owning ships when all are doing business legally under their own and our laws.

The Canadian Pacific, the Canadian Northern, and the Grand Trunk, and some Mexican lines have steamship lines competing with themselves in their own countries and are not yet within this Nation at all, and yet such business is included in the Senate amendment. If so included, those lines are excluded from the use of the canal, thereby plainly violating the provisions of the treaty. It may not amount to much and there may be no complaint, but I am unwilling to agree to a provision which, on its face, violates two solemn treaty agreements of this country, exactly the same as I was unwilling to agree to the provision in section 5 exempting coastwise trade from canal tolls.

Second. I object to the so-called antitrust amendment in section 11, as to vessels passing through the canal, because it is ridiculous and worthless. It was justly characterized on the other side of the Capitol, and justly should be characterized here, as one of the most absurd amendments which was ever submitted to a dignified legislative body. It is manifestly impossible of enforcement on its face. It provides only as to present actions and performances. It does not provide for anything which may happen in the future. So this could not relate to the canal at all or could not be enforced in reference to the canal.

Suppose any court should be crazy enough to attempt to enforce it; what would happen? Suppose a steamer of any of the large corporations which now are under litigation in New York should approach the canal with papers as provided by law, and the governor should say, "Why, you can not go through the canal until you have a lawsuit in the United States to determine whether you are owned or controlled by a trust." Then that vessel would be obliged to wait two or three or four or five years until that suit could be finally determined. And yet that is the substance of the amendment which the Senate sends over and the conferees agree to attempting to enforce the antitrust law. It is absurd, so nonsensical, it is impossible of enforcement. I can not sign a conference report which contains such a recommendation.

Third. The amendment which was offered in place of the so-called Bourne amendment placed in there by the Senate, to mitigate the severity of the provisions of section 11 as it passed the House. The House provision made it unlawful after the 1st day of July, 1914, for a railroad to own a water line in competition with itself. The Senate assumed to afford an opportunity to water lines to be owned by railroads and passed some kind of an amendment, which on its face also was manifestly absurd and unenforceable. But the conferees adopted an amendment which seems to me does not improve the situation. The substance of it is this:

This act will provide that on the 1st day of July, 1914, that all railroads must cease their combinations with water lines competing with themselves.

It assumes to give the Interstate Commerce Commission authority to extend that time after July 1, 1914, indefinitely upon the showing to the commission of two things—first, that it is for the public interest, a convenience to commerce; and, secondly, that such extension shall not exclude, prevent, or reduce competition.

Now, the very fact that the railroad has such an interest and combination with a water carrier does tend to exclude, reduce, and prevent competition. It can not help it. It is so manifest that it can not be denied and was the reason for the enactment of this very section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] has expired.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Three minutes more. The very purpose of the existence of section 11 is absolutely necessary and can not be gainsaid. The very purpose of that amendment is to prevent the sort of condition which does exclude competition. Yet in the conference amendment it is proposed to give the Interstate Commerce Commission an authority to have proof made before them that such extension does not reduce or exclude competition when everybody knows the contrary is and must be true and can not well be denied. The result is that we attempt to give the Interstate Commerce Commission authority which we do not in reality give. We attempt to give an opportunity to extend the time against the enforcement of the prohibitions of this act, when, as a matter of fact, we do not give any such opportunity at all, because the proof demanded as a basis for it is manifestly impossible. Or, if it is done, we put pressure upon the Interstate Commerce Commission to violate the provisions of the law that we are passing upon to-day, in order to insure the proper facilities for transportation to some sections of the country.

It will subject the commission to severe and unjust criticism, and it will stretch the plain provisions of the act in order to grant favors to some large corporations and monopolies. We ought not to place any such unjust burden and condition upon the commission.

I can not agree to any such provision that brings that pressure upon the Interstate Commerce Commission, to do an act that is manifestly improper, impossible, and on its face illegal. And for those three reasons—first, because section 11 manifestly violates the treaty; second, because it contains an absurd and nonsensical provision in trying to enforce the antitrust law, which is impossible of enforcement; and third, because it contains a provision purporting to confer an improper and impossible power upon the Interstate Commerce Commission, and, as a matter of fact does not do any such thing—I could not see my way clear to join my colleagues in signing the conference report.

And yet, at the same time, I wish to state that the bill ought to go into effect at once. Twelve sections are admirable, and are greatly needed at once. Section 11 does not take effect for two years, and if the objections to it, which I have stated to this House, are found to be sound, Congress can meet hereafter and correct them. But at this late hour in the session the bill ought to pass. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP]. I think I have 12 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] yields 7 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP]. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, if I thought for a moment that what we are to do here to-day would be final and conclusive, I might feel, both as a Member of this House and as a private citizen, grave concern lest we make some very serious blunders. But this is merely an initiative which we are now taking. We are bound to learn our lessons at considerable cost, not only after the Panama Canal has been opened for traffic, but before it is so opened. In confirmation of that statement need I call attention to that with which the most of us are familiar, namely, the conditions which have surrounded the administration of the Suez Canal since it was completed, something over 40 years ago? As to the administrative features of the conduct and management of this great project, which is now nearing completion, I say I have not much concern at the present time, because they will all right themselves. Experience will teach us, and we will be placed upon the right road and adopt the right plan.

There is only one feature about it, gentlemen of this House, which gives me any concern, and it is something concerning which, of we make a mistake to-day—I do not care how proud our record has been in the past—there will be a stain upon our escutcheon which no apology or subsequent corrective legislation will ever fully erase. Let us be very careful in considering our international obligations to other countries. We have been legislating during past sessions for fortifying the canal and to add to the Navy in order that we may adequately protect this great investment. But I want to say, gentlemen, if we are always in the right, if we never give just cause for grievance or complaint to any of our sister nations, we shall seldom have need of any fortresses or of any battleships for that purpose. Whatever we do that involves our international relations with foreign countries should be carefully considered, to the end that we may enact this legislation to the entire credit of the American people.

In the brief time which is allotted me I shall confine my remarks to the two phases of the subject which seem to be necessarily involved in the proposed legislation. To my mind they transcend in importance all the other features which in one branch or the other of Congress have been incorporated in its provisions. The first and, in my opinion, the most important of these is international in its character; the other is purely domestic, and as such subject to change in legislation from time to time as the needs thereof develop.

While the view seems to be quite prevalent that, inasmuch as our Government built the canal at its own expense through territory acquired by it, we are, therefore, left free to impose such conditions upon its use as we wish, yet I do not doubt for a moment that once the American people became familiar with the antecedent negotiations which led to the enactment of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty and the obligations which it imposed, this widespread impression would be greatly modified. A little more than 50 years before the enactment of that treaty—in the year 1850—the treaty commonly known as the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was entered into between Great Britain and the United States. Wisely or unwisely, that treaty provided that neither country could control, own, or operate exclusively a canal connecting the two oceans. It was to remove this inhibition upon the part of the United States that the Hay-Pauncefote treaty was enacted, which, while it still—according to the construction of some very able statesmen—prohibits Great Britain from constructing such a canal, did expressly permit our Government to do so. In exchange for this concession the latter treaty, to which I have just referred, contained certain stipulations pertaining to the use of such canal by the foreign nations. It is upon the proper construction of the provision in that treaty, which reads as follows, that has brought about a controversy which, while I think honest, yet is very unfortunate at this time. That provision reads as follows:

> The canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and war of all nations observing these rules, on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any nation or its citizens or subjects in respect of the conditions or charges of traffic, or otherwise.

In this provision just cited, was it intended that the words "all nations" should include our own? That such was the construction placed upon it seems to be borne out by the fact that when an amendment was proposed giving a preference to our coastwise vessels it was rejected at the time by the Senate by a vote of 43 to 27.

During the learned arguments made upon this international feature of the proposed legislation it has been contended by various gentlemen, more especially in the other body of our National Congress, that whatever doubt there was as to the construction of a treaty ought to be decided in our favor. Possibly, Mr. Speaker, this view is consonant with the hard-headed and more selfish rules which impel one of two contracting parties to drive a good bargain and get out of it the best terms possible for himself; but to my mind, even leaving out of consideration the costly embarrassments which, I think, are liable to follow on such a construction, a more enlightened—and certainly a more generous—policy dictates an exactly opposite course to pursue. Upon questions of honor and integrity there should be no different rule followed, whether nations or merely individuals are the contracting parties.

That the conception of this mighty project should have found place in a human mind is not so wonderful, when the map, which shows the narrow thread of land which separates the two great oceans, is viewed; and it is not surprising that, almost from the earliest discovery of this Isthmus, the navigator looked with longing eyes to a means of sailing his ship from the shores of one ocean to the shores of the other, involving but a few hours' time, instead of spending weeks in traversing six or seven thousand miles around the Horn and back again to make the desired connection. The execution of such a conception was a different thing, but here, again, it is not surprising that the task was finally left to American genius to successfully accomplish. Much has been said and much written about the difficulties which have had to be overcome to bring it abolt; but, Herculean as they were and at a cost greater by three times than that involved in building the great Suez Canal, we are now standing at the threshold of its final accomplishment.

No matter from what particular angle this project has been discussed—other than its purely engineering features—the one central idea presented to everybody must have been that it is essentially a world project, for does it not, for all time to come, connect the two greatest oceans which are the highways of commerce for all the nations? No Martian canal, either real or fancied, affords an example of greater utility of purpose. Anything less than a general use of this great passageway by all the nations of the earth will render its purpose abortive. Manifestly, then, the American Congress should by proper legislation do everything in its power to encourage such use by the most liberal and equitable legislation, against which the charge of unjust discrimination must never find a place.

But I pass to the second feature of this bill, which has to do with the levying of tolls. I read in one of our city papers the other day an editorial which had a heading like this, "The people win," and coming as it did from a conservative paper, as I think I might justly call it, it rather astonished me. I think most of that paper's editorials are very carefully thought out and display a good deal of sense, and yet the heading of this article, "The people win," caused me some surprise and I hastily looked up at the top of the paper to see if I had not bought a certain paper published in the city whose advocacy of the people's interests would not cause so much surprise. [Laughter.] Here is a paragraph of that editorial:

> The strong influence of public opinion is to be seen in the Panama Canal bill as it has passed the Senate. The American people wanted to realize on their investment of millions of dollars in the canal and demanded the free admission of American ships in the coastwise service. Great Britain protested, but the American people won their fight.

The people won nothing in that canal except the benefits which will come in common to all of saving by nearly half the circumnavigation of the earth, which is an economic saving to all the people. In that respect the people have won a great victory. But the people who in particular have won a victory, if measured by the benefits, are, as my friend from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] has stated, the men engaged in the coastwise traffic and the general shipping interests. I say without fear of successful contradiction, gentlemen, that the greatest ship subsidy that has ever been planned or thought of by Members of Congress in any piece of legislation will have been consummated in the opening of this canal absolutely free of any toll charges.

In looking over the minority report I noticed the remarkable statement of the gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND].

That gentleman, in the report referred to, uses the following language:

> We can not emphasize too strongly the elementary proposition that tolls levied upon vessels engaged in commerce between our eastern and western seaboards increase the amount the transcontinental railroads may charge for the same service. If a vessel en route from San Francisco to New York, through the canal, were required to pay $10,000 in tolls, the transcontinental railroads would largely be the beneficiaries. This question affects every ton of domestic freight that passes through the canal and every ton that is carried across the country by the railroads.

The gentleman's statement, while ingenious and specious, is full of sophistry in that it does not recognize the fact that real competition between transcontinental railroads and water shipments from coast to coast through the canal can not possibly exist. I believe the testimony at the hearings will bear me out in the statement that it costs anywhere from two to three times as much per ton for shipments by rail from San Francisco to New York, or vice versa, as it will cost between these points by water route through the canal. Surely, in the face of such facts, the gentleman would not contend that the imposition of a toll amounting to less than one-fifth of the difference in freight between the two methods of transportation would be added to the present rates charged by the railroads. The charging of tolls at the canal can only be materially in competition with the railroads where the difference between the rates for transportation charged are approximately equal to the amount of the toll charged. But this question, for reasons I have just stated, could never become material, as it concerns the tolls to be imposed for using the Panama Canal. In this connection, let me digress for a moment, to voice my hearty approval of the high praise accorded by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS]—who, let me say, though we differ in our political faith, is one of the ablest and most patriotic men of the House—to the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Mr. ADAMSON. No one can read his able presentation of the case contained in the majority report on this bill without admiring both his wisdom and patriotism. If I were inclined to feel any uncertainty as to my own views upon the subject of levying tolls, I would feel very much fortified and reassured in my belief after reading the arguments in favor thereof, which he has so ably presented. Referring to the views of the American people, as he interprets them, he tersely says:

> While they wish to be fair and honorable, they do not feel called upon to operate the Panama Canal as an eleemosynary institution.

And as to the claim for special exemptions from the payment of tolls for the coastwise ships, he has epitomized the whole argument as follows:

> It is urged that the stipulations for equality do not prevent preference for coastwise ships, because they are not in competition with foreign ships which can not enter coastwise trade. In effect the argument is that, being already protected against competition, one discrimination in their favor demands another. Being protected against all competition they would also be exempt from tolls, and place in their coffers the amount saved thereby. We think the treaty stipulations for equality of treatment mean treatment at the canal and nothing else.

Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that this bill, originally designed to meet the more imminent needs of legislation to regulate certain conditions of the canal, should have come back again burdened with so many extraneous and seemingly irrelevant legislative propositions. I do not know that I could better characterize the situation which this measure now presents than to quote a single sentence which to-day appeared in an editorial of the New York World, and which reads as follows:

> In a routine law designed in the first place to provide only for the operation of the canal we have gone around Robin Hood's barn to repudiate the solemn obligations of a treaty, to accept the principles of ship subsidies, to legislate on the tariff, and to amend in an important way the two laws that bear most powerfully upon the conduct of commerce and industry.

Leaving out of all consideration the extra subjects which have been injected into this bill at the other end of the Capitol, I will speak as briefly as possible upon the phase which is admittedly not only very pertinent at this time, but which is destined to be always one of the most important administrative features in carrying out the purposes of the very canal itself—that of the imposition of tolls.

When the canal shall have been completed, the total cost thereof to the American people will somewhat exceed the enormous sum of $400,000,000; the annual expense of maintenance will approximate $4,000,000, to which, adding the interest on the investment, will amount to a fixed charge of substantially $16,000,000. Shall the donors of this great utility offer to the shipping interests of the world its free use, or will they ask in return for this privilege such a reasonable compensation as shall meet all the fixed charges thereon? This is the question in a nutshell. That the imposition of a reasonable toll to meet such charges will discourage the use of the canal will not be seriously contended, I trust, by anybody. If a shipper can be shown a way in which, with much more expedition, he can save $10 per ton in the cost of transporting his cargo, he will most assuredly not object to surrendering in payment for that advantage one-eighth part of his gain. Upon this point the history of the operations of the Suez Canal is very interesting, the toll per ton imposed for its use being considerably in excess of the one provided for in the present bill. In this connection let me quote from the reports of that canal both as to the number of vessels going through it as well as the number of tons transported; and as I shall use as a basis of comparison and for other purposes the Soo Canal on the American side, I will also read the official reports showing the number of tons which have gone through that canal for the last six years:

Total freight tonnage, St. Marys Falls Canal, Mich. (American side only, American Soo).

Fiscal year:	Tons (short).
1907	45,013,198
1908	33,964,074
1909	32,757,486
1910	28,951,144
1911	23,625,533
1912	26,237,785

Suez Canal.

Year.	Number of vessels.	Net tons.
1900	3,441	9,738,152
1905	4,116	13,134,105
1906	3,957	13,445,504
1907	4,267	14,728,434

I may add, if I remember correctly, that the gross receipts of the Suez Canal for the last year, of which I have a record, exceed $25,000,000.

It may be of some interest to further state in connection with the American Soo Canal project that during the past seven years there has been appropriated by the Government for various improvements a sum exceeding $5,500,000, while for the construction of the channel in the Hay Lake and the Neebish Channel the sum of $4,400,000 has been appropriated during an equal period. During these seven years for all the harbors upon the Great Lakes, including the two projects just mentioned, there has been appropriated the enormous sum of $35,299,875.

I call attention to these stupendous outlays of money on the part of the Government, which, by the way, are comparatively small to the total amount expended for river and habor improvements throughout the country, for the purpose of pointing out one way at least in which our so-called billion-dollar Congresses are called upon to appropriate money. Would I stop improvements of our great harbors, rivers, and channels? Not at all. I am in favor of the greatest development possible for our waterways, that more convenient and cheaper transportation may result for the benefit of the people. But how much longer and to what extent will our Government be justified in continuing such a policy, which, while its results may indirectly benefit all the people, the direct effect is to confer such enormous special advantages upon a comparatively few carriers of freight?

Again quoting from my colleague from California, Mr. KNOWLAND, I read from the minority report submitted by him the following sentence:

> From the beginning of the Government to the present time, notwithstanding that we have appropriated $627,098,236.05 for the improvement of rivers and harbors and the construction of canals, exclusive of the Panama Canal, it has never entered into the conception of Congress to erect a tollgate in the path of our domestic trade, for the benefit of which these improvements have been made.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, may I not with much propriety ask if, in fairness to the American people who have paid these enormous appropriations, as well as suggesting a sound economic policy, the time has not now come when we should ask from those so specially benefited such a compensation in return as will at least maintain the improvements so constructed? Does anybody doubt for a moment that, should the railroad syndicates ask any such concession, they would meet with an emphatic refusal in the present temper of Congress and the people! Indeed, much zeal has been manifested in the framing of certain provisions of this bill to deny to these same railroads all benefits which may accrue from the use of the Panama Canal. Yet, within the past 12 months there has been brought to light on the floor of this House the existence of a great International Shipping Trust, as absolute in the use of its power as ever was exercised by any railroad company. I predict, with much confidence that when the canal is finally opened for traffic we shall be quite as busily employed in curbing the power of the steamship companies which enjoy its advantages as we have been in the past in defeating the exactions from the railway companies. Mr. Speaker, let me make one more observation before I conclude. In my judgment—and I have given the subject some thought—nothing has contributed more to the unequal distribution of wealth among the people than the paternalistic attitude which the Government has assumed toward the encouragement and development of commerce. Is it any wonder that a widespread demand for the correlative legislation which will permit the General Government to grant old-age civil pensions, establish insurance endowments, and so forth, has arisen and is championed by a political party of no inconsiderable numbers? Or, if it is a legitimate function of the Government to annually appropriate, without asking the return of a single dollar for the benefits conferred, great sums of money for waterways, are not the claims of the advocates of Federal aid for the building of good roads for identically like purposes—a more economical and expeditious transportation—equally justified?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP], in view of the Democratic platform and in view of the statements which have been made here on the floor of this House, whether the Democratic Party is in favor of a ship subsidy, or whether they have been deliberately seduced by the shipping combine, or whether the gentlemen on that side who argue that the remission of tolls is a ship subsidy have made a mistake? I should like to say just a word in regard to the statement that has been made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP], and also by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS], that the shipping companies of this country have urged a free canal for the coastwise trade.

Mr. SHARP. Does the gentleman want an answer to his question?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman can answer in his own time. He said awhile ago that a free canal was a ship subsidy, so according to his party's platform he is in favor of a ship subsidy, and I congratulate him.

Mr. SHARP. Does the gentleman want an answer to his statement?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The Democratic platform has answered it for you.

In regard to the action of shipping companies, as asserted both by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS], I believe I am perhaps as closely in touch with the shipping companies of this country as any man in this House, and I have not heard one suggestion or intimation from any one of them since this question has been under consideration that they were urging a free canal for ships in the coastwise trade. If the gentlemen who make these statements, either the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] or the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP], know any shipping companies that have appeared before the committee and asked for free tolls in the coastwise trade I should like to have them name them. This is but fair to the shipping men of the country. I make the statement, as I made it before, that it is absurd to talk about a free canal being an advantage to the ships engaged in the coastwise trade. It is not, and any manager of any shipping company who would come before a committee and urge that would convict himself of insincerity or stupidity.

Mr. MURRAY. It is a distinct advantage, however, to the shippers of freight through the canal, is it not?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; but it is not of any particular advantage to the man who owns the ship, because the coastwise trade is a monopoly, and all ships that go through the canal are on the same basis, in the coastwise trade, and as long as all the ships are treated alike it makes no difference to them whether they have free tolls or not.

Just one word in regard to our right to pass our ships free through the Panama Canal. I should like to know who owns the Panama Canal and who is going to pay for it, and why the American people have not the right to use their own property as they see fit without asking the consent of any other nation?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Fourteen minutes.

Mr. ADAMSON. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Five minutes.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] will take care of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COVINGTON], I will yield all my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I should like to yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] two minutes, and to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] one minute.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I can not agree in conscience or judgment with what has been suggested with reference to the operation of this canal. I can not convince myself that we are not under a sacred, plain obligation to do a certain thing with reference to other countries in connection with that canal, and I can not get rid of the thought that we are deliberately undertaking to violate a solemn treaty because we believe it will be profitable to do so. [Applause.] I do not believe it will be profitable, for wrong does not pay in the end. It is a revolting fact, to me at least, that in the inauguration of this great engineering enterprise, perhaps the greatest in the history of the world, we are staining our country's reputation with dishonor by the violation of a treaty obligation.

Furthermore, I differ from the suggestions that have been made upon purely economic grounds. This canal has been built at a huge expense to the people. It will be maintained at a cost of more than $20,000,000 a year, I suppose, and perhaps, it is suggested by my friend over here, $30,000,000 a year. If ships are permitted to go through that canal without the payment of tolls, it will be an annual subsidy to that extent levied upon the taxpayers of this country. [Applause.] It is unfair. It is unfair to the people who paid for the canal and who do not, unless they are more hopeful than I can be, expect any return on that investment. We may get a reward in the general benefit to trade, not our own trade merely, but the world's trade, and in the increased prosperity and comfort of mankind. Certainly no other dividend on the investment can be looked for.

But I would not put a still greater burden on them. In reason they can not be asked to lose the interest on the $400,000,000 the canal has cost them and then pay the $30,000,000 a year it will cost to maintain it, plus the fifteen or twenty million more it has been decided to waste in defending it.

Who, primarily, will benefit from the use of the canal? First, the freight carriers, the shipowners, because it shortens the distance between the two great oceans by many thousands of miles. Taking the shorter route through the canal they will be able to make more voyages in a given time between Atlantic and Pacific ports or between our east coast and Asiatic countries. That will mean greater earnings and a large saving in fuel and wages. We hope that it will result in a material reduction in freight charges, and no doubt it will if we can compel conditions that will insure competition.

Then the consumer of the produce that will be carried through the canal will benefit, for it will certainly cost less to deliver produce from the place of its origin to the consuming markets. It is possible to do these beneficial things, these things that will be gainful to both the buyer and seller, without lessening the profits of anyone. Trade expansion, broader markets, a wider, freer distribution of produce of all sorts should result from the opening of this canal, and in that we must find our reward.

Now, surely, these people and this trade that first and directly benefit by the canal ought to pay the cost of its maintenance. The taxpayers of the United States as a whole have paid for and will present it to them, and it is not too much, I repeat, to ask that the traffic through the canal shall keep it in repair and pay operating expenses.

I question the wisdom of the plan of keeping any ships engaged in commerce out of the canal. My plan would be to charge all alike for its use and throw it open to the commerce of the world. If ships belong to American corporations our Interstate Commerce Commission may regulate their charges for carrying freight. If they do not belong to Americans or to American corporations we can not control them, for we are not yet arbiters for the world.

I am absolutely hostile to the suggestion that our own coastwise ships shall be permitted to use the canal without paying tolls. The coastwise shipping is an American monopoly. We do not permit foreign shipowners to share it, and in doing so we compel our producers and consumers to pay more for service and more for produce than they would otherwise have to pay. Now, in addition to that, this bill says we must subsidize the monopoly still further by granting it exemption from tolls. It is subsidy, rank, offensive subsidy.

I am as anxious to build up American trade as any man that lives, but I want it done fairly. I do not want it done by indirect and excessive subsidy.

Section 5 says "no tolls shall be levied upon vessels engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States." I am advised that this means vessels engaged exclusively in the coastwise trade of the United States. Ships trading from San Francisco to New York can not, under this provision of law, stop at a port in Mexico or Nicaragua and take on produce for American ports without incurring severe penalties. To do so would lead to the forfeiture of ship and cargo, unless I have been misinformed as to the law. That seems a perfect plan for keeping up freight charges.

But after all, Mr. Speaker, the great objection to this bill is that it breaks faith with other governments with which we have solemnly covenanted in regard to the use of the canal. We ought to be as honest in the aggregate as we try to be as individuals.

The people of the United States can better afford to keep the canal open at their own expense than to stand convicted before the world as a nation that will not keep its contracts.

Toll should be paid for the use of the canal, but it ought to be paid by every ship that uses it or by none, for it is so "nominated in the bond."

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] one minute.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I agree absolutely with the reasons advanced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], who has just spoken, that this act of legislation constitutes a violation of our obligations under the treaty. However meritorious the other provisions of this bill may be, I can not record my vote in favor of breaking our solemn treaty obligations.

I also agree with the statement that to allow free passage of ships through this canal is a ship subsidy pure and simple, and that it will be a continual charge upon the people for the benefit of a few shipping interests, and that it is not for the benefit of the American people; that the saving in freight will not go to the consumer, but to those directly engaged in the trade who have a legal monopoly, so far as that traffic is concerned.

A great deal of ingenious sophistry has been employed for the purpose of proving that the exemption of "vessels engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States" is not a violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. Some have gone still further, and claimed that we had a perfect right to exempt "vessels of the United States" from tolls; that is to say, that we have a right to exempt vessels of commerce owned by private citizens of the United States. I am unable to see how any such conclusion can be drawn from the treaty, and I believe that it is a clear breach of good faith on the part of this Government to exempt the vessels owned by American citizens as long as we charge tolls to the vessels of the citizens of other countries. Specious catchwords are used to divert the minds of the people from the real point in issue. Thus it is said: "We built the canal. Why should we not make other people pay for it?" "The United States has invested nearly $400,000,000 in this enterprise, and why should we be called upon to play the part of the philanthropic benefactor by charging our own ships the same rate of toll as we charge the ships of other nations who have contributed not a single dollar to the great work?"

The vice of this reasoning is that these questions overlook the fact that it is not vessels of the United States in fact that are sought to be exempted. Nobody claims that vessels owned by the Government of the United States of whatever kind, whether engaged in carrying merchandise or not, may not be exempted under the treaty. But it was not the shipowners who put up the $400,000,000 to build the canal, but the citizens of the United States, and to exempt owners of vessels engaged purely in private enterprises from paying even so much as the cost of putting the vessel through the canal is giving them a subsidy at the expense of the taxpayer in general.

There seems to be a confusion of ideas, so that the statutory term "vessels of the United States" is confounded with "vessels owned by the United States." The only result of this exemption of privately owned ships of commerce, of American registry, from paying tolls is to divert the tolls from the Treasury of the United States into the pockets of private corporations. It is claimed that this form of subsidy, this turning of the profits of the operation of the canal from the Treasury of the United States into the pockets of private shipowners would serve as a powerful stimulant toward the upbuilding of the merchant marine. I doubt it. It would be too limited in its scope; it would only affect vessels passing through the canal, and leave the merchant marine in all other waters neglected.

But, aside from the question of the treaty, and looking at it purely from the point of view of the public interest, I submit that it is an unwise policy. It is economically unwise and ethically wrong. Of course it is conceded that the canal was built largely for military reasons, but we are now considering it from a purely commercial point of view. It is an instrumentality of commerce, just as much as a railroad. When the United States Government engages in the maintenance and operation of this canal for commercial purposes, it is not, strictly speaking, in a governmental operation, but in a commercial one. Being so engaged, it ought to observe the same ethics, the same rules of conduct that it requires to be observed by private citizens or corporations in the operation of canals, railroads, or other instrumentalities of commerce. When the transportation system of the United States was in the course of its development the first evil that called for governmental interference was the evil of discrimination.

Discrimination between persons has always been held to be unjust discrimination, and has been prohibited. Such discrimination was the cause of the upbuilding of many of the monopolies of which complaint is now made. The act to regulate commerce, the Elkins Act, and most of the acts of the different State legislatures to regulate common carriers have been directed against the evil of discrimination in transportation. The evil is not confined to land transportation, for lately the United States Government has brought suits even against foreign ship companies operating ocean vessels in the foreign trade to prevent rebating and unjust discrimination. With what right, therefore, can the United States Government, as a canal proprietor, engage in serving commerce on a directly opposite theory and discriminate against vessels owned by citizens of other countries in favor of vessels owned by certain citizens of the United States? Do the railroads of any country make a different rate for the merchandise belonging to citizens of different countries? It has often been said that when the Government is engaged in manufacturing or similar private work where it employs labor it should be a model employer; for a stronger reason, when it engages in the transportation business, it ought to be a model common carrier and should refrain from unjust discrimination for or against any citizen whomsoever. A distinction is made between vessels of the United States engaged in the coastwise trade and those engaged in the "deep-sea" or foreign trade so far as passage through the canal is concerned. Vessels of the United States engaged in the latter trade have to compete with the vessels of every nation in the world, and still this bill singles them out as the only American vessels that are to pay canal tolls. From the coastwise trade foreign vessels are barred.

No merchandise shall be transported by water, under penalty of forfeiture thereof, from one port of the United States to another port of the United States, either directly or via a foreign port, or for any part of the voyage, in any other vessel than a vessel of the United States. But this section shall not be construed to prohibit the sailing of any foreign vessel from one to another port of the United States: Provided, That no merchandise other than that imported in such vessel from some foreign port shall be carried from one port or place in the United States to another.

No foreign vessel shall transport passengers between ports or places in the United States, either directly or by way of a foreign port, under a penalty of $200 for each passenger so transported and landed. (R. S., 4347.)

We, therefore, by remitting tolls on coastwise vessels are giving a subsidy to a class of ships that have no competitors, and we withhold subsidy from those who have to meet the competition of foreigners. But that is not all; it is a notorious fact that the vessels engaged in the coastwise trade are nearly all in combination with the railroads and are guilty of all sorts of discrimination and injustice. By giving them the free use of the canal we are not doing anything to prevent monopoly unless the clause against railroad-owned ships should prove effective. But how about ships that are engaged in both classes of trade? This proposed amendment leaves that entirely in the dark. All ships flying the American flag may engage in the coastwise trade as well as in the foreign trade. The distinction between coastwise and "deep-sea" or foreign trade is extremely artificial and is based wholly upon statutory enactments which had their origin at a time when we were not a power of extensive coast lines and world-wide domain. As it is now, a ship sailing from New York to Cuba is engaged in the foreign trade, and a ship sailing from New York to Porto Rico is engaged in the coastwise trade.

A ship sailing from any American port to Mexico or the near-by ports of the north or west coast of South America are engaged in the foreign trade, but a vessel plying between New York and Hawaii, by way of the Straits of Magellan, is engaged in the coastwise trade, and at one time vessels engaged in the commerce between New York around Cape Horn to Manila and the Philippine Islands were engaged in the coastwise trade, while vessels from Portland, Me., to Halifax, Nova Scotia, are engaged in the foreign trade. Now, the proposed amendment admits to American registry foreign-built vessels, but requires them to be engaged exclusively in the foreign trade. Obviously the trade between Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States, to be carried on to the best advantage, should permit vessels to land at all intermediate points in Central and South America, both on the east and on the west coasts, as well as the ports of Mexico. But under this proposed legislation there will be discrimination against those who seek to develop the foreign trade in that way. But the fact that railroad-owned ships are forbidden from using the canal is not sufficient to prevent a combination of vessels of American registry that we are proposing to give free passage, for there will be every inducement held out to such combination. The American Hawaiian Co., which now owns some 26 large steamers and is engaged in the sugar trade between New York and Hawaii, via Tehuantepec, keeps it rates just below railroad transcontinental rates, and it is quite probable that, after we have given these domestic ships free use of the canal they will charge all the traffic will bear, for there is no way to insure genuine competition among them or prevent combination. It was with this in mind that I prepared and introduced the bill H. R. 25828, "To prevent monopoly in the coastwise trade between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States via Panama Canal," to permit foreign ships using the canal to engage in the coastwise trade between Atlantic and Pacific ports upon paying double tolls through the canal. I insert a copy of this bill.

Be it enacted, etc., That any vessel of foreign register not owned or controlled in whole or in part by a railroad company may engage in the coastwise trade between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States via the Panama Canal upon payment of double the canal tolls prescribed for other vessels of foreign register using the canal, and to this extent and for this purpose the trade between the said ports of the United States via the Panama Canal shall not be deemed a part of the coastwise trade and be exempt from the laws governing the same.

The Secretary of Commerce and Labor is authorized to make rules and regulations to carry the above provision into effect.

This measure, I believe, would act as a restraint upon any combination of coastwise ships that might be formed, so that if the rates were raised unreasonably high, foreign ships would avail themselves of this opportunity, and would pay the Government for the privilege. It could not be claimed that this would be a violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, because we have a perfect right to exclude foreign vessels entirely from the coastwise trade, and if we choose to allow them to share it we can prescribe whatever rates or conditions we see fit.

If a combination of American ships in the coastwise trade, using the canal, should be formed, and raise rates to such an extent as to be unreasonable, would it not be fair to permit any foreign ship to engage in that traffic upon payment of double the ordinary toll charged foreign vessels? If the rate should be $1.25 per ton, these vessels would pay $2.50 per ton. It seems to me that if our coastwise vessels had the advantage of $2.50 per ton it would be sufficient to protect them from unjust competition; in other words, this bill of mine would be a protective tariff for the coastwise vessels engaged in commerce through the canal to the extent of double the duties charged. Without such a provision the monopoly of the coastwise trade would be absolute.

The efficacy of the prohibition against railroad-owned ships to prevent monopoly is yet to be proven. The great competitive forces, if given full play, might enable us to avoid the petty tyrannies of railroad-owned ships that have been complained of on the Pacific coast and on Long Island Sound.

The construction of the Panama Canal ranks as one of the greatest achievements of a physical character that has ever been successfully put through by any nation. As an engineering feat and a demonstration of scientific sanitation it stands unparalleled in history. It would be lamentable, indeed, if our legislation should turn out to be not only unwise in policy, but discreditable as a failure to observe our obligations to foreign nations. It may well be doubted whether it would not secure the greatest benefit to the people of the Nation, and to the people of the whole world if the canal was, indeed, opened upon equal terms to all the people regardless of citizenship or flag. It is destined to be the great highway of commerce, and ought to be governed by just and liberal rules, exemplifying the manliness and high ideals of the American people.

[St. Paul Pioneer Press.]

CONGRESSMEN SHOULD EXPLAIN.

It would be interesting to know just why Members of Congress insist on voting for no tolls to American coastwise shipping and why they would exempt American foreign shipping. Who is it that is producing the arguments that are convincing the lawmakers, and what are those arguments? The voters should insist on explanations. There is no overwhelming demand for such action. In fact, the people who have given the subject attention are pretty well convinced that the action of Congress in regard to the Panama Canal is a disgrace to this Nation. The no-tolls provision has been declared by the highest authorities in the country to be in violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. The British Government has taken the same view of the matter in its note to the Secretary of State.

When the canal toll subject was first considered many espoused the no-tolls provision as designed to benefit the coast cities along with coastwise shipping. Since the treaty feature has been brought out there has been a revulsion of sentiment against doing anything that would reflect on national honor. The leading papers in New York, in Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, in all parts of the country, coast and inland, Republican and Democratic, have declared against the no-tolls clause. The New York World, for example, in its opposition to no tolls, has to score the Congressmen of its own party and to denounce a measure that undeniably would be advantageous to its home city. It and other influential journals have joined in the demand for right and national honor.

Who is it that is convincing Congressmen that they should vote for a measure that amounts in enect to a subsidy for the coastwise shipping monopoly? It certainly is not their constituents, nor is it the press. There must be some reason for the way in which Members of the House and Senate have taken the bit in their teeth and run away from public sentiment. It is up to those who have voted for no tolls to give good excuses when they get back home. The people have a right to know what are the convincing arguments.

Mr. ADAMSON. I wish to yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], with the understanding that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] will take care of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COVINGTON] to conclude the debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am just as sensitive as any gentleman in this House or in the country to any question of national honor. I do not believe that we are in any way making any reflection whatever upon our national honor by providing for free tolls for American ships, coastwise or otherwise, passing through the canal. [Applause.] The canal, with its maintenance, with the additional cost of maintenance of the Navy, with the additional cost of the maintenance of the Army in connection with the protection of the canal, is likely to cost us in the near future not $20,000,000, but $50,000,000 a year; and to say that we place ourselves under this obligation without any authority to give preference to our own ships would be to write us down as exceedingly foolish and without sense, even if we had honor. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on the work that it has done in regard to this bill, and particularly the chairman of that committee, Mr. ADAMSON, and Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, the ranking Republican member of the committee. It was my honor to serve on that committee for many years, to take part in the first proposition which led to the construction of the Panama Canal, to be the author of a number of bills relating to the canal, to be in part the author of the bill which I hope, when this report is adopted, will soon be a law, and it is a matter of self-congratulation to me that I have had the opportunity of serving on that committee and rendering some service, I believe, to my country in connection with the proposition and the final construction and the law for the operation of the canal.

There is one thing yet that I hope will be done. The construction of the Panama Canal in its conception and in its work is the greatest engineering feat ever attempted or carried through; carried through, I am proud to say, with honor to our country, because no scandal has been connected with this great undertaking. [Applause.] And I hope, whether I remain in the House long or not, Congress will do itself and the country the proud honor of recognizing the feats of men in peace as well as in war, and make the genius, Col. George W. Goethals, who has had charge of this work, a General of the Army. [Applause.]

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SISSON). The gentleman has 11 minutes.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COVINGTON].

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Speaker, the conference report now before the House of Representatives represents the final conclusions of the Senate and the House of Representatives on what is commonly known as the Panama Canal bill, the greatest piece of constructive legislation produced in the present Congress.

The report, which represents the unanimous view of the conferees, with the exception of the section relating to railroad ownership of water carriers, and which section is alone the cause of their failure to sign it, attests to the skill and the industry with which this great piece of legislation has been carried through to the time when it shall finally be written on the statute books.

In that connection it is but just to this House and but just to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to say that the criticism of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] regarding the present framework of the bill does not apply either to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House or to the House itself. Without regard to whether one does or does not agree with the policy of section 5, relating to tolls, and with section 11, relating to the amendment of the existing interstate-commerce law so as to prevent the railway ownership of competitive water carriers, it is a fact that the bill left the House of Representatives a harmonious, scientific, and complete piece of legislation for the operation, maintenance, and protection of the Panama Canal. The section fixing the tolls of the vessels that are to pass through the canal and exempting from tolls the vessels in the coastwise trade of the United States, and also the section providing for independent ownership of water carriers which do or may compete with the railroads in America, were each simply and effectively drawn to carry out their precise purpose.

When the bill reached the floor of the Senate it is true that as a result of passing through a committee of that body, from some cause that we can not know, and if we knew could not criticize, it was so rewritten in certain sections that international complications would be invited through the provisions affecting tolls. The restrictions upon railroad ownership of competitive water carriers in the United States were also almost entirely removed and an unsatisfactory attempt to place limitations on the traffic of railroad-controlled vessels through the canal itself substituted, and the single-headed executive with ample power to operate and protect the canal after completion was supplanted by a commission government to care for favorites, a form of government which has proved so totally ineffective on the Isthmus in the past. There was, in fact, a lack of skillfulness and a lack of uniformity in the whole measure.

When the House had its first opportunity to pass upon the bill as it had been remodeled in the Senate it emphasized its disapproval of certain of the provisions in the Senate bill, and in consequence the bill went to conference. It then became the duty of the conferees to reshape the measure as best they could, and to create, if possible, a bill as nearly in harmony with the original bill that passed the House. And I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] that, so far from this House being subject to criticism because of the bill, it ought to be commended for the bold, beneficial, and constructive character of the legislation as it formulated it.

The House conferees also ought to be subject to the highest commendation for the way in which they have been able to take the much-altered measure which passed at the other end of the Capitol and iron out its rough places until it is now what it was in its inception, the greatest piece of constructive legislation of the Sixty-second Congress.

Now, a word about the much-discussed section relating to tolls. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] need have no fear about the ultimate outcome of that question in so far as it concerns our relations with England and other foreign countries. If the section granting free tolls to vessels in the coastwise traffic of the United States shall turn out to be a mistake from an international standpoint, I say to him that it will create a situation easy to adjust by diplomacy. The actual operation of that section can not begin for more than two years.

But, Mr. Speaker, that section does not in any sense violate our treaty with Great Britain. The note of the British Government to the Department of State relating to the question of tolls through the Panama Canal was prompted by the report to the Senate by the Senate Committee on Interoceanic Canals of an amendment to section 5 of the House bill, and which amendment extended free tolls to American vessels in the foreign trade. The bill as it comes from conference has wisely restored the original House provision. The note of Great Britain has recently been summarized in a letter from Secretary Knox to Senator BRANDEGEE. That letter was read upon the floor of the Senate. In commenting in that letter on the British note Secretary Knox uses this language:

> With respect to the proposal that exemption shall be given to vessels engaged in the coastwise trade the communication states that it may be that no objection could be taken if the trade should be so regulated as to make it certain that only bona fide coastwise traffic, which is reserved for American vessels, would be benefited by this exemption.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the existing navigation laws of the United States provide that vessels enrolled or licensed to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States must engage exclusively in that trade. Every vessel which, without surrendering her enrollment for domestic commerce and registering for the foreign trade, proceeds on a voyage in foreign commerce shall, together with her cargo, be subject to seizure and forfeiture. Vessels engaged in the coastwise trade can in nowise, therefore, be engaged in competitive commerce with Great Britain, and Great Britain very wisely does not seriously raise the question of our right to treat our domestic trade into which her vessels may not enter precisely as we please. I do not think under such state of facts that anyone on the floor of this House should deliberately admit to Great Britain a right which she, in her correspondence, has already conceded to our Department of State.

We have built the Panama Canal with our money. It traverses a strip of land over which the American flag floats as an emblem of complete sovereignty. When the Constitution of the United States was formed it really had its birth in the desire of the lately freed colonies to throw aside the barriers of commerce that existed among them. There is not a man in this House who does not know that the Annapolis convention, the forerunner of the great Philadelphia convention, was conceived in the idea that the restrictions on trade placed by the colonies before the Revolution, and by the States under the Articles of Confederation, were sapping the commercial vitality of the country. The result was that the commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States produced the greatest debates in the constitutional convention. Out of that convention there was evolved the great principle that there should be free intercourse between all parts of this great Nation, from the Lakes to the Gulf and from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It was made the fundamental law of the land that there should be no tax or embargo laid upon any commerce between the States.

You may to-day start a cargo in New York through the great canals of the State of New York, land that cargo at Buffalo, transship it by steamers that are the equal of ocean steamships, and land it at Duluth. You may then send it by transshipment from Duluth to the Pacific coast, and there is not $1 of embargo, not one tithe of toll, placed upon that cargo of freight.

This Government is committed, and rightly committed to a policy of annual expenditures for river and harbor improvements. We have in the last 40 years expended $625,0000,000 in such work for the benefit of free trade between the States. But, Mr. Speaker, there is no more right for us to say that those expenditures should have been made in order that trade between the States may pass freely than there is now to say that we shall now expend money to construct a canal which shall make possible freer intercourse between our States on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts.

To-day American vessels in the coastwise trade, sailing from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, that have passed around the Horn or through the Straits of Magellan and up the Pacific coast, are within the laws relating to coastwise trade already passed by Congress. These vessels travel 10,000 miles, largely through foreign waterways, and yet not for one moment do those vessels cease to be subject to all the regulations of the coastwise trade. I therefore assert that, as a constitutional proposition and an international question, we have the undoubted right and duty to say in this bill that from New York to San Francisco, or from Boston to Seattle, through waters that are either the high seas of the world, or that traverse our land, and our land alone, vessels in our domestic commerce shall ply their trade freely and untaxed. [Applause.]

The bill as it passed the House authorized the President to provide a method for the determination and adjustment of claims arising from personal injuries to employees of the Panama Canal, thus permitting the establishment of a freer method and a higher rate of compensation than is provided in the existing law granting to employees of the United States the right to receive compensation for injuries. The House believed that the peculiar character of the work in operating the Panama Canal, and the great distance of its location from the United States made it advisable to authorize the President to create, if he deemed proper, a somewhat broader scheme of workingmen's compensation. The provision of the House bill is largely the idea of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. At the time that he was chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce he worked out the scheme in practically its present form. The Senate in committee struck out this section, carefully prepared in the interest of the American workingmen in the Canal Zone, and inserted a section merely extending to canal employees the provisions of the existing compensation law for Government employees. Mr. Speaker, it is another illustration of the superior character of the House bill that the Senate has agreed to return to the original provision upon this subject.

Mr. Speaker, there is another section in this bill that the House has the right to congratulate itself upon. It is true, as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] has stated, that at the inception of this legislation there was a desire to write a bill for the operation, maintenance, and protection of the Panama Canal that did not have in it any provisions save those peculiarly relating to the canal itself. But there arose questions relating to water-traffic conditions from localities on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of this country that made the dealing with the subject of railroad ownership of competitive water carriers in some particular absolutely essential. When that situation arose I stated in the committee that if we were to provide for restrictions upon the ownership by railroads of water carriers passing through the Panama Canal, in simple justice the same sort of restrictions ought to apply throughout the United States, and if what was in effect an amendment of the interstate-commerce law was to be written it should apply to all railroads alike.

It is well known that there has been great absorption of water lines by railroads in all parts of the country. The water lines have not been extensions of the railroads, but in most instances they have been competitors. Using nature's highways improved at Government expense, the water carriers of the country ought to furnish a very low rate of transportation on millions of tons of bulk freight. But the water carriers are not under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and in consequence there is no control of their rates. Railroads have bought the control of these water carriers in nearly all the instances where they substantially competed with them, and after taking advantage of freedom from control of water rates to crush out independent competitors they have raised the water rates to the highest point at which they can be maintained.

Mr. Speaker, I have never believed that this great country, with its bays and rivers affording water communication for millions of inhabitants and countless manufacturing industries, with its resources of honest capital, and with the unyielding energy of its people, has to depend upon railroads to furnish us the boats we need for our water traffic. The advancement of such an idea is an insult to our energy and genius. So section 11 as it was originally written was made a part of the Panama Canal bill in the House. It forbids after July 1, 1914, any railway company or other common carrier to own, operate, or control in any manner any water carrier with which it may compete for traffic. It also provides that every railroad in a port must, under certain conditions, connect its tracks with any dock—for freight transfer—from which ships are to sail, and that whatever proportion of a through rail-and-water rate it allows to the best-favored line it must allow to every other steamer over the same route.

There has been added one paragraph at the end of section 11 to which I can not forbear to advert, and that is the paragraph referred to by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] relative to the enforcement of the antitrust law with regard to vessels going through the Panama Canal if they be owned or controlled or operated by any corporation or individual in a combination in restraint of trade in violation of that law. I grant practically what he states. It is a nonenforceable and thoroughly unworkable provision, but I think it ought not to stop the passage of the bill because it is simply a clumsy attempt to write into the statute what is the law to-day. If a single genuine combination between water carriers exists that is in reality in restraint of trade there is an abundance of law to punish that combination to-day, and the Senate amendment neither adds to nor takes from the existing law. The attempt to provide for holding up a vessel at the entrance of the canal while the question of fact as to the alleged violation of the antitrust law by its owners or operators is heard in the courts is practically unenforceable, and I hazard the statement that no one will, even out of a pure spirit of malice, undertake to stop the ship of any combination or any individual at the mouth of the canal and prevent its transit through. The courts would find a very simple way to relieve the actual vessel, with its cargo owned by innocent shippers, and therefore, Mr. Speaker, I accept that provision out of the fullness of my belief that while it adds nothing to the law on the subject of combinations in restraint of trade, it contains nothing to interfere with the effectiveness of the railroad section of the bill as a whole.

The combined resources of the great railroads and the other forces of monopoly were organized to defeat this section in the Senate. The effort was successful in committee. On the floor of the Senate the section was substantially amended in the interest of the people, but it is a tribute to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to the House, and to its conferees that after that section had been passed and sent to conference it remained for the conferees, in order to make that legislation entirely effective, practically to restore it to the form in which it left the House.

Mr. Speaker, the conference report ought to be adopted at once. The rapidity with which the Panama Canal approaches completion makes this legislation imperative. The entire administrative features of the bill are admitted to be in accord with the best expert judgment as to the needs for permanent operation and protection of the canal. The committee, in fact, followed largely the advice of that remarkable genius, Col. Goethals, in providing for the future of the wonderful waterway that is to be the great monument to his career. In advocating the passage of the bill I feel that Congress is but giving the final small touch to the masterpiece of a master American. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania offers the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Senate amendments Nos. 11 and 12 as incorporated in section 5 of H. R. 21969 ordered printed as agreed to in conference, August 15, 1912, contravenes the first clause of the seventh section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States, and is an infringement of the privileges of the House, and that said bill, with the amendments be respectfully recommitted with instructions to ask a further conference and disagree to said amendments as amended."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I shall not make the point of order on that, but will merely state that I desire to have it voted down.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, there is a Senate resolution on the Speaker's desk which must be considered, and I call it up.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 28.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Committees on Enrolled Bills of the two Houses be authorized to correct the enrolled bill of the House (H. R. 21969) entitled, "An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone," by inserting in section 11, after the words "or elsewhere," where they occur the second time, the words "with which said railroad or other carrier aforesaid does or may compete for traffic."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, by some inadvertence those words were omitted and ought to be inserted.

The question was taken, and the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Speaker, I move to take the bill S. 7424 from the Speaker's desk and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill. The Chair thinks, under the circumstances, the Chair should recognize the gentleman from Alabama, and afterwards he will recognize the gentleman. It will take about two minutes to put this through the House. There are several little things Members want to attend to, and the Chair is very much disposed to help them out.

DAM ACROSS COOSA RIVER, ALA.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 7343 and consider it at this time.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and forty-two Members are present—not a quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The question was taken and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, division.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, there are some small matters that ought to be disposed of. They have to be disposed of at a night session or gentlemen having them in charge will not be able to have a chance to get a hearing before the House, and I think we ought to give those gentlemen a chance.

Mr. MANN. We will do it next week.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves a call of the House.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 71, noes 40.

So a call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call there are 202 Members—a quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] moves to dispense with further proceedings on the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The proceedings are dispensed with under the call, and the Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, for one week, on account of death in his family.

To Mr. JACKSON, for the remainder of the session, on account of the sickness of his mother.

To Mr. GUDGER, for five days, on account of sickness in family.

DAM ACROSS COOSA RIVER, ALA.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against this bill that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] has no right to call up the bill and ask that it be taken from the Speaker's table. That can only be done by order of the committee, and I take it that the gentleman from Alabama has not been so instructed by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. What authority has the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] to make such a point of order as that?

Mr. MANN. I will refer the gentleman to paragraph 2 of Rule XXIV, at the bottom of page 427 of the Manual. It reads, referring to bills on the Speaker's desk—

As may also Senate bills substantially the same as House bills already favorably reported by a committee of the House, and not required to be considered in the Committee of the Whole, be disposed of in the same manner on motion directed to be made by such committee.

It requires the authority of the committee to take up a Senate bill, there being a similar bill on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The tally clerk informs the Chair that he made a mistake in that count, and that instead of there being 202 Members present there are only 192.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have my name called.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. LAFFERTY, and he answered "Present."

Mr. AINEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be called.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. AINEY, and he answered "Present."

The SPEAKER. There are still two lacking of a quorum.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings dispensing with the call.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I asked unanimous consent that we may vacate the proceedings under the call. I moved to vacate the proceedings under the call under a misapprehension that there was a quorum present. I now move that the action taken on that motion be vacated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent to vacate that order. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER. Which order was it?

The SPEAKER. The one dispensing with the proceedings under the call. It was done under a misapprehension. We thought a quorum was here. Only two are now lacking.

The Chair will ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] what kind of a bill is it that he has? Is it a Senate bill?

Mr. HEFLIN. A Senate bill. It is exactly in the same form as my bill.

The SPEAKER. Is it a Senate bill?

Mr. HEFLIN. It is a Senate bill. It passed the Senate. It is on the Speaker's table, and I ask to take it up.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, in order to settle this question for to-night, I do now move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The motion is dilatory.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Was that evidently an ancillary motion?

The SPEAKER. It was lost. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have my name called.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. Moss of Indiana, and he answered "Present."

Mr. LINDBERGH. I desire to have my name called.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. LINDBERGH, and he answered "Present."

The SPEAKER. The roll call shows 196 Members—a quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] insist upon his point of order?

Mr. FOSTER. I do, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have to rule with him. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HEFLIN. That leaves the bill lying on the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. Yes; where it was in the beginning.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not want the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] to suffer any injustice. My impression is that the authority was given to call up the House bill, but the committee has had no meeting since the Senate bill came over. If the rule applies to a Senate bill the minutes of the committee would not show anything about the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. It does apply to the Senate bill. That is exactly what it applies to.

Mr. ADAMSON. The authority given by the committee as to the House bill would not apply to the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The truth is, the only authority that the Speaker has been able to find is a decision rendered by Mr. Speaker Reed, which indirectly seems to require written authority from the committee, although the Chair does not believe that that should be true if the minutes of the committee show that to be the authority.

Mr. HEFLIN. What was the last statement of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. ADAMSON. I said the minutes would not show anything about the Senate bill.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, how should everybody know that there was such a bill pending?

The SPEAKER. Members are supposed to know what happens here, although that may be a violent presumption. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURNETT. The bill would lose its place in the committee?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The rule is that the committee must authorize the substitution of the Senate bill for the House bill, and the Chair does not see how that can be done unless the bill is here, as the gentleman suggests.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT MEMPHIS.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 7424) to amend an act approved July 20, 1912, entitled "An act to authorize the Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 7424) to amend an act approved July 20, 1912, entitled "An act to authorize Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River."

Be it enacted, etc., That an act approved July 20, 1912, entitled "An act to authorize Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River," be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co., organized under the laws of the State of Tennessee, its successors and assigns, be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a oridge, and all approaches thereto, across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn., at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906: Provided, That said bridge shall be so constructed, maintained, and operated that, in addition to its use for railroad purposes, it shall provide for an adequate and a separate roadway and approaches and continuous use by the public as a highway bridge, to be used by vehicles, pedestrians, horsemen, animals, and all kinds of highway traffic and travel, for the transit of which reasonable rates of toll may be charged and received, but no rate for passage of a single passenger on a railroad train shall exceed 25 cents.

"SEC. 2. That Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. shall not be required to construct those portions of the approaches on either side of said bridge that are required to make the same ready for vehicles, pedestrians, and other highway traffic until there shall be paid to said company or secured to its satisfaction by local authorities or interests the sum of $50,000, and said company shall not be required thereafter to maintain or bear any of the costs of maintaining such portions of said approaches and shall not collect or receive tolls for use of said approaches.

"SEC. 3. That Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. shall have the right to sell, transfer, or lease to any county, city, improvement district, or municipality any part of such portions of said approaches or of the separate roadway provided for by this act, or both, and in the event of any such sale, transfer, or lease the Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. shall be relieved of any requirement to maintain the property so sold, transferred, or leased, and shall not thereafter charge or receive any tolls for use of said wagon way and approaches.

"SEC. 4. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer two amendments to this bill. If the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] desires to speak first, I am willing he should do so. If he desires to have me offer my amendments, and to have them pending, I will offer them now.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I think the gentleman might as well offer them now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have two amendments, which I ask the Clerk to read, and to have pending.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read them for information.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask unanimous consent to have them pending.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to have them pending. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 10, page 2, strike out the word "purposes" and insert the words "trains and trolley cars."

At the end of section 3 add the following:

"Provided, That the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have authority to make rules and regulations for the use of this bridge by any other common carrier engaged in interstate commerce at any time any other such common carrier may desire to use it jointly; and the Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized to fix charges for any such joint use, and such charges shall be based upon the relation that the proportionate use of each carrier bears to the interest of the net income from the sale of bonds to the amount of the actual cost of construction."

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I want to ask the House to vote down the amendments offered by the gentleman from Alabama, and I want to state very briefly the reasons why I ask you so to vote.

At present there is one railroad bridge at Memphis across the Mississippi River, and only one. It has a monopoly of the railroad business crossing the river, and is the only railroad bridge south of Cape Girardeau.

The Rock Island Railroad Co. proposes to build this new bridge at a cost of about $3,000,000, and to make it a double-track bridge across the Mississippi River near the present one.

That proposition was begun last January, and since that time the Representatives in Congress from Tennessee and Arkansas and the people of Memphis and of Crittenden County, Ark., just across the river, have been actively going over this bill. Everybody on both sides of the river wants the bill passed. I do not think there is anybody in Arkansas or Tennessee who does not want this bill to go through and this bridge to be built. It will be a great improvement to our community and a great advantage to the traffic of the country. We have differed about the terms upon which the bridge should be built. Upon examination I believed that we should have a general traffic bridge built as a part of this structure, and that it would mean a great improvement to our locality and to Arkansas.

The railroad company took to this suggestion, and it was first conceived to build a toll bridge, provided the city of Memphis and the county of Crittenden would build the approaches to the bridge. A bill was introduced along that line, but the original bill that was introduced last March and passed in July provided that the railroad company should be compelled to allow trolley cars to go over the railroad part of the bridge. The railroad company declined to accept that part of it, on the ground that the street car lines running across its railroad bridge would unduly interfere with its business. There was another provision, that the railroad company should maintain the approaches to the traffic bridge, and it being a very low country opposite Memphis, in Arkansas, the railroad company refused to do that. All this time, while we were considering the matter by public meetings, private meetings, meetings of our representatives, there was only one opponent to the bridge itself, because everybody recognized that it was a good thing. That one opponent was the Frisco Railroad, which now has the only bridge and a monopoly of the bridge business there.

We had another public meeting in Memphis after the railroad company declined the first bill. Public meetings were held in Marion, Ark., across the river, and finally this agreement was made, that an amended bill should be offered and passed, taking out the trolley-line clause from the bill and taking out the question of maintenance; and that in consideration of the city of Memphis giving to the bridge company certain terminal rights. to close certain streets, the railroad company would build the traffic bridge and deed it to the city under the provisions of this bill.

Now, here is what the people get for the building of this bridge: They get an absolutely free-traffic bridge between Arkansas and Tennessee——

Mr. AUSTIN. For wagons?

Mr. McKELLAR. For wagons, pedestrians, teams, automobiles, and every other kind of traffic except railroad traffic. Now, the people of Memphis and the people of Arkansas unanimously agreed at public meetings, after publication; and I know of nobody there who is not in favor of this arrangement that we are asking Congress to ratify by passing this bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. If this amendment is agreed to and placed in this bill, will it defeat the object of the bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. If this amendment is adopted by the House, it means no new bridge for Memphis.

Mr. AUSTIN. And a continuation of the monopoly?

Mr. McKELLAR. It means no railroad bridge and no traffic bridge, and a continuation of the present monopoly that the Frisco road has there.

Gentlemen, it is under these circumstances that I ask you to vote down these amendments. Our people do not come to you, and I do not come to you, unadvisedly in the matter. I want to read to you what the amendments offered by my friend [Mr. UNDERWOOD] will entail. The gentleman is one of the best friends I have, and is perhaps the greatest leader this House ever had, but I want to say that the people down there in Arkansas and Tennessee, after having discussed it and gone over it and worked for it day and night, with committees and at public meetings, and having gone over it with their Representatives, know as much about what is good for them as does my distinguished friend from Alabama. I believe if he knew the circumstances, if he knew how we had toiled to get this great public improvement there, if he knew how earnestly we had worked to stop the present monopoly of the bridge business there, if he knew how much it meant to our material growth and prosperity, I feel sure that he could not but withdraw the amendment and let the bridge bill pass as it passed the Senate unanimously, as I understand, and has come to this House.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does this come as the unanimous report of the House committee, the unanimous vote of the Senate, and the unanimous indorsement of the Tennessee delegation and of the Arkansas delegation?

Mr. McKELLAR. This bill comes here passed unanimously by the Senate, indorsed by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of this House, indorsed by our local people, indorsed after the question of the trolley cars has been discussed in every newspaper in Memphis and in eastern Arkansas for eight months. I want to say that the Underwood amendment to a large extent is already in the law.

The bridge is built under the general bridge act of 1906 and is a part of the bill. Section 3 of that act provides that a bridge built in accordance with the provisions of this act shall be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains of cars over the same and over the approaches thereto upon payment of reasonable compensation for such use.

Is there any way to escape under provisions like that? But if it is not sufficient, does not this make it absolutely fair and just to all railroads:

> And in case of any disagreement between the parties in regard to the terms of such use or the sum to be paid all matters at issue shall be determined by the Secretary of War upon hearing of allegations and proof submitted to him.

Now, gentlemen, it does seem to me that the rights of the other railroad companies are properly safeguarded by the law as it stands, and I hope you gentlemen will not see fit to defeat the local enterprise which means so much to our community. I hope you will not defeat this bill because it is not exactly as it would be under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama or as he thinks it ought to be.

Now, I want to say another thing. They ask "why is there any objection, if trolley cars can go in under the law"?

By the way, our courts have already held that any railroad line, by whatever power it is propelled, has the right to cross the bridge.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. If that be the case, why do you object to the amendment providing for electric lines and trolley cars offered by the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me read the amendment. In the first place, after eight months of negotiations and contracting we have agreed on this bill. The city of Memphis has agreed to pay a certain part of the cost of approaches and to deed certain lands, and the railroad has agreed with the city of Memphis to build this traffic bridge and make it a free bridge. It is upon the faith of this agreement that it has been agreed to pass this bill. Every organization in our city—Cotton Exchange, Merchants' Exchange, City Club, and Business Men's Club—every county organization, as shown by the report, has indorsed this very bill and has agreed to it, and it is our duty to carry it out, and the only effect of these amendments will be for the railroad company to come back to us and say, You have failed to carry out your contract, you have not been able to carry out your contract, and we can not build the bridge.

I want to read the amendment. It puts in the words "trains and trolley cars," and at the end of section 3 it adds the following. I want to ask you to listen to this, for it is a very important vital matter to our city, and my community and the communities on both sides of the river. I want to say that there is not a business man in this House that would invest money in a bridge company to build a bridge under the amendment that is offered by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama, and whatever may have been his intention—and I know it to be the best—the effect of this amendment will be to defeat the bridge. Now, listen and see if any reasonable business concern wanting to invest $3,000,000 and more in a bridge would invest it under the terms of this amendment:

> Provided, That the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have authority to make rules and regulations for the use of this bridge by any other common carrier engaged in interstate commerce at any time, any other such common carrier may desire to use it jointly.

Thus far the only difference from the general law is that it takes it out of the War Department and puts it into the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and, as a matter of fact, as my friend from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] will tell you, the Interstate Commerce Commission already has that right. That is not the meat of this amendment. The meat of the amendment follows:

> And the Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized to fix charges for any such joint use, and such charges shall be based upon the relation that the proportionate use of each carrier bears to the interest of the net income from the sale of bonds to the amount of the actual cost of construction.

If the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama be adopted, the effect of it will be that this company has got to do just what England claims we should do in the case of the Panama Canal. I want to say another thing about this amendment. I sat here this morning and when an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID] to some bill, I saw my friend from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] rise and object to the amendment, and I saw my friend from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] rise and object to the amendment; and why? Because it had not been considered by the committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, the gentleman is wrong. The question I asked of the gentleman from Nebraska was whether he had submitted the proposition to the Democrats on the committee, and he had not done so.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman whether this amendment has been submitted to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee before he offered it?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; but——

Mr. McKELLAR. Then does it not come directly within the rule which the gentleman sought to apply this morning?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, the gentleman overlooks the fact that the gentleman from Nebraska was asking unanimous consent, and I was merely protecting the rights of the Democrats on the Public Lands Committee until they might be consulted, but this is in the open House. If I had to go to a committee to ask leave to offer an amendment in the open House, we probably would never be able to get any legislation.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is probably not always the case, but I desire to call attention to one thing, regardless of any rule about it. This bill has been before Congress since last January. The bill without the amendments offered by the gentleman from Alabama has already passed this House. Why were they not offered then? Why is it that on the last day almost of the session, after the bill has been considered by committees in the House and in the Senate, and after the bill has passed the Senate, just as permission has been obtained from the Speaker to bring the matter up, these amendments are offered, the effects of which, I say, will be to defeat this bridge, this great public undertaking?

I do not represent any railroad and have never represented one in my life, but we all know that this is a great public institution, a great public undertaking, and I do not think that Congress ought to put anything in the way of the building of this bridge, so earnestly desired by my constituents. I desire to say another thing, also, and I will say it in honor of my friend from Alabama, that I believe if this amendment were offered by almost any other gentleman of this House it would not have a chance to pass. I hope he will not insist upon it. I ask him in the name of the people of my district, who have agreed upon it, who know about it, in the name of the committees of the House and of the Senate who have reported it, to withdraw his amendments, and if they are not withdrawn, then I ask the gentlemen of the House, my friends upon both sides of the House, upon a purely local matter, agreed upon by our delegation, agreed upon by our people, after going carefully over every phase of it, by their votes to vote down the amendments offered by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, coming now to a discussion of the bill itself. On July 16 last the House passed the first Memphis bridge bill as amended by the Senate, and on July 20 the bill was duly approved by the President and is now the law.

That bill, in substance, provided that the railroad company which wanted to build a railroad bridge should also provide and maintain a separate general traffic bridge for wagons, horses, footmen, and the like, and should also build and maintain the approaches for said bridge; that it should also permit trolley cars to run over it. It further provided that the sum of $50,000 should be paid to it by the local authorities on either side of the river at Memphis, for the building of the approaches; and that the company should be permitted to charge reasonable tolls for the use of such traffic bridge. The company declined to accept this law.

As shown by the committee's report, the bill passed in July is amended in the following particulars by this bill:

First. The original bill provided that there should be a separate roadway. This was regarded as too indefinite, and the amended bill provided that there shall be "an adequate and a separate roadway."

Second. The original bill provided for the use of the bridge by trolley cars. This bill strikes out this provision and leaves the question of trolley cars as regulated by the general bridge law of 1906. The section of that law relating to the use of bridges is as follows:

SEC. 3. That all railroad companies desiring the use of any railroad bridge built in accordance with the provisions of this act shall be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains or cars over the same and over the approaches thereto upon payment of reasonable compensation for such use; and in case of any disagreement between the parties in regard to the terms of such use or the sums to be paid all matters at issue shall be determined by the Secretary of War upon hearing the allegations and proofs submitted to him.

Section 4 of said act also provides in part as follows:

If tolls shall be charged for the transit over any bridge constructed under the provisions of this act, of engines, cars, street cars, wagons, carriages, vehicles, animals, foot passengers, or other passengers, such toll shall be reasonable and just, and the Secretary of War may, at any time, and from time to time, prescribe the reasonable rates of toll for such transit over such bridge.

It will thus be seen from the reading of these two provisions of the act that it was evidently intended that the word "railroads" should include all kinds of railroads transporting freight or passengers, or both. Otherwise the act would not have prescribed the method of fixing tolls for the method of "cars" and "street cars."

Now, it will be remembered that the general bridge law of 1906 is specifically made a part of this bridge act, and it seems to me under any reasonable construction it would certainly include interurban electric companies, and most likely street railway companies.

The mere fact that trains or cars are propelled by electricity does not make them any the less "railroads." I quote, as follows, from the supreme court of the State of Indiana, from an opinion by Judge Hadley:

Technically a railroad is a way or road upon which iron rails are laid for wheels to run on, for the conveyance of heavy loads and vehicles. (Dinsmore v. Racine, etc., R. Co. (1860), 12 Wis., 725.) The term "railroad," as employed in our general legislation, relates to institutions of a quasi public character; to highways or roads constructed by the authority of the State, with fixed metallic rails upon which public carriers may propel their carriages or cars speedily in the transportation of passengers and freight. Any way or road having these characteristics is a railroad. It is the mode of construction and chartered use, and not the motive power, that determines the character of a railroad. It is declared in the original act providing for the incorporation of railroads that they shall have power to convey, on their railroads, persons and property by the force and power of steam, animal, or any mechanical power, or any combination of them. (I. R. S. 1852, p. 409; 5195 Burns, 1908, cl. 8.)

The term railroad is generic and embraces all species of road constructed and chartered with the above-mentioned attributes. (2 Rapalje & Lawrence, Law. Dict., 1061; 1 Woods, Railroads (Minor's ed.) p. 1; Fulton v. Short Route R., etc., Co. (1887), 85 Ky., 640; 4 S. W., 332; 7 Am. St., 619; Bloxham v. Consumers, etc., St. R. Co. (1895), 36 Fla., 519; 18 South., 444; 29 L. R. A., 507; 51 Am. St., 44.) One may be operated with heavy and infrequent trains, another with single and frequent cars. The real difference is only a matter of degree. At the time of the passage of the act of 1869 there was in use at least two kinds of railroad, viz, the great lines of State and interstate roads, operated by steam power, and the city street or horse railroad, similarly constructed and operated, both common carriers, and both dispensing in large measure like conveniences and benefits to the general public.

That the legislature has regarded all kinds of railroads as belonging to the same genus is manifest from the recent numerous statutes wherein under the term "railroad" expressed in the title, legislation has been accomplished affecting steam, electric, interurban, suburban, and street railroads. (McCleary v. Babcock, 169 Ind., p. 235.)

And so it has been held in the State of Ohio, Cincinnati, etc., Electric Street Railway Co. against Lohe (68 Ohio State Repts., 101; 67 L. R. A., p. 637). In the last cited case Chief Justice Burket, among other things, said:

It seems reasonably clear that while operating the cars of an interurban railroad within a municipality the regulations and powers of a street railroad company are applicable; but when it comes to running cars of such railroads in the open country, upon a track substantially the same as the track of a steam railroad, and at a high rate of speed, it would seem that the same rules as to negligence and contributory negligence should prevail as are applicable to steam railroads, and that a passenger standing upon the platform of an interurban car in the open country should be held to the same rules as if he were standing on the platform of a steam car. The danger is the same in either case, and where there is no difference in the care required nor in the rights and liabilities flowing from the neglect to observe the proper care.

I have also examined into the Interstate Commerce Commission rules on this subject, and find that the commission uniformly holds that the term "railroads" include "interurban" lines; and to be still more certain about the matter, I wrote the War Department and asked them their construction of section 3 of the general bridge act. To this request I received the following reply.

AUGUST 8, 1912.

The SECRETARY OF WAR,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Will you kindly advise me what has been the ruling, if any, of the department on the following section of the general bridge law which was approved March 23, 1906:

"SEC. 3. That all railroad companies desiring the use of any railroad bridge built in accordance with the provisions of this act shall be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains or cars over the same and over the approaches thereto upon payment of reasonable compensation for such use; and in case of any disagreement between the parties in regard to the terms of such use or the sums to be paid all matters at issue shall be determined by the Secretary of War upon hearing the allegations and proofs submitted to him."

In connection with this section I desire to call your attention to the following extract from section 4:

"If tolls shall be charged for the transit over any bridge constructed under the provisions of this act, of engines, cars, street cars, wagons, carriages, vehicles, animals, foot passengers, or other passengers, such tolls shall be reasonable and just, and the Secretary of War may, at any time, and from time to time, prescribe the reasonable rates of toll for such transit over such bridge."

My reason for asking the department's interpretation and construction of this bridge act is that there is now pending in Congress a bill to authorize the building of a bridge at Memphis, Tenn., and the company desires to leave the words "trolley cars" out of the original bill.

It occurs to me that the term "railroad companies" would apply at least to any interurban electric company, and possibly, under the second quotation set out above, it would apply even to any street railway company.

I have been unable to find any judicial construction of this part of the act. If you know of any decision in which it has been construed, I shall be glad if you will give me a memorandum of it. At all events, I shall appreciate the department's construction of this part of the act, and, if possible, would like to have it to-morrow.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
August 10, 1912.

K. D. MCKELLAR, M. C.

DEAR SIR: The provisions of section 3 of the general bridge act of March 23, 1906, have been incorporated in practically all special bridge acts passed by Congress during the past 50 or 60 years, the object of the law being to benefit navigation interests by reducing the necessity for multiplying bridges in a given locality. The powers conferred upon the Secretary of War have rarely been invoked, but it is probable that the law has accomplished its purpose by superinducing fair and reasonable agreements as to joint use of such structures.

At the time of its enactment trolley cars and electric railways were not in existence; but the fact that no substantial change has been made in the law indicates that it was the idea of Congress that its provisions would embrace all trains, cars, and other instrumentalities moving on rails, whether propelled by steam, electricity, or otherwise, and whether employed in local, city, or interstate traffic. And it is believed that the Secretary of War would be warranted in thus construing the statute should a concrete case requiring his determination be presented to the department. I know of no judicial decision on the question.

W. H. BIXBY,
Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

Accordingly, in the light of the decisions, and in the light of the rulings of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the rulings of the War Department, I am convinced that under section 3 of the bridge act, interurban lines can cross this bridge just the same as if a provision was in this bill in so many words to that effect, and it may be, also, that street railways could cross the bridge under reasonable regulations.

Mr. Speaker, this amended bill is not all that I want. I should be glad to obtain the passage of a bill requiring the bridge company to build and maintain both the traffic-way bridge and the traffic-way approaches at its own expense, and prohibiting the company from charging tolls. But, after eight months of negotiation and treaty with the company, as I have stated before, we have been unable to get the company to build the bridge on these terms; but we have obtained an agreement with the company that it shall build an adequate and separate roadway bridge in conjunction with its railroad bridge, at an estimated cost of the traffic-way feature of $420,000. The contract, in substance, is as follows:

We give the company the right to build the bridge; we pay $50,000 for the building of the Arkansas approach, Memphis paying $25,000 and Crittenden County, Ark., paying $25,000; the city of Memphis grants to the company the right to close certain streets where the company already owns the property on both sides of such streets, and also the right to cross certain other streets. This property is estimated to be worth from $100,000 to $125,000. On the other hand, the city of Memphis and Crittenden County obtained the following considerations from the railroad company:

First, the building of a highway compartment to the bridge, costing the company, by estimate, $470,000.

Second, a free highway traffic road between Tennessee and Arkansas, thereby saving the cost of building such a highway bridge, which cost would undoubtedly be not less than $2,000,000.

Third, the establishment in Memphis, Shelby County, Tenn., of a taxpayer that will contribute annually in taxes some thirty or forty thousand dollars.

Fourth, the establishment in Crittenden County, Ark., of a taxpayer which will contribute to that county and State some thirty or forty thousand dollars annually.

Fifth, the immediate expenditure in our midst in paying for labor and materials for the building of the bridge and the contemplated terminals of, perhaps, at a low estimate, of $2,000,000 of outside money.

Sixth, the building of a great railroad and traffic thoroughfare, which will undoubtedly bring other railroads and interurban roads to Memphis and which will greatly aid in the material upbuilding, growth, and prosperity not only of Memphis but of Tennessee and Arkansas.

In view of these great advantages to our community, I feel that it is my duty not only to support the bill but to use every effort within my power to obtain its early passage and the carrying out of the great enterprise contemplated by the bill.

Mr. Speaker, the city of Memphis is a growing and enterprising city. It now has 10 trunk-line railroads; it is at the head of deep-water navigation to the Gulf; it has the largest steamboat system on any river in the United States; it has the greatest artesian water system in the country; it has one of the greatest park systems in the land; it is the center of one of the largest lumber trades in the world; it is one of the largest cotton markets on earth; it has the largest and most complete cotton warehouse and cotton-compress system in the world; it is the center of the greatest farming district in the United States. Its location on the great Father of Waters, its distance from other large cities, its climate permitting work to be done the year round, its railroad and steamboat facilities, the character and genius of its people, the wealth of raw materials to be obtained in its immediate neighborhood, its system of sanitation and health, its splendid streets and roads all mark it as one of our most enterprising cities of the present and as one of the great cities of the future.

The great State of Arkansas is just across the river. No State in the Union is richer in natural advantages. Its people, like those of Tennessee, are a vigorous, strong, masterful, and an enterprising people. It is rich in mines, its fruit crops are enormous, and its lands are as fruitful as those of any State in the Union. And while it has made great strides in the last few years, its development can hardly be said to have begun. The building of this great bridge and the other railroads and interurban lines which will surely follow will be of immense value to the people of that great State. Memphis is her natural market, and this traffic-way bridge will give her free trade with her home city, which now she has so much difficulty in reaching.

Contemplating these things, I feel that, though we do not get all we want in this bill, still it so manifestly makes for the upbuilding and growth of our enterprising city that I should use every endeavor to enact the bill into law and to bring about the improvements contemplated.

When my record of public service is made up, I would a great deal rather have it said of me that I had been a man of action and had aided in the upbuilding and the betterment of my city, State, and country and had contributed to their happiness, welfare, and prosperity than to have it said that I had been a successful politician or a man of eloquent words.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, my friend from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] appeals to this House not to defeat this bill. I join with him in the appeal. As a matter of fact, a little over an hour ago I made an effort to keep the House in session in order that the gentleman could have an opportunity to pass this bill. I want the bill passed, and if the House does not see fit to adopt my views and accept these amendments I shall not raise any question of no quorum or attempt to defeat the gentleman's bill in any way. If we can not get what I think is right about this, well and good. I know his people are entitled to a bridge, and they ought to have it; and if you want to let them build a bridge under the old system, well and good. I shall not attempt to defeat it, but I do believe it in the interest of the people in that section of the South that pour their traffic through this port, this terminal, to the great West; they are entitled to a free and open bridge. They have had a monopoly at Memphis, a bridge that is owned and controlled by one railroad, and no other railroad can cross it; and that has been so for 40 years or more.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Does not the gentleman know that every railroad entering the city from the West now crosses on this bridge, without a single exception?

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. How many are there?

Mr. MCKELLAR. The Rock Island, the Iron Mountain, the Missouri Pacific, the Kansas City, Fort Scott & Memphis, and the Frisco.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand, the Frisco Railroad has the right to control that, but I was going upon the assertion of the gentleman himself. He stated a minute ago that they had a bridge there that was a monopoly, and that he wanted to build this bridge so that there would not be a monopoly. I understood the gentleman to say that, and now he says they have a bridge there which any railroad may cross.

Mr. MCKELLAR. They can come across. I did not mean to say that. The gentleman is entirely correct about the Frisco owning the present bridge, and if the gentleman's amendments be adopted they will continue to own that bridge, and continue to own the only monopoly that is there.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope they will be the only monopoly.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I shall object to that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not want, because you have one monopoly, to create another monopoly. I merely think that this matter is one that Congress should consider in building these great bridges at terminals. You can build bridges up and down a great river at a great many points where nobody will want to cross it except the particular railroad that constructs the bridge, but when you build a bridge at a terminal point, like St. Louis or Memphis, you limit the number of bridges you can build.

And I have heard it said—and I do not assert it as a positive fact, but I have heard it stated—and it is contended, if you build this bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, why, it is the only other bridge that you can get there to get the Memphis terminal facilities, because the approaches will not allow it. They are having trouble in St. Louis now. If you have read the St. Louis papers, you will notice in the last year they are complaining because the railroads having the bridges have a monopoly, and it is unfair to the upbuilding of St. Louis, because you can not cross that great river and can not get competing lines of roads. It is the same thing here. Well, all those people of Alabama, Tennessee, Mississippi, Georgia, and Kentucky that are sending to the trade in the West are interested in competition.

Now, I do not say if this bridge is built to-morrow or the next day there will be another railroad that will want to cross it, but I do say at some time in the next 15 or 20 years at the outside there will be some railroad from the East that wants to cross the Mississippi to go to the West and make a competing line, and they will have to reach these terminal facilities. Now, that is the proposition which I present to the House. I insist it is right and reasonable. I say that the intent of the bridge law ought to be carried out. I do not think it is sufficient and adjustable to do it. I know and admit that the first section of this amendment was taken out of the general law, where it is prescribed that the Secretary of War should regulate these bridges, but you have by your legislation authorized the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix rates. It has got the machinery, it has got the knowledge, it can adjust itself to it. Now, what is the proper place, if you are going to make an open bridge, a bridge on which any train that is drawing the capacity that bridge can stand may cross? Is there any better place to adjust the matter than in the Interstate Commerce Commission itself?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman doubt, under the existing railroad law, where bridges are made a part of railroads specifically, the Interstate Commerce Commission has that power now, so far as fixing rates are concerned?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not talking about fixing the rates for crossing the bridge; I am discussing the question whether the railroads can be permitted to come across the bridge.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit me there? Since the general bridge act was passed, I think, there is no question where one railroad company has built a bridge and another railroad company has desired to use that bridge, there has been any difficulty at all. That was left with the Secretary of War, because the engineers of the Army are on the ground and know in reference to the terms for coming to the bridge and the regulations.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand; but this is not a railroad. This is a bridge company, and it must be regulated by the Secretary of War.

Mr. MANN. So far as rates are concerned.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am simply talking about the interstate commerce adjusting the terms by which they can cross the bridge.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, right in that direct connection, as I understand the gentleman, he thinks the Interstate Commerce Commission has jurisdiction in the matter touching rates. If that is so, why does the gentleman then put a clause as to the method by which the matter shall be adjusted?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will answer the gentleman. I stated in here, "The Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized to fix charges for such joint use." Now the second part of that is—

> And such charges shall be based upon the relation that the proportionate use of each carrier bears to the interest on the net income from the sale of bonds to the amount of the actual cost of construction.

I think that would be fair, and I will say this, if the gentleman so much objects to that portion of the proposition, if that is all that stands in the way, I will amend my amendment and cut that portion out. I am not wedded to that portion of it. I am willing to stop there.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think this: I think any amendment will defeat the bridge, not the bill, but defeat the bridge and defeat this great work. We have agreed upon it, we have entered into a contract about it, and all we ask is that Congress allow us to carry out our contract, because it is protected, as the gentleman from Kentucky so well said a few moments ago, and as the gentleman from Illinois said, by the law as it is. The Interstate Commerce Commission already has the power and jurisdiction over these rates.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Alabama fails to recognize the reason for the provision in the general bridge act, which is in the interest of navigation and commerce. There must be just as few bridges across a stream as possible. The controlling question of what railroads shall cross and the terms under which they should cross it were put under the discretion of the Secretary of War, because under the Secretary of War works a corps of engineers having charge of such work, and they have passed upon all the questions, including the question whether there shall be other bridges allowed or whether they shall be forced to use that bridge and divide the expense. There is a definition in the commerce law that every bridge is a part of the railroad that crosses over that bridge. Therefore, we take the definition of the interstate-commerce law, that it is part of the railroad, it is part of the transportation and the charges, and rates of freight over it are all under the jurisdiction of the interstate-commerce law.

Mr. BATHRICK. In the gentleman's amendment he said the charges shall be based upon the relation that the proportionate use of each carrier bears to the interest on the net income from the sale of bonds to the amount of the actual cost of construction.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, the gentleman may be right about that, and I will strike out that part of my amendment. I think the Interstate Commerce Commission has plenty of power to regulate.

But here is the proposition I am coming to, and the sole proposition before the House. I would strike out this bonding part. The question before this Congress is whether or not you are going to have open bridges or closed bridges. Now, if under the present law it is an open bridge, my friend from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] is not hurt. I have not done anything to interfere with his bridge, and I want to see it built. I want to see it built as much as he does. But if he is trying to put a bill through to create a monopoly and to prevent other railroads from crossing on that bridge, if this bridge company wants to do it, I am not in favor of his bill going through in that way.

Now, I think in all these cases, in the case of every bridge bill that passes, it ought to be prescribed that before authorization is given for such a bridge other railroads shall have the right to go across on the payment of proper tolls. It can not hurt them. Here is a bridge company organized to make money. Now, my friend from Tennessee says it will defeat his bridge.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just let me finish the argument, and then I will yield. I will yield in a moment. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] says that he fears this will defeat his bridge. Now, what would be the effect of this? This is not a railroad, but a bridge company. It expects to make money out of a railroad running across the bridge. Now, it belongs to one railroad. The more railroad trains that go across there the more money will be made for it. Will it not make the bridge more profitable for every train that passes by any other railroad, if it is not the purpose to so pass the bill that it limits the use of the bridge to the trains of one railroad and then make their money by shutting out competition, instead of making it on the trains that run over the bridge by creating competition? That is the whole thing in a nutshell.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. SAUNDERS. I wish to ask this question: I wish the gentleman would advise me how this will be a closed bridge in the event the bill passes in its present form? The gentleman says he objects to a closed bridge, and that he favors a free bridge. I do not exactly understand how his amendment will transform the closed bridge into a free bridge.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not say a "free bridge." I said an "open bridge."

Mr. SAUNDERS. Well, an open bridge.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from Virginia probably did not hear the amendment. It reads:

> The Interstate Commerce Commission shall have authority to make rules and regulations for the use of this bridge by any other common carrier engaged in interstate commerce at any time any other common carrier may desire to use it jointly.

Is not that an open bridge?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Might not that condition obtain under existing law?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I doubt it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. My general apprehension of the law is that that very thing can be done.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Virginia that if it can be done under existing law, then there is no objection to this proposition. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] says that this proposition will kill his bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS. What I am trying to get at is, in what respect does the gentleman from Alabama think that under existing law that can not be done? I think it can be done under existing law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If no terms and conditions apply, it is necessary to go to the engineers' office, and you can not tell whether an adjustment will be made or not, and you can not tell whether they can carry out the terms of it. But under this proposition there is no question but that any railroad that wants to cross the bridge will have a full and free opportunity offered to it, upon paying the toll that the Interstate Commerce Commission says is fair and just.

Now, I do not want to kill the bridge of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. I do want an open bridge across the Mississippi River there. This amendment can not possibly hurt anybody that is willing to have an open bridge. It can not injure them. It will increase their earning capacity, and if the present law authorizes an open bridge, then they can not be injured. But if they do not want the present law changed because they want a closed bridge, in order that they can create a monopoly with it, then I say because a railroad has agreed with certain citizens that they will build a bridge it is our duty to protect the rights of the public.

I am not criticizing these gentlemen. It is natural enough for them to enter into an agreement to get another bridge. I have no doubt they desire it, and probably they will be willing to come to terms, or any terms, if we grant the bridge. But we occupy a different position. It is our duty, as I say, to protect the rights of the public, and because there is a premium offered it is not our business to sit down and let legislation go through here when we can protect the rights of the public if an amendment to the legislation will put it in a shape where the rights of all these people are protected.

Mr. SHERLEY. I should like to ask the gentleman another question. As I understand, there is a bridge there now that is practically owned by the Rock Island Railroad Co.

Mr. MANN. No; owned by the Frisco.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is one bridge there now owned by the Frisco; and the gentleman says, or I understood him to say, that that bridge is a monopoly, but he says now that that railroad lets other railroads use the bridge.

Mr. SHERLEY. On terms fixed by it or fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no knowledge on that.

Mr. SHERLEY. What would the gentleman say to the proposition that no railroad owning and exercising a monopoly over any bridge across the river at that point should be given the privilege of using this bridge unless it granted the same privilege for the use of the bridge it owned? It occurs to me that you may continue the monopoly of the railroad there now, and by undertaking to open up another bridge simply make that bridge less able to compete with the existing monopoly. You ought to apply these conditions to all of them.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no objection in the world to that amendment, if the gentleman desires to offer it. The purpose of my amendment is to have a free bridge there, and if the gentleman does not think the scope of my amendment is broad enough to give a free bridge, and if he can broaden it, he has my full permission, and I will not object to it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the bridge now in existence across the Mississippi River at Memphis was not constructed under the general bridge act, but was constructed long ago, and is not subject to the provisions of the general bridge act.

The House will pardon my making an observation concerning this. As the author of the general bridge act I have felt a small degree of pride in some of its provisions. I agree with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that any railroad bridge that is built ought to be open to the use of any railroad company that can reach it. When the general bridge bill was prepared and enacted into law, it contained and now contains the provision which I will read, and the bill now pending makes that provision a part of it by reference to it:

SEC. 3. That all railroad companies desiring the use of any railroad bridge built in accordance with the provisions of this act shall be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains or cars over the same, and over the approaches thereto, upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case of disagreement between the parties in regard to the terms of such use, or the sums to be paid, all matters at issue shall be determined by the Secretary of War upon hearing the allegations and proofs submitted to him.

And section 5 provides:

That any persons who shall fail or refuse to comply with the lawful order of the Secretary of War or the Chief of Engineers made in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a violation of this act, and any persons who shall be guilty of a violation of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

With a provision for conviction.

And upon refusal of the persons owning or controlling any such bridge and accessory works to comply with any lawful order issued by the Secretary of War or the Chief of Engineers in regard thereto, the Secretary shall cause the removal of such bridge and accessory works at the expense of the persons owning or controlling such bridge.

These bridges are under the jurisdiction of the Engineer Department of the War Department.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I should like to ask if that law provides for any authority to fix the price to be paid by any or all of the railroads?

Mr. MANN. It does.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Or whether the bridge companies can charge exorbitant prices to all of the railroad companies?

Mr. MANN. It expressly provides that if they can not agree upon the price, the Secretary of War shall fix the sum to be paid for the use of the bridge.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understood that the price was to be equal to all roads——

Mr. MANN. If my colleague will listen—

And in case of any disagreement between the parties in regard to the terms of such use, or the sums to be paid, all matters at issue shall be determined by the Secretary of War.

Then it provides further that if they do not obey the order of the Secretary of War they are not only subject to conviction for a misdemeanor, but the Secretary of War has the power to tear down the bridge, or close it up, at their expense.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman explain just what is the difference in effect between the general bridge law and this provision with the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama stricken out?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Alabama proposes in a way to have this power exercised by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The law provides that it shall be exercised by the Secretary of War.

Mr. SAUNDERS. In other words, it is merely a difference of tribunals.

Mr. MANN. The Interstate Commerce Commission would not have the same authority to enforce its order that the Secretary of War has to enforce his order.

Mr. HARDY. Then if it is left under the general bridge law the Secretary of War will enforce the agreement, while this amendment would transfer it to the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. MANN. That is the purpose of the amendment. The Secretary of War not only has authority under the general bridge act to do this, but he has authority to require the bridge company to reconstruct their bridge, to make any changes that are necessary, to add to the approaches, so that other railroads can come up to the bridge, and to widen the bridge if necessary in order to accommodate another railroad.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Who will have the right to charge the tolls to be paid by vehicles, pedestrians, horsemen, animals, and other kinds of highway traffic and travel?

Mr. MANN. If there are any tolls charged—I read from section 4 of the general bridge act:

If tolls shall be charged for the transit over any bridge constructed under the provisions of this act of engines, cars, street cars, wagons, carriages, vehicles, animals, foot passengers, or other passengers, such tolls shall be reasonable and just; and the Secretary of War may at any time, and from time to time, prescribe the reasonable rates of toll for such transit over such bridge, and the rates so prescribed shall be the legal rates and shall be the rates demanded and received for such transit.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman from Illinois will pardon me, I did not catch the reading of the act. Do I understand that the act leaves it discretionary or does it compel the Secretary of War to make provision for the use of the bridge by any other railroad leading to it?

Mr. MANN. The act itself makes it obligatory. The act says that all railroad companies desiring the use of the bridge shall be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the bridge, and then it provides that if the parties do not agree the Secretary of War shall fix the terms for the use of the bridge; and when the Secretary of War fixes the terms he has the power to require a reconstruction of the approaches to the bridge so that another company may reach the bridge, a power which the Interstate Commerce Commission does not have.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, the statute just read by the gentleman from Illinois very sufficiently answers the question that I asked of the gentleman from Alabama. It was my apprehension that by the general law an agency and a means were provided by which the result sought to be obtained by the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama could be attained. The law cited in our hearing very clearing shows that an even more efficient power is lodged in another department than would be vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission should the proposed amendment be engrafted upon the pending measure.

It is easy to see what the loss of the proposed bridge would mean to the city of Memphis, to the Mississippi Valley, and I may say to the commerce of the whole country. On the other hand it is difficult to see what will be gained either for that section or for the country at large should the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama be adopted. After long negotiation the parties in interest have reached the point where the bridge will be built under the pending bill, as it stands. I do not think that this body should jeopardize the chances of success for this great public utility by engrafting on this bill an amendment which seems to be of doubtful necessity. [Applause.]

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MCKELLAR, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 21094) an act to create a commission on industrial relations, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take the bill H. R. 21094 from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania, Mr. HENSLEY, and Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey.

FRIAR LANDS AND CONDUCT OF PHILIPPINE SCHOOLS.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print a certain communication from the Chief of the Insular Bureau on the friar lands and the conduct of Philippine schools. I have had many inquiries touching that matter, so many that I asked the chief of the bureau to give me an answer, which he has done. It is not very long and I ask to print it as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The communication is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF INSULAR AFFAIRS,
Washington, August 16, 1912.

Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CANNON: Complying with your request for a brief statement covering the matter of the purchase and disposition of the friar lands in the Philippine Islands and the rules guiding public-school teachers in the matter of teaching religion in the schools of the Philippine Islands, I beg to inclose the attached memorandum.

Sincerely, yours,

C. R. EDWARDS,
Brigadier General, United States Army,
Chief of Bureau.

[Inclosure.]

In the prenomination campaign, while Congres was in session and the Members of this House were in the main busy attending to their official duties there were circulated in many of the districts reports intended to injure the present administration and incidentally those who had supported it to the best of their abilities. The reports to which I wish to direct myself particularly are those relating to the religious attitude of the administration.

Two of these have reached me. One relating to the purchase of the friar lands in the Philippine Islands and the negotiations leading up to this purchase; and the second, to the rules established for the guidance of public-school teachers in the Philippine Islands in the matter of avoiding the teaching of religion to their pupils.

Happily both of these were old issues—if they ever were issues—settled before the inauguration of the present administration. The friar lands were purchased in 1904 and 1905. The law of the Philippine Government regarding the conduct of public-school teachers in regard to religion was enacted in 1901, and has not, in this regard, been amended since. Attention is called to the fact now that these matters were not handled in any way by this administration, not by way of apology, because these matters have been properly handled and vexatious questions were finally disposed of in a way which any honest administration would have been compelled to dispose of them, but the point is that in each case the reports which have been circulated have attempted to connect these matters with the present national administration.

That there might be no misunderstanding as to these two matters, I desire to here set forth an official reply received from the Bureau of Insular Affairs of the War Department in answer to my request for a brief statement governing these two questions.

THE PURCHASE OF THE FRIAR LANDS.

Article 8 of the treaty of Paris contains the following provision:

> In conformity with the provisions of Articles 1, 2, and 3 of this treaty, Spain relinquishes in Cuba, and cedes in Porto Rico and other islands in the West Indies, in the Island of Guam, and in the Philippine Archipelago, all the buildings, wharves, barracks, forts, structures, public highways, and other immovable property which, in conformity with law, belong to the public domain and as such belong to the Crown of Spain.
> And it is hereby declared that the relinquishment or cession, as the case may be, to which the preceding paragraph refers, can not in any respect impair the property or rights which by law belong to the peaceful possession of property of all kinds, of provinces, municipalities, public or private establishments, ecclesiastical or civic bodies, or any other associations having legal capacity to acquire and possess property in the aforesaid territories renounced or ceded, or of private individuals, of whatever nationality such individuals may be.

Any refusal in the face of this treaty to recognize the property or rights of ecclesiastical or civic bodies or other associations having legal capacity to acquire and possess property in the Philippine Islands was unthinkable, and such refusal was never thought of.

It was found that in the Philippine Islands three religious orders of the Roman Catholic Church—the Dominicans, the Augustinians, and the Recoletos—owned agricultural lands amounting in all to about 425,000 acres; that these lands were in some twenty different estates, and were, in some cases, densely populated. It was found that the ownership of these lands by the religious orders was a source of agrarian troubles. Notwithstanding this, their title to the property could not properly be questioned, and the treaty of Paris required the recognition of such title. The Philippine Commission recommended that the agrarian trouble be overcome by a purchase of the property from the friars.

To carry out this recommendation, on May 9, 1902, the Secretary of War, by direction of Mr. Roosevelt, the President, wrote a letter to Mr. Taft, then civil governor of the Philippine Islands, who was is Washington on business pertaining to the administration of the islands, authorizing him in the course of his return to the Philippine Islands to visit Rome and ascertain what church authorities had power to negotiate for and determine upon the sale of the lands of the religious orders in the Philippine Islands, and that if he found that there were in Rome any such officers of the church, he was to take up with them negotiations looking to the purchase of the friar lands, assuming such purchase to be later authorized by Congress. This letter outlined in a very specific manner what it was desired that Mr. Taft should do. The instructions were headed and numbered, and No. 9 was as follows:

> Your errand will not be in any sense or degree diplomatic in its nature, but will be purely a business matter of negotiation by you as Governor of the Philippines for the purchase of property from the owners thereof, and the settlement of land titles in such a manner as to contribute to the best interests of the people of the islands.
> Any assistance which you may desire, whether on the part of officers of the civil Government or of military officers, to enable you to perform the duties above described in a manner satisfactory to yourself will be afforded; but the business is left entirely in your hands, subject to such action as may be taken pursuant to law upon your report.

Pursuant to this authority Mr. Taft went to Rome and got in touch with the authority with whom he was to deal. He was in cable communication with the War Department during the entire period of the negotiation, and these negotiations are published in full in the report of the Secretary of War for the year 1902 as Appendix O of that report. The negotiations were, in so far as they went, entirely satisfactory to the Government. They did not in any way go to the actual purchase of the friar lands or fixing a value at which they were to be purchased. This was a subject of subsequent negotiation with the owners of these lands—the religious orders in the Philippine Islands.

Congress authorized, in the act of July 1, 1902, the purchase of these lands, and authorized the Philippine Government to issue bonds from the proceeds of which the lands were to be purchased. The lands were purchased (in round numbers, 400,000 acres) for slightly less than $7,000,000. Certain lands were not purchased, the owners refusing to sell at what the Philippine Government believed a fair price. The Philippine Commission enacted the necessary legislation to provide for the sale of these lands where occupied to the tenants, and where unoccupied to citizens of the United States or the Philippine Islands. About 70 per cent of the lands have been sold, including nearly all of the occupied lands, for $5,200,000. The law of the Philippine Commission governing the sale provided, among other things, that no land should be sold at less than its cost price to the Government, including the cost to the administration and interest on the purchase price.

In disposing of these lands the Philippine Government has demonstrated that the price paid for the lands was not more than a fair price. Practically all of the occupied lands have been sold and the unoccupied lands could be sold at any time were it not for the restriction that they must be sold in small areas. This, of course, delays the sale of the more inaccessible of the lands. This negotiation can but be regarded as a very successful one in so much as the Government has distributed among many thousand small owners estates which were formerly held in corporate ownership, and is disposing of the remaining lands which were not occupied so as to avoid any loss on the part of the Government. A difficult agrarian situation has been met and without loss to the Government it has been overcome.

PROHIBITION AGAINST THE TEACHING OF RELIGION IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Prior to the establishment of the existing public-school system in the Philippine Islands there had always been the closest union between the Roman Catholic Church and public instruction, as it existed in the islands. To make this perfectly clear, the commission in charge of primary instruction in 1898 was composed of the following:

President: The governor general of the islands.
Vice president: The Archbishop of Manila.

MEMBERS.

President of the College of San Juan de Letran (a friar).
Provincial of the Recoletos order of friars.
Director of the normal school (a Roman Catholic priest).
The inspector general of public works.
One layman.
One priest.

In the Provinces this was emphasized by the fact that school-teachers were, in effect, subordinates of the parish priests.

In no feature of the newly organized American Government in the Philippine Islands was there such a radical change as in this matter of public instruction, passing, as we did, from a complete control of the schools by the church to a school system which was to be wholly independent of any church, and of which the American principle of the absolute separation of church and state was to be the very foundation.

It should be further noted that at the time of the foundation of this school system there was no religion in the islands other than the Roman Catholic. It requires little consideration, then, to see the hostility which the public-school system would have aroused had the American teachers, most of whom were not Catholics, been permitted to exercise their own judgment in proselyting.

The determination that school-teachers should take no part in the religious instruction of their pupils was not the result of divided counsel. Everyone who had the interests of the public-school system at heart, and who possessed the knowledge which the Philippine Commission possessed in this matter, was of the opinion that this separation of public instruction from religious instruction should be absolute.

The Philippine "educational bill" was adopted by the Philippine Commission on January 21, 1901, after a number of days of public hearings. During these hearings the section of the bill relating to religion was fully discussed. American Protestants and Filipino Catholics of different types freely gave their views. The section as it passed is, in so far as pertinent, as follows:

SEC. 16. No teacher or other person shall teach or criticize the doctrines of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or shall attempt to influence the pupils for or against any church or religious sect in any public school established under this act. If any teacher shall intentionally violate this section, he or she shall, after due hearing, be dismissed from the public service.

* * * * * * *

There have been many amendments to the "educational bill," but none to this section relating to religion, which stands to-day as it passed.

In the application of this law complaints from time to time were made that teachers did not comply with the letter or the spirit of the law. These complaints were passed on by the authorities in the Philippines, and in 1908 Dr. Barrows, who was then director of education, in passing on such complaints issued the circular which is generally made the basis of criticism of those finding fault with the rules made in accordance with the above-quoted section of the "educational bill." This circular was intended to be a summary of decisions made prior to that time and to prevent similar causes of complaint to arise.

That the results of these instructions have been eminently satisfactory is witnessed by the fact that to-day the public-school system, instead of being viewed with suspicion as an institution to destroy the religion of the pupils, is one of the most popular—perhaps the most popular—institution in the Philippine Islands. The Philippine Assembly, composed exclusively of Filipinos, votes appropriations for the public-school system more freely than for any other purpose. The religious question, on which this system might easily have been wrecked, is now a thing of the past, and we have the University of the Philippine Islands, which is the crowning institution of the Philippine public-school system, presided over by an Episcopal minister as president, while on the board of trustees is the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Manila, who acquiesced fully in the appointment of the president.

Dr. Barrows, who signed this order, was an official of, and later the president, of the Young Men's Christian Association at Manila.

He was rather prominent in religious work for a layman, and my attention has been called to what is designated by the Manila Times a "lay sermon" delivered by Dr. Barrows in the Presbyterian Church in the city of Manila while still head of the public schools of the Philippine Islands and after the issuance of the circular mentioned.

Mr. Frank R. White, the present director of education, is chairman of the committee on instruction at the Young Men's Christian Association in Manila, and practically all the instructors in the Young Men's Christian Association are teachers in the public schools.

Teachers are appointed in the Philippine service as the result of civil service examinations and in accordance with the rules governing appointment in the civil service, without reference to or knowledge of their religious belief. I desire to quote here what two prominent professors of the University of Chicago, recent visitors to the islands and lecturers before the Teachers' Summer School, had to say of our teachers in the Philippine Islands:

EXTRACT FROM AN ARTICLE ENTITLED "A MONTH AT BAGUIO."

[By Dr. Francis W. Shepardson.]

I shall always count the month spent in the teachers' camp at Baguio one of the most interesting and memorable of my life. The opportunity to visit the Philippines and to have a small part in the unique educational enterprise which is being conducted here appealed to me strongly. I am glad I came. I shall carry away lasting impressions of men and things at Baguio. The approach to the summer capital was an ideal one. Even anticipations of the glories of the Benguet road did not prepare me for the unfolding wonders which each mile brought to my eyes.

The train from Manila was slow and tiresome, the early morning rising, necessary to catch it, making a poor preparation for a day of enjoyment of a new landscape with its many strange accompaniments. But the limitations of travel by rail were quickly forgotten when the great automobile began its late afternoon climb to the mountain top. The marvelous engineering of the highway, the constant charm of the hurrying stream below, the soft colorings of the canyon, and the wonderful vistas that broke upon the vision, combined with the astonishing skill of the chaffeur, to make our ride one of the enjoyable events of a lifetime. The charm heightened when the hilltop capital was reached and its tremendous natural possibilities were apparent at a glance.

The longing came instinctively for an opportunity to see Baguio again after an interval of 10 years, in order to note the transformation made by man in a veritable garden of the gods. I learned to love the view from my tent on "the Midway," as I watched it in the morning when the sun shone full upon the Japanese garden, or at evening when the western sky was colored by the kaleidoscope of glorious sunset. Where, in all the world, could another such favored spot be found for the rest and recreation of a company of tired teachers? I was delighted with the personnel of the teachers' camp. I have seen many gatherings of educators, but none which averaged higher than this one. The reason, no doubht, is that nowhere else could such a company be found of men and women, who are doing pioneer work, who have the spirit of the pioneers, and whose earnestness in pursuing ideals is reflected in conversation or conference talk.

EXTRACT FROM AN ARTICLE ENTITLED "THE TEACHERS' ASSEMBLY AT BAGUIO," BY DR. JOHN PAUL GOODE.

My first impression, as we reached the foothills of Benguet, was one of exhilaration. The beautiful gorge and the marvelous road filled me with admiration. Then the pines and the resinous air took me back to Northern Minnesota. As we swept around the curving roads of Baguio I began to grasp the plan. Here is a city planned by a master, with a surface providing commanding views and perfect sites for the architectural movements of the future. A capital city in the Tropics, but not tropical, with a climate for the year superior to that of the Adirondacks in summer.

The Teachers' Camp, finely located in the heart of things, shares with the town the advantages of the strongly marked topography. There are building sites sufficient for all needs on the higher ground, and ravines for perfect drainage and for Japanese gardens accentuate the lower land.

From the very first minute it was apparent that a perfect working organization had been evolved in the management of the camp. Most needs were already met or anticipated, and one feels that everything that could be provided under present circumstances had been done. * * *

The company in attendance at the assembly has impressed me with a feeling of pride in the quality of manhood and womanhood in the service of the bureau. They are clean-cut, straightforward, earnest people, the stuff that pioneers are made of. And as I came to know them personally and to hear of their work in all parts of the islands, the problems they are meeting and solving, and the success with which they are carrying the "message to Garcia" in the service of education, I felt proud that I am an American, and that the generous American aim of helping these peoples to help themselves is being realized in the splendid service of the director and his coworkers in the bureau of education. I am certain that the idea of industrial education, as it is here developing, will prove to be the best message that was ever carried to any Garcia. * * *

Each year the problems arising in the work, the new ideas gained, the new success won, will be brought to the Teachers' Assembly at Baguio to be discussed, to get the healthful criticism of other workers, and to enlist others in the development of new plans, a most ideal means of maintaining an esprit de corps and of strengthening all the great work of the bureau. The Teachers' Camp will thus become the teachers' capital, such as the world has never before seen, and other nations, one of these days, will be coming to the Philippines to see how the educational triumphs have been won.

Smith, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I move that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution and that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

PINEY BRANCH ROAD.

Mr. POMERENE. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 21708) to authorize the lighting of Piney Branch Road from Georgia Avenue to Butternut Street, to report it without amendment. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not know that I have any objection to the present consideration of the bill, but I should like to know why, in a particular instance, it is necessary for Congress to take the matter out of the hands of the District Commissioners and to pass special legislation for the lighting of one particular street, while all other street lighting must depend upon the action of the commissioners?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I do not know that I am fully advised about the matter, save that this bill was approved by the District Committee of the House and unanimously passed by the House. The commissioners, as I understand, have opened up or attempted to open up a short thoroughfare called Butternut Street, I believe, and they thought that traffic would be diverted through that street; but their judgment about that has been shown to be erroneous, I understand, as has been demonstrated by a committee which presented certain data to me. While the commissioners were of the opinion that the traffic could all be diverted through Butternut Street, as a matter of fact, by actual count, there were, on March 30, 1912, 486 foot passengers, vehicles, and persons on horseback passing through Piney Branch Road, while there were only 197 on that same day passing over Butternut Street. I am also advised by Rev. Father F. X. Bischoff, whose church is in that vicinity, that probably 100 or more of his parishioners pass over this street. It is very dark and rather secluded, and it is really dangerous for people to pass along there in the early morning or at night. This street has been kept lighted for a matter of thirty-odd years, until suddenly the lights were taken off the street. I believe, under the circumstances, that the bill should pass, and at least one other Senator, who has been over the street, said to me that he wondered why it was not lighted. I feel that it is a street which should be kept lighted.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does not the Senator think that, if the Commissioners have made a mistake, they may yet be amenable to reason, and that if the error can be shown clearly to them they can be trusted to rectify it and take care of the lighting system, without imposing upon Congress the determination of the question as to what streets shall be lighted, what streets shall not be lighted, and how they are to be lighted?

I probably could select quite a number of streets in the city which I think are insufficiently lighted; but it seems to me an exceedingly bad precedent, and one which I certainly have not heard of since I have been in the Senate, that Congress shall interpose its opinion as against that of the commissioners in reference to the lighting of a particular street.

Mr. POMERENE. Possibly the Senator from North Dakota is correct as a general proposition. I myself have not had any conference with the District Commissioners; but I know that the people in that part of the city are very much disturbed about this matter. This bill has already passed the House, and I feel that under the circumstances it should be passed by the Senate, so that this street may be furnished with light. I understand the expenditure will amount to about $240 a year.

Mr. McCUMBER. I suppose we ought not to have a condition existing in which it is dangerous for a man to go to church; so I will not make any objection, although I think the precedent is rather a bad one.

Mr. POMERENE. I am very glad the Senator withdraws his objection. I have no doubt an invitation will be extended to the Senator to visit the church to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEPHEN CAMPBELL AND ISAAC OVERDORF.

Mr. OLIVER. From the Committee on Claims I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 6722) for the relief of Stephen Campbell and Isaac Overdorf. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to Stephen Campbell and Isaac Overdorf the sum of $100 each as reward for their services in capturing three burglars who attempted to rob the United States post office at Jersey Shore, Pa.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment relative to the location or entry of coal lands in Alaska under the coal-land laws of the United States prior to November 12, 1906, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill (H. R. 25970), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SEAMEN IN THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 23673) to abolish the involuntary servitude imposed upon seamen in the merchant marine of the United States while in foreign ports and the involuntary servitude imposed up the seamen of the merchant marine of foreign countries while in ports of the United States, to prevent unskilled manning of American vessels, to encourage the training of boys in the American merchant marine, for the further protection of life at sea, and to amend the laws relative to seamen, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—ELIJAH WATTS.

On motion of Mr. SHIVELY, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill (S. 7334) for the relief of Elijah Watts, introduced in the Sixty-second Congress, second session, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

REDUCTION OF TARIFF DUTIES.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask that the resolution introduced by me on the 17th instant, being Senate resolution 381, to appoint a committee of three Members of the Senate and three from the House of Representatives to confer with the President with a view to harmonizing the differences now existing between Congress and the President regarding the reduction of excessive duties be changed from a Senate to a concurrent resolution, in order to perfect it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the Senator's privilege. It will be so ordered.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask unanimous consent that the concurrent resolution be considered and voted upon to-morrow before 5 o'clock.

Mr. HEYBURN and Mr. SMOOT. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. If the Senator from Nevada will send the concurrent resolution to the desk, it will take the place of Senate resolution No. 381, which resolution will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. NEWLANDS subsequently said: I give notice that to-morrow during the morning hour I shall move that Senate concurrent resolution No. 29, for the appointment of committees of conference on the part of the Senate and the House of Representatives to confer with the President with reference to an adjustment of the differences on the tariff, be taken up for consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Nevada gives notice to that effect?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I give notice.

THE NATIONAL UNIVERSITY (S. DOC. NO. 792).

Mr. OLIVER. I present an abstract of an address on the National University, delivered before the National Education Association, at Chicago July 9, 1912, by Edmund J. James, Ph. D., LL. D., president of the University of Illinois. I ask that the paper be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

JUVENILE COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA (H. DOC. NO. 913).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the Sixth Annual Report of the Juvenile Court of the District of Columbia, for the year ended June 30, 1912.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 19, 1912.

[NOTE.—Report accompanied similar message to the House of Representatives.]

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 24565) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, further insisting upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and asking a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments and agree to the further conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. PERKINS, Mr. LODGE, and Mr. TILLMAN conferees at the further conference on the part of the Senate.

RELIEF OF AMERICAN CITIZENS IN ARIZONA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 133) appropriating the sum of $20,000, out of money appropriated by Senate joint resolution No. 129, for subsistence of American citizens now in Arizona fleeing from threatened danger in the Republic of Mexico, which were, to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That out of the money appropriated by Senate joint resolution 129 (Public resolution No. 49) providing for transportation of American citizens fleeing from threatened danger in the Republic of Mexico, there may be expended, until December 10, 1912, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, not to exceed $20,000 for the subsistence of American citizens who shall have fled, or who may hereafter flee, from the Republic of Mexico into the States of the United States bordering on the Republic of Mexico, and who are now and who may hereafter be unable to pay for their own subsistence.

And to amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution appropriating the sum of $20,000 out of money appropriated by Senate joint resolution No. 129, for subsistence of American citizens who shall have fled, or who may hereafter flee, from threatened danger in the Republic of Mexico into the States of the United States bordering on the Republic of Mexico."

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 26321. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MEXICAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I rise to a question of privilege.

A short time ago I addressed the Senate upon a Senate joint resolution (No. 129) then pending touching certain claims of American citizens against Mexico. A short time afterwards, something like a week, there appeared in the papers of the country, sent out through the Associated Press, I presume, a statement referring to my remarks, which statement purported to come directly from Mr. Madero, who is the recognized President of the Republic of Mexico.

I have not heretofore taken up the matter, believing that Mr. Madero would find himself mistaken, possibly, in some of the statements he made as to the effect of my action or what he claimed I had done in the premises outside of the Senate Chamber. But apparently Mr. Madero retains the opinion which he claimed to entertain at that time. I ask that the article referred to be read from the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Sunday Star, Washington, D. C., Aug. 11, 1912.]

MEXICO BLAMES FALL FOR FAILURE AT PEACE—SENATOR CRITICIZED IN OFFICIAL STATEMENT VOICING VIEWS OF MADERO.

MEXICO CITY, August 10, 1912.

Mexico blames Senator FALL, of New Mexico, for its failure to come to peace terms with Gen. Pascual Orozco, rebel leader. President Madero came to this conclusion to-day, and it was based principally upon reports he received from Government agents at El Paso. He made his views known in an official statement issued by the department of the interior by his authorization.

Practically all hope of negotiating peace terms with the rebels now has been abandoned by the Government. Rafael Hernandez, minister of fomento, who conducted negotiations with Orozco near El Paso, has gone to Lower California to study irrigation conditions.

PART OF SENATOR FALL.

It is understood here Government agents at El Paso reported that Senator FALL played more than a passive part in frightening Orozco off. Just what action was taken the Government does not pretend to know, but it is intimated he might have communicated directly to Orozco sentiments expressed in his recent speech in the Senate on the Mexican situation.

"It seems that Orozco had accepted the conditions," says the official statement, "when he brusquely and without a known motive changed his attitude completely. There is no official data on the causes which brought about this change, but from reports that have been received it seems that the determination of Orozco was influenced by the efforts of an American Senator, A. B. FALL, who lately delivered in the Senate a speech filled with criticism of the Mexican Government."

OROZCO'S PROPOSITION.

Orozco's proposition was that he be permitted to leave the country, but it was not definitely specified where he expected to go. This left the United States as a possible chance, and Government officials now are inclined to believe he expected to join his wife in California.

Senator FALL has demanded that Orozco be held personally responsible by the United States for acts committed against Americans.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have some knowledge of Mexican affairs and Mexican conditions, and I have sources of information from Mexico and from the border which possibly are not open to other Senators, by reason of the fact that for a great many years I have operated somewhat extensively in the Republic of Mexico—in fact, for something like 30 years past, in various States of that Republic—and I am constantly in receipt of communications from various persons in Mexico. Of course, this situation is so delicate that I am not justified in mentioning names of parties or persons from whom I obtain my information.

In making the speech referred to in Mr. Madero's communication, the statements contained therein were made upon what I believed to be sources of information that could not be controverted. The speech, however, was more in the nature of a criticism of the actions of the departments of this Government than upon the government of Mr. Madero, because I thought then and I think now Mr. Madero is incapable of coping with the situation in Mexico, granting that he desires to do so.

As to the sources of Mr. Madero's information, it appears from his own statement that his information came to him from a Government agent, presumably the Mexican consul in the city of El Paso. I have no hesitancy in naming this agent of Madero in the city of El Paso. Mr. Llorente has undoubtedly furnished Mr. Madero with the information upon which his statement was made. Mr. Llorente is now the consul of Mexico at El Paso, and he is there very officiously engaged in watching the United States officials through something like 400 paid spies; also watching the citizens of El Paso and watching the citizens of the United States; watching the troops of the United States who are endeavoring to enforce the neutrality laws; making complaints against American and Mexican citizens; having them incarcerated under the extradition treaty with Mexico in the jail of El Paso for 40 days, without trial. He not only conceives that upon him rests the responsibility of the execution of the neutrality laws of the United States, but that it is often incumbent upon him to assist Mr. Madero, at least, in running the Mexican Government itself. This gentleman is a man of very great importance in his own eyes, at least, and seems to be convinced of his ability to run the Government of the United States or to conduct its affairs on the border, as well as to tell Mr. Madero what he shall do.

Mr. President, the conditions in Mexico at the time this statement was made by Mr. Madero were practically these: Mr. Pascual Orozco is in command of certain revolutionists in the northern part of the Republic consisting, I presume, at the outside of 8,000 armed men. Mr. Zapata is in command of something like 23,000 well-armed men in certain other States of the Republic. Military rule has been declared by the Mexican Government in practically every State of the union. Peace negotiations, it is said, had been inaugurated by Mr. Madero; and at the time when Hernandez came around through the United States and crossed the river at Juarez to meet Mr. Orozco with this proposal of peace three Members of Congress and, I believe, one member of the Mexican cabinet were in negotiation with Zapata to the same end.

It is unnecessary, or it should be, it seems to me, to say that the charge made by Mr. Madero is ridiculous. I, however, enter an emphatic denial that I have had any communication with Mr. Orozco, or any other revolutionist in Mexico, any more than I have had with Mr. Madero or any of those who are acknowledging allegiance to his so-called government. I am not in negotiation with either party, and I am not trying to act for one or the other or to interfere with the actions of either, except to undertake to impress upon the minds of the people of the United States that the present condition in the Republic of Mexico can not continue, and Senators will discover that to be the case in a very short time.

I say very frankly, from the knowledge I have, that present conditions in Mexico can not last very much longer in justice to the citizens of the United States who are there, and in the name of humanity they should not continue.

Now, further, Mr. President, the idea suggests itself to me that Mr. Madero has gone further possibly than he intended the world to know in making public a statement in reference to my supposed connection with Mexican affairs. I am convinced that as a matter of recognized international law, or rules of war, Mr. Madero has officially notified the governments of the world and the people of the world of the fact which those of us cognizant with Mexican affairs, as I am, knew before, that President Madero has recognized the belligerency of the revolutionists headed by Orozco, Zapata, and the junta, at the head of which is probably Gomez. The United States and the people are notified by this statement of Madero that he, representing that Government, has heretofore recognized and is now recognizing the belligerency of the revolutionists.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I have nothing to say at this time on the particular matter referred to by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I take occasion, however, to say that, as one of the Senators from the State of Texas, I have watched the situation in Mexico very carefully and have been in constant communication with the State Department here with reference to the matter. I happen to have with me a copy of a telegram sent me by Secretary Knox on this general subject, which I ask to have read at the desk. It shows what the State Department is doing with reference to the protection of the property and lives of Americans in the Republic of Mexico.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Telegram.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, July 30, 1912 (11.40 a. m.).

The Hon. CHARLES A. CULBERSON,
United States Senate:

In response to your telephonic inquiry of the department this morning, I have the honor to inform you that the present truculent attitude of the Mexican insurrectionists in the vicinity of the Mormon colonies in northwestern Chihuahua was brought to the attention of the department late Sunday afternoon by the consul at Juarez. Telegrams were dispatched the same evening to the consul, instructing him to keep the department constantly informed and to report all developments, and to the embassy at Mexico City, instructing it to lay the situation before the Mexican Government and to say, with all possible earnestness, that the Government of the United States expects that the Mexican Government will immediately exert every possible effort to relieve the situation and to adequately protect American life and property.

Monday afternoon a second telegram was received from the consul, in which he states that the Mexican consul at El Paso having charge of the Mexican Federal troops north of Casas Grandes had promised to give orders immediately to crowd the rebels in that section. The consul adds that about 300 American refugees, mostly women and children, had arrived at El Paso Sunday night and more were to follow. He states, however, that the excitement seems to be disproportionate to the cause therefor and voices his opinion that the situation will improve as soon as the promised advance of the Federal soldiers begins. The department deemed it advisable, nevertheless, to have the consul remind the insurrectionary leaders that the persons and property of American citizens in Mexico must not be molested, and accordingly instructed him, in a telegram sent last night, to say to the insurrectionary leaders that any molestation of Americans or American property would be intensely resented by the American Government and people and that the insurrectionists must not maltreat Americans or American property in any way.

P. C. KNOX,
Secretary of State.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have no doubt the Senator from Texas, as a Senator from that State, has done everything in his power which he thought best to do to secure the protection of citizens of Texas as well as of the other States of this Union. I think at the same time that the Senator from Texas, from his personal knowledge of the circumstances under which I have lived and done business on the border, will himself say that I possibly possess as well-founded information, possibly from as competent sources of information, as even the State Department of the United States.

While the Senator from Texas has been keeping up with Mexican affairs as the State Department imparts information to him, I have been getting my information from sources which are superior, apparently, to those of the State Department of the United States, giving the State Department all credit for acting in perfect good faith. If the department is so doing, as I have no doubt it is, then I think, of course, its sources of information are not as correct as they might be.

I have here, sir, lying before me at this moment statements from authorities which, if I could give the names, would convince Senators that the information just given as to conditions in Mexico is absolutely unfounded. I have the information here from undoubted sources that there are, at the outside, to-day 420 so-called Federal troops in the northern part of the State of Sonora to guard the frontier posts of customs, the ports of entry, the great mining camps of Cananea, Nacozari, and others, and all the settlements in the entire northern portion of Sonora. I have a statement here, from men whose word is as good as that of any man connected with the State Department of the United States, whose homes are being threatened, that at least one community of Americans have got together and are now under arms in the State of Sonora, and over 300 strong, and in another mining camp of 2,000 Americans, where $60,000,000 of American property is involved, those Americans are banded together and they have determined to protect themselves. I have a statement here from undoubted authority, but I do not dare to mention names, because some of them fear that their lives would be forfeited if their names were published.

I know that within the last 30 days 200 rifles have been bought from one store in Arizona by American residents of the State of Arizona, who have declared it to be their intention that when the first American is killed in the State of Sonora they will go across the border. I know there are 2,000 people in the vicinity of the border—American citizens—who understand the conditions as well as any men can understand them, and that they have made up their minds that the persecution and murder of American citizens must cease.

Now, it seems that Orozco has moved out of Juarez and has gone west into Sonora with the idea of joining other revolutionists who have preceded him within a short period and who have so far made their way unimpeded, according to the newspaper reports, which are borne out by other information within my possession.

It is within the knowledge of Senators who have read the Associated Press dispatches within the last day or two that about 20 Americans have been reported surrounded and battling in a small Sinaloa town for nearly a week, and that the Madero Government is impotent and can give them no protection whatsoever.

Mr. BACON. Before the Senator takes his seat, I would like to ask him a question. During the time when the Senator was first addressing the Senate this morning my attention was necessarily diverted and I did not hear what he said. I wish to inquire of the Senator if he is proposing any special action on the part of the Senate?

Mr. FALL. I am not. I will state to the Senator from Georgia that I rose to a question of privilege, simply, respecting a public statement made by Mr. Madero to the effect that I was interfering with peace negotiations in Mexico. The latter portion of my remarks were brought out by the fact that the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] had read in connection with the remarks which I made on the question of privilege a statement from the State Department as to the conditions down there.

Mr. CULBERSON. If the Senator from Georgia will permit me, I may have misunderstood the Senator from New Mexico, but I understood him to suggest, at least tentatively, that the United States ought to recognize the belligerent rights of the revolutionists in Mexico.

Mr. FALL. I have carefully refrained, Mr. President, from making a personal suggestion in this matter. I did state, as a proposition of law, as I understand it, that Mr. Madero, notifying the world by public statement made by himself as President of Mexico that he has been in negotiations with Orozco; has notified the world that he has recognized the belligerency of the insurgents in Mexico. I stated that I understood this was all the insurgents in Mexico had ever asked of the United States—recognition of their belligerency.

Mr. BACON. The inquiry I wish to make of the Senator is this: The Senator portrays a very lamentable condition of affairs in Mexico, which we must all deplore. Of course, there must be something to be accomplished when matters of that kind are brought to the attention of the American Congress. I presume the Senator will recognize that if there was anything done it should be done by Congress and not by the Executive.

Mr. FALL. I think, without betraying any confidence, I can say that probably two months ago—it may be three months—I suggested something of that character to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. Very well. Now, that is only preliminary to the question which I intended to ask the learned Senator. The main question I want to ask him is this: The Senator is probably more familiar with the conditions there than any other Member of this body, having personal acquaintance with some of the principal actors and being in a better position to judge of what their abilities are and their purposes and what the possible eventualities may be, and with an intimate knowledge evidently of the conditions, to say nothing of the knowledge of persons.

I presume the Senator would assume, and I will say every Senator should assume, that if any action is taken it should be governmental action, undertaken by the authority which the Constitution contemplates should be the authority to take such action, and that necessarily being action by Congress. The Senator, concerned as he is in this matter, and familiar as he is with it, what is the view the Senator has; what is the opinion of the Senator as to what action should be taken by Congress, if any, or does the Senator think any should be taken?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have no hesitancy whatever in saying that my views, which I have endeavored to impress upon some of the Senators here individually and upon some, at least, of those charged with the administration of this Government, have been for months that the Mexican Government has not simply technically, but as a matter of fact, recognized the belligerency of Orozco and Zapata.

First, if the Senator will allow me, I will explain in a few words just the conditions as I understand they exist there to-day and whether they show any organized opposition to the Madero Government.

The revolution against Mr. Diaz was brought about by a revolutionary "junta," as it is called, or, as we would say, a committee. That revolution was successful, Mr. Madero in the north joining one of the successful captains or generals of that revolution. That junta apparently has never been satisfied; it was not dissolved, as I understand it, during the election which succeeded the temporary incumbency of the Presidency by Mr. de la Barra. Mr. de la Barra succeeded Diaz as provisional President. A general election was called. The nominee of this revolutionary party for the Presidency was the incumbent, Francisco I. Madero; for the Vice Presidency, Vasquez Gomez, who had been chairman or head of or at least one of the leaders of the revolutionary junta.

Sometime during the campaign it is claimed that Mr. Madero called together a party of his adherents in the City of Mexico and succeeded in, as they called it, nominating, as a matter of fact, as we would view it, simply placing a ticket in the field composed of Francisco I. Madero for President, and Pino Saurez, of Yucatan, for Vice President. This action estranged from Madero the Vasquez Gomez faction and some of the Gomez people bitterly resented what was claimed by them to be the treachery of Madero.

They have claimed since that the election machinery was used exactly as it was used under the Diaz administration; that the men whom the party controlling the election machinery wanted elected both as President and Vice President were declared elected. It has been claimed by Madero's opponents that Vasquez Gomez really defeated Saurez for Vice President by a very large majority, even with the machinery of election in the control of the Madero convention. This is their claim; I am not stating it as my opinion, but simply as the claims made by revolutionists like Orozco and Zapata. Mr. Orozco had recognized Madero, in fact had put him in power, Orozco commanding the revolutionaries in the north. Zapata refused to recognize any Government until the final election for the Presidency. In other words, during the interim when De la Barra was President, Zapata retained his men under arms, refused to disband them and refused to surrender the Mexican regular forces. When the election came on Zapata's men insisted upon adhering to the original understanding and electing Gomez as Vice President.

Mr. Madero himself undertook to make peace with Mr. Zapata at that time, but his offers were rejected. Following Madero's election his former associates immediately demanded of him the carrying out of their "plan," as they call it, or the platform upon which he had been elected. The claim has been made by the "junta" and their followers that instead of carrying out the promises made in the platform and made to them Madero allowed the Mexican treasury to be looted of $62,000,000, of which there remains nothing now, and that the Government is being run upon money furnished them upon bonds at a very heavy rate of discount. It is claimed by the opponents of Madero that Zapata, who has never accepted or acknowledged Madero as president, still retaining those men under his command whom he commanded during the first revolution, has augmented their original number until he has now 23,000, fully armed and equipped, in the southern States and controlling various States in the Republic. Zapata claimed that the election was fraudulent, and that a new election should be held. Orozco still adhered to the Madero government until a few months ago, when, after having resigned several times, he finally forced the acceptance of his resignation as general some five or six months since.

Orozco claims that after he had delivered his parting address to his soldiers in the barracks at Chihuahua, Paucho Villa, who prior to the revolution had been an outlaw and a bandit with a price upon his head, but who later had fought in the Madero revolution and now commanded several hundred men with whom he claimed to be supporting the Madero "régime," dashed into the city of Chihuahua with his men with cries of "Kill Orozco! Kill Orozco!" Orozco immediately hurried back to the barracks. His troops were loyal to him. He repulsed Villa's band and drove them out of the city, and giving this action of Villa, which he claims was at the instigation of Madero, as one of his excuses assumed supreme command of his troops again. He then issued a "proclamation" and demanded the resignation of Madero and a new election. It is claimed that Orozco and Zapata are acting together, with the "junta" or committee in general command all demanding a new, and as they say, a fair election. As my information goes, and I think it is fairly correct, there have never been less than 20,000 armed men protesting against the Madero government since the Diaz overthrow. And my information is that there are now under arms against the Madero government more men than were engaged against the Diaz government. Ports are held by the revolutionists through which they can acquire arms and ammunition. The revolutionists control the port of Matamoros, opposite the town of Brownsville, in the State of the Senator from Texas. Through this port of Matamoros they have been obtaining arms and ammunition of war, which they have been sending down to Zapata's forces.

Those are about the conditions. On, I think, the 14th of March, the Congress of the United States passed an act authorizing the President of the United States whenever in his opinion there was domestic trouble in any foreign country contiguous to ours—of course referring to Canada on the north and Mexico on the south, and of course it being aimed at conditions in Mexico—and trouble in those countries would be fomented by furnishing arms or ammunition from this country, the President should have power to suspend the exportation of arms and munitions of war.

Under this resolution, as it was general in its terms, the President issued a proclamation to all citizens of the United States warning them to carry out the terms of the resolution. The ports of Juarez, of Colima, and such ports as were controlled by Orozco and the revolutionists of the north were closed to the exportation of arms and ammunition.

The ports of Vera Cruz, of Tampico, of Salina Cruz, and all the other ports on both sides of the Mexican Republic, both on the east and on the west, were left open. When the attention of the Government was called here publicly to the fact that arms and munitions of war were being furnished by Americans through those ports, through which they could reach Madero and his faction, of course the revolutionists, who were cut off from their source of supplies in the United States, conceived the idea—wrongfully, of course—that the President of the United States was undertaking to maintain Mr. Madero in power. They became, to a certain extent, incensed against the United States, as they thought the United States should not have allowed arms and ammunition to be exported to either faction, they regarding Madero simply as a usurper and as a leader of a faction, exactly as they regarded Orozco and Zapata, or Zapata having admitted that Orozco was in supreme command of the armed forces, and they both being answerable, or supposedly answerable, to the junta. They do not understand that the people of the United States do not regard the conditions there as they do; they do not understand that because Madero has been recognized as the President of Mexico, therefore we deal with him on a different plane from that upon which we deal with the revolutionists.

Mr. President, I have no desire to take up any further time of the Senate, but I felt compelled to make this explanation as shortly as possible before I could intelligently answer the question of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]. Mr. Madero himself, to my mind, if I know anything about the rules of war or of international law, by his action in openly sending commissioners to treat with Zapata and with Orozco for peace has notified the world that he has recognized the belligerency of these so-called insurgents. In the event the United States Government, through a resolution of Congress, was to recognize the belligerency of the insurrectionists, what would be the effect? Simply that thereafter damages which might accrue to American property or to American citizens within the country of the belligerents could not be collected against the Government of Mexico in the event Madero was successful. In the event finally that the insurgents were successful, such damages could be claimed and collected against the Government of Mexico in the event they constituted, or the parties that they supported constituted, the Government of Mexico. That would be the only effect of a recognition of belligerency. Such a recognition of belligerency would simply leave those people there to their own resources. If we had recognized the belligerency of the insurrectionists, there would have been no reason for their robbing stores to get ammunition and for their robbing American citizens down there of their arms and ammunition, leaving them unprotected; there would have been no reason for their seizing all the supplies that they have seized and stripping the stores upon which the colonists and others there are dependent for their source of supplies. They could have gotten their supplies from across the river just as they had gotten them from identically the same men from whom they obtained arms, munitions, and supplies when they were engaged in behalf of Mr. Madero in overthrowing the Diaz government.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, while I do not desire to protract the consideration of this subject, yet I should like to say a word further before passing from it.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] intimated, as I caught his language, that my information with reference to the situation comes exclusively from the State Department. In that he is mistaken. I have received information on the general situation not only from personal acquaintances and friends in Texas, at San Antonio and El Paso, for instance, but have had confidential letters from personal friends and from former Texans in Mexico itself. One of them I have in mind now from the City of Mexico. So I tell the Senator that, while I do not doubt the bona fides of the State Department with reference to the situation there, my own position is taken not entirely with reference to what has been done in the State Department, but is based also upon statements made to me by personal friends and acquaintances in Texas and in Mexico in whom I have the greatest confidence.

I did not intend to say what I am about to say, Mr. President, when I rose, but nevertheless I will say it, that I do not believe that the situation in Mexico justifies intervention on the part of the United States, because that would be practically a declaration of war and involve this country in strife with Mexico wholly unnecessary. Nor do I believe the situation justifies or calls for the recognition of the belligerent rights, so called, of the insurgents, because, among other things, I have no doubt that it would unnecessarily prolong the conditions now existing of disturbance in that Republic.

For this reason I am personally opposed either to intervention or to the recognition of the belligerent rights of the insurgents in that country. The recognition of belligerent rights, I repeat, would tend to bring about a continuation, not a cessation, of the disturbed conditions now existing in Mexico.

NATIONAL SOLDIERS' HOME, SANTA MONICA, CAL.

Mr. WORKS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of calendar No. 920, Senate resolution 160, providing for an investigation of the management of the branch National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, Santa Monica, Cal.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution which had been reported by Mr. BRIGGS on the 15th instant from the Committee on Military Affairs, with amendments.

The amendments of the Committee on Military Affairs were, on page 1, line 2, after the word "Senate," to insert "or a subcommittee thereof"; in line 4, before the word "branch," to strike out "such" and insert "the"; in the same line, after the word "branch," to strike out "home" and insert "National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Santa Monica, Cal."; and on page 2, line 6, after the word "such," to strike out "counsel and," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, or a subcommittee thereof, be, and it is hereby, instructed to make full investigation of the condition and affairs of the branch National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Santa Monica, Cal., and particularly to determine the nature of the treatment given at such home to the members thereof; and to report the facts and their findings to the Senate; and that said committee be authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate and during any recess of the Senate or Congress, and hold its sessions at such place or places as it shall deem must convenient for the purposes of such investigation; to employ stenographers and such competent accountants as it may deem necessary; to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths, and that the expenses of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from California to the fact that the committee reports to strike out the preamble, which usually is done; but the phraseology of the resolution will have to be changed if it is stricken out.

Mr. WORKS. Very well, let the preamble be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the preamble will be stricken out and the Secretary will make such changes as may be necessary in the resolution.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 20728) making appropriation for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, on Saturday the acting chairman of the committee suggested that an item in which an increase in the appropriation had been made over that requested by the department could be used for the purpose of providing district agents in Oklahoma. I regret to have to disagree with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] and the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], who took the same position. The item referred to is in regard to special agents and inspectors who do work in every section of the country. The appropriation for that purpose is only $20,000 more than was estimated by the department for this class of work; so even if it could be used to supply agents for Oklahoma, there would be only $20,000 to do work which heretofore has cost $100,000. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the law on this subject—section 6 of the act of May 27, 1908—which provides for district agents, and reads as follows:

SEC. 6. That the persons and property of minor allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes shall, except as otherwise specifically provided by law, be subject to the jurisdiction of the probate courts of the State of Oklahoma. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby empowered, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, to appoint such local representatives within the State of Oklahoma who shall be citizens of that State or now domiciled therein as he may deem necessary to inquire into and investigate the conduct of guardians or curators having in charge the estates of such minors, and whenever such representative or representatives of the Secretary of the Interior shall be of opinion that the estate of any minor is not being properly cared for by the guardian or curator, or that the same is in any manner being dissipated or wasted or being permitted to deteriorate in value by reason of the negligence or carelessness or incompetency of the guardian or curator, said representative or representatives of the Secretary of the Interior shall have power and it shall be their duty to report said matter in full to the proper probate court.

That simply shows that under the law these agents were given a specific duty. They must be citizens of Oklahoma and they must be residents of Oklahoma, and their work is limited, and therefore the act would not apply to them.

Mr. CLAPP. It is true that in 1908 Congress created an office known as district agent, and provided that the district agent should be a citizen of and be domiciled in the State of Oklahoma, but it is equally true that the capacity of a man to investigate a supposed fraud upon an Indian would not depend upon the fact whether he was a citizen of any particular State. My contention is that while I would have been glad to have got $100,000 for this purpose, the Interior Department, so far as authority is concerned, can send any agent into the State of Oklahoma to investigate those things which formerly were investigated by men who were heretofore designated as district agents, and there is not anything in the law to-day that prohibits inspectors and agents of the Government otherwise designated from performing the very functions that were placed upon the district agent. In the committee, as I recall, the officers of the department admitted that if they had the money to employ men they could perform this work; they could take these very same men and employ them.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. The officers of the department claim they can not do it, and they sent me this law as showing that they could not and have no authority under the provision to place these men to do the work of the district agent in Oklahoma.

Mr. CLAPP. While I am in hearty sympathy with the department in this matter, I do not propose to be placed in a wrong attitude.

I undertake to say that when a statute of the United States makes an appropriation for special agents and in that statute says "for any purpose not otherwise provided for by law," the appropriation, so far as the law goes, can be used for purposes not otherwise provided for by law. Whether, in the exigencies of the department, reducing this appropriation from $100,000 to the point to which it is reduced will permit the employment of these or other men for this purpose is a question which is involved in doubt, and upon which I cheerfully and readily accept the statement of the department. In the conference it was suggested—if we could only get money enough—that, under the liberal provisions of the section which authorizes money for special agents and other purposes not otherwise authorized by law the work could be carried on.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. BORAH. It does not seem possible that the department has found itself under any restraint in employing agents.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course not, except in the amount of money available for that purpose.

Mr. CURTIS. I think the Senator from Idaho misunderstood my position. The law does authorize them, and the section referred to by the Senator from Minnesota authorizes the employment of special agents and inspectors. But the district agents are provided for in the act of May 27, 1908, and their duties defined and the law says they must be local representatives within the State of Oklahoma or now domiciled therein.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to say if a statute had been passed which was sufficiently explicit and sufficiently binding to restrain the department in the use of money for special agents to the use for which Congress said it should be used, I think we should keep that law as a model to be followed for all time to come.

Mr. CLAPP. The provision which has been the law for a long time reads:

For pay of special agents at $2,000 per annum; for traveling and incidental expenses of such special agents, including sleeping-car fare, and a per diem of $3 in lieu of subsistence when actually employed on duty in the field or ordered to the seat of government; for transportation and incidental expenses of officers and clerks of the Office of Indian Affairs when traveling on official duty.

I call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to this language. Among the things enumerated are—

For transportation and incidental expenses—

Then—

For pay of employees not otherwise provided for; and for other necessary expenses.

There can be no question under that that the department, if it had the funds which it could spare out of this appropriation, could send the agents it now has, or that it could appoint these very men whose term of office may expire, to do the very duties which now devolve upon them by reason of their appointment.

Mr. President, whether the department can get along with the amount of money which we have appropriated is another question. I shared with them the hope to get the entire amount, and the question for the Senate to consider is whether having made the increased appropriation, having fallen far short of what the department says it requires for the purpose, in view of all the facts connected with the situation, the report should be sent back to conference.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have been greatly interested in this discussion, and I have obtained some impressions which unless they are removed will compel me to vote to send this bill back to conference.

Every Senator who has spoken on this question admits or concedes that there has been great fraud practiced upon the Indians in Oklahoma, especially upon the incompetent ones there. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] has presented an array of proof, which no one has attempted to dispute. He has charged that that condition has been disclosed by these agents of the Government who have been sent out to look after these, our Indian wards.

The chairman of the committee, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], has stated that he and his colleagues on the conference committee are in sympathy with retaining these agents; that they have done the best they could—and I do not dispute that—to retain this provision in the bill, but that the House conferees refuse to recede from the House position, and therefore we are compelled to continue this condition of fraud, are compelled to do so because we are approaching the close of this session and it is therefore necessary to pass this bill with the Senate provision eliminated.

Mr. President, if these frauds are admitted, and no one has denied that they do exist, and if by retaining these agents we can in a measure at least prevent these crimes against our Indian dependents in Oklahoma, I am in favor of remaining here until we can pass a bill which will remedy these flagrant wrongs. I can not bring myself to a point where I can consent to a continuation of admitted conditions which are about as bad as it is possible for me to imagine.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. The statement of the Senator from Michigan as to what is admitted perhaps requires some qualification. Of course I am not prepared to say the fraud should go on. What I claim is that the Senate has added to what the House appropriated in certain funds, $65,000 in all, which, if the department can spare it from other uses, can be used for this purpose.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then, may I ask the Senator a question——

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask a question before the Senator from Kansas interrupts?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then, why, if the Senator from Minnesota believes there are sufficient funds——

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator from Michigan——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Why does he state that the Senate provision ought to be retained?

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator did not allow me to conclude.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I beg pardon.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes. When we get to the point whether or not the money appropriated will serve the purpose I am not prepared to say that the department can not prevent the frauds, nor am I prepared to say that the department can prevent them. Therefore, to be on the safe side, I have worked hard to get the entire amount asked for by the department.

Mr. CURTIS. I want to state that the increased appropriation is not $65,000. It is only $20,000 more than was asked for by the department.

Mr. CLAPP. I have not said we have increased it $65,000 over the estimates of the department. What I have said is that the Senate secured an increase in two items here of $65,000 more than what the House had voted, and those two items are items which could be used if the exigencies of the department permitted the use of the money for this purpose without too seriously crippling the work of the department in other directions.

Mr. MASSEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. MASSEY. Will the Senator from Minnesota state to the Senate what are the objections to making the appropriation for these special agents?

Mr. CLAPP. I do not know just how far the conferees of either House would be warranted in stating the objections which the conferees of the other House made to an item. The matter first came up in the House Committee on Indian Affairs, and there the committee took the position that it would not this year make this specific appropriation. It then came up in the House, where the effort was made to make this appropriation; and the House, after thrashing out the matter, also decided that it would not make this specific appropriation. Of the conferees, I can say that two were absolutely insistent and unequivocally against it, except that they did consent to the Senate amendment standing with reference to these two other funds upon the theory that there might be some additional money that could be used for this purpose.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, this I do know, that the Senate provided in express language for the retention of these agents. That provision has gone out. It is contended that possibly another appropriation or a portion of it can be used to retain these agents provided there is sufficient of that fund to do it. If it was simply a matter of economy that was sought, it would have been better to have reduced the other appropriation and retained the amount herein specified for this particular purpose. Then there could have been no possible ground for believing that these men would not be retained to uncover and disclose these wrongs against incompetent Indians.

Ever since I have been in Congress there has been an effort made to specify the particular objects to which an appropriation could be applied and to prohibit its use for any other object, and I have been in sympathy with that idea. That principle now quite generally maintains, and even if there was no specific law prohibiting the use of any of the general fund to employ agents in Oklahoma, and there is such a law, still under the principle to which I have referred no part of that general fund could be used to pay these agents.

I think I can see a reason for eliminating this specific appropriation. There can be no question that villainous land thieves and speculators have for years been exploiting the Indian and robbing him and his wife and children of their heritage, and the greatest check to their greed and crime have been the Federal Indian agents. The undisputed record here shows that these agents have discovered hundreds of frauds and have succeeded in having restored to these helpless Indians thousands of dollars and thousands of acres of land which had been unlawfully taken from them. I know that these criminals want no appropriation made for hiring detectives. These agents are performing a good work, and they ought to be retained, and there ought to be no doubt that they are to be retained.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Just a minute. Let me finish this. I remember a few years ago, almost at the beginning of this disturbance in the country called the insurgent movement, the then President of the United States was asking that certain agents be employed for the purpose of discovering if possible whether, under the Federal Government, wrongs were being perpetrated which might be prevented. At that time there was an argument used, viz, that the hiring of Federal agents to assist in the enforcement of law by discovering wrongdoers was an invasion of the rights of the States; and that these agents ought to be prevented from spying lest honest men might be exposed to embarrassment. I did not like those arguments then. I do not accept them now.

It is sufficient for me to know that a great wrong is being perpetrated upon helpless and defenseless people, who must rely upon us for protection if they are to be protected, in order to go as far as statutory action can go to apprehend and punish the criminal and thus prevent him from capitalizing for his profit the ignorance and helplessness of our Indian dependents.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield now.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I simply wish to add one little matter in justification of what the Senator is stating. I was informed this morning, since our debate of Saturday, that one of the persons mentioned by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] who had received a lease for almost nothing is now controlling nearly 5,000 leases of the same character; that this person is somewhat of a power in the political field in that section of the country; and you can quite easily understand why it is that he would be very much interested in having these agencies abolished entirely.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, it is the disclosure of all these undisputed things that leads me to say that I shall feel it my duty to remain here as long as it is necessary, even at the expense of a protracted session, to vote against any proposition which seeks to do away with these checks upon the shameful crimes which are shown to exist in Oklahoma to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CLAPP. I assume in view of the pendency of this conference report that the Senator from Iowa will allow the unfinished business to be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. CUMMINS. I would be glad to yield for the consideration of this report, but I have this to suggest to the Senator from Minnesota: I fear there is not a voting quorum in or about the Senate, and if his report will lead to a vote it will develop, in all probability, the absence of a quorum; then the Senate would be under the necessity of an adjournment, and thereby we would lose a good deal of valuable time. I ask the Senator from Minnesota, first, whether he believes we have a voting quorum here, and second, whether he believes the report will lead to a roll call?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Iowa will pardon the Chair, the Chair will suggest that he is informed there is a voting quorum, with a safe margin.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well, with that assurance I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, giving notice now that at the moment the report under consideration is disposed of I will ask the Senate to resume the consideration of the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CATRON. Mr. President, before the vote is taken on this proposition, I wish to state that the people of New Mexico do not desire the proposed measure to be enacted into a law as agreed upon by the conference committee in reference to the Apache Indians at the Fort Sill Reservation, Okla. They are perfectly willing that the provision which was passed by the Senate when the bill in question was passed here should go into the law, but the conferees have omitted to insist, apparently, upon what was provided for by the Senate and have acceded to the House provision.

I wish to call the attention of Members of the Senate, in addition, to what my colleague said on Saturday to the character of these Indians. We do not desire to have them turned loose in our State, as the provision in the conference report provides shall be done. We prefer that they shall stay where they are or be sent to some other place. Those Indians have been the worst band of Indians that have ever existed upon the American Continent. They have been the most warlike; they have been the most desperate, the most bloodthirsty, and murdering crew that has ever existed. They for 60 years, until they were sent to the Mount Vernon Barracks, carried on war from time to time. During the Civil War they had the ablest chief who was ever at the head of any band of Indians—Mangus Colorado. When the Civil War broke out he attempted to bring together the entire Apache Nation, and, together with them, the Navajos of New Mexico sought to drive the entire white people out of that Territory. He succeeded in joining all the Navajos to the great mass of the Apaches and drove every man from the western side of New Mexico down into the Rio Grande Valley and practically depopulated it and destroyed every particle of property existing west of the Rio Grande Valley, east of the Arizona line, and for a long distance from the east of Arizona.

There was a conference had between him and Gen. West for the purpose of reaching terms of peace, and at it he was killed by the American soldiers in a very questionable way. That only added flame to the fury of these Apaches. But some time afterwards they, not having as vigorous and able a leader as he, agreed to go to the Warm Springs Agency, which is about 60 or 70 miles west of the Rio Grande, where an agency was fixed for them. At that place, they, having been very much decimated in their wars with the troops during the Civil War, were recuperated; their young people grew up, and about 8 or 10 years thereafter they were headed by another chief who was almost equal to Mangus Colorado, a chief named Victoria, whom you have all heard of. He went on the war-path, like his predecessor, and attacked the settlements all along the line, and destroyed their property in the western side of New Mexico and the eastern side of Arizona again. He took away the live stock, often shooting and killing them, driving them off, and appropriating the same to themselves. When they had entirely destroyed all the property on the west side of the Rio Grande they went down to the Rio Grande, crossed it, and went over on the west side where the Mescalero Indians are now living, and where they then lived. He did not go there for any other purpose except to force those Indians on the war trail in aid of himself and his acts. But those Indians had been at peace with the United States and with the Mexican Government for 60 or 70 years and did not desire to go on the war trail. Fights were had between them and the Mescaleros, and several Mescaleros were killed. Some of the younger men of the Mescaleros, seeing there was an opportunity to kill and an opportunity to acquire and destroy property, and being anxious to engage in such business, abandoned the Mescalero Tribe and joined themselves to Victoria's band, who were then called the Warm Spring Indians. They went back to the west side of the river, where they encountered our troops and were driven down into Mexico; then the Mexican troops there who attacked them killed Victoria and a large number of his band and drove them back to our side of the line again, where they were compelled to surrender to the United States troops.

They were then taken away from the Warm Springs Agency to the San Carlos Agency, in Arizona, where there were 3,000 other Apache Indians. They remained there, Victoria having been killed, five or six years or more, until they had again recuperated, their young men had grown up, and then, with Geronimo at the head of them, they again went on the war-path. This time they again decimated the eastern side of Arizona and the western side of New Mexico and destroyed every ranch, they took away and destroyed practically all the live stock, they drove every man back down into the Rio Grande Valley, where the settlements were, and held the country both on the eastern side of Arizona and western New Mexico, preventing settlement and occupation by the people for years.

Geronimo, after two or three years of warfare, being followed up by United States troops, finally surrendered and was taken under control by them and sent to the Mount Vernon Barracks, in the State of Alabama, where he, with his people, then consisting of about two or three hundred, were kept for about 10 years. After this they were transferred to their present habitat at Fort Sill, where there are now about 235 of them, or something like that number, according to the report which is presented here.

When they were taken to Fort Sill the Government provided for land for their occupation. They were held there as prisoners of war, but fifty-odd thousand acres of land were added to the Fort Sill Reservation for the purpose of accommodating these Indians and for their use. When they were placed there the Government built houses for them, furnished them farming implements, gave them live stock and everything to put them on a footing of supporting themselves. The Government furnished them with farmers—experts to instruct them how to cultivate the land. Since that time I understand they have succeeded well. They have advanced and are practically self-supporting. They are producing crops and producing enough products from the soil to support themselves.

It is now proposed by this procedure to take them from that place back to New Mexico, to relieve them from the charge of the military and turn them loose at the Mescalero Indian Reservation without providing a single thing for them in the shape of houses, only taking back with them their live stock and other personal property and turning them loose upon the ground of the reservation.

That reservation is quite a large one, but it has not a great deal of agricultural land which can be irrigated. You must remember that when these Indians learned the art of agriculture at Fort Sill they did so where there was rainfall. There was no irrigation at that point. They would have to learn the art of irrigation; and an Indian, whenever he learns one thing at one place and is taken to another place, has to commence at the bottom again. He never knows anything that he has learned previously. In this case he will certainly have to commence at the bottom, because he knows nothing in the world about irrigating lands for cultivation.

But when he comes to that reservation there is no land which he can obtain for irrigation. Every foot of irrigable land, every drop of water that can be used on that reservation is now appropriated by the Mescalero Indians at that point. They will not meet Indians who are friendly to them; they will meet those who are hostile; and when they go there and undertake to take up land or appropriate water that those Indians are possessing it will bring on hostilities between the two bands. The result will be that these Indians will attempt to go on across the Rio Grande and take up their old place on the west side, and finally be turned loose on the settlers living there to commence depredating, killing, and murdering them.

If they have no land there that they can get to cultivate and no water that they can get to use for cultivation, what is the use of taking them there? When I say they have no land and no water I speak from personal knowledge. My colleague [Senator FALL] and I happen to be personally interested in the land and the water which is immediately west of this reservation. There is a single stream that rises on the reservation and flows down to the west, and there he and I have lands, as well as also do the settlers in the town of Tulerosa and other people of that vicinity.

Five or six years ago a suit was instituted on behalf of the people there in which these Indians were a party through the Government coming in voluntarily to determine the water rights in that stream and the only water rights that exist there. There was a decree entered adjudicating to each party a certain portion of the water to which they were entitled as their rights. The amount of water that was adjudicated to the Mescalero Apache Indians was just what they needed for the lands which they could cultivate and which were susceptible to irrigation. They are all that there are. Those lands are taken up by those Mescalero Indians, and these Fort Sill Indians can get none. They can do nothing in the shape of dry farming. They could never make a success. They would have to go on to that reservation and try to get land which they can cultivate in order to be able to make the least success.

If these people are sent back there, they will practically retard and bring on a state of paralyzation in the settlement and occupation of that country by the white people. It will stop the settling up; it will stop everybody from occupying a ranch or holding it. Those who are there will arm themselves and fill their houses with guns and ammunition and be ready at all times for fight. When they go out on the ranch every one of them will carry his pistol and his gun, and at the least provocation from one of these Indians there will be a row and an Indian or a white man killed. This will bring on war. It will bring on discontent.

Our State, as a Territory, has been held back long enough. We have suffered from these Indian depredations long enough. We have suffered from Indians taking away from our people and from our Territory and from our State, as a Territory, enough lands. We do not desire to have any more taken. We desire that the Indians who are there shall be compelled to take lands in allotment and the balance of the lands turned loose, so that the settlers can occupy them. To-day there are three large reservations in that State, each one of them having at least a thousand acres for every man, woman, and child of the Indians for whom they are set apart.

I do not believe that the Indian should have any more consideration paid to him in this way than is paid to the ordinary citizen who helps to build up the country and pay the taxes and make the laws and protect them and protect the people by enforcing the laws for that purpose.

We believe that these Indians ought not be sent back on us and turned loose as this proposed report suggests that they shall be.

I read from the report itself:

That immediately upon the arrival and establishment of said Indians on the said reservation, they shall be released from the status of prisoners of war and shall thereafter be and remain under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, upon equal footing in all respects with other Indians belonging on said reservation.

That is what is to be done with them. They are not to be furnished houses; they are not to be furnished lands; they are not to be furnished anything else; but they are to be dumped on that reservation and stay there as Indians without any support or without anything to help them along, which will necessarily result in bringing them into a state of warfare.

I ask that the report be not adopted and that it be sent back for further conference between the two Houses.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, it seems needless for me to add anything to what has been already so much better said by the two Senators from New Mexico.

We had all the experience we want with Geronimo's band of Apache Indians. It is a mistaken philanthropy to send them back. As the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON], who has just preceded me, has well said, you would send them back without an occupation. For the 26 years since Geronimo was captured up until now we have had no Indian troubles. We had these troubles all the time until these Indians were sent away. In that 26 years the Indian in Arizona has developed beyond our expectation. Are these Indians, remembering only the warpath; remembering only blood, trespass, murder, and rapine of the earlier days, to be sent back among Indians in Arizona who have lived in peace with the white man for 20 years, who are picking up the practices of industry, who are beginning to farm, who are working on the railroads, making a living for themselves and doing better and prospering far ahead of anything that those who are to return ever knew, or thought, or dreamed?

If you send the young ones back—26 years have elapsed—what can they do amid surroundings unknown to them? Send the old ones back and you have nothing except the unrest, trouble, and danger as has already been predicted by the Senator from New Mexico. As certain as he goes on the Arizona Indian Reservation with no land he begins at once to stir up the quiescent Apache to the same spirit that animated Geronimo and you will find nothing but trouble from it. As sure as you do it you are going to precipitate on the people more Indian troubles, of which they have already borne too much. Of all the depredations committed by Geronimo the United States Government has never paid one dollar to the people who suffered from them. Now, without any consideration before the House that I have heard of, and with no consideration before the Senate since my advent here, this proposal to return these Apaches to Arizona and New Mexico is first heard of in the conference report. It is the first time we ever heard of it. The conference report should be voted down and that clause stricken out of it, or else you are going to do for those Indians far worse than your sympathy intends.

Mr. President, if this matter were before the Senate as an original question, I have no idea it would ever pass this body when the Senate itself became aware of the trouble which it invites. I have as much sympathy for the children of these Indians as any Senator on this floor, but I have a larger and more intense sympathy with the children of the men whom they have murdered. I can look back for almost 30 years—without attempting to draw any picture of distress—there rises before me the mutilated forms of many of my best friends killed when pursuing their peaceful avocations more than a hundred miles from any Indian reservation; women and children tortured to death in mere wantonness. The men went everywhere with arms, never dreaming of driving 20 miles without a Winchester. That was the condition when Geronimo and his band were removed. And now it is proposed to invite there a body of Indians with the same spirit that Geronimo had then, bringing back to them the sense of their capture, if you please, and the degradation of their submission. It means nothing but disturbance; it means nothing but disaster; it means nothing but somebody getting killed when you return this band to Arizona.

We go now anywhere on the plains and on the Indian reservation unarmed. I for one, with this gang back there, would not go within 20 miles of an Indian reservation, nor would any other man who has been there for 30 years, for he would not know when he would meet trouble. He would not know how soon these Indians will stir up those on the reservation to deeds of murder, arson, and rapine.

When you return this band to Arizona the white man will begin to defend himself, and it may be, unfortunately, a peaceful Indian, mistaken for one of these, will be killed. You are going to reinstate those Indians by this miserably mistaken philanthropy. There is no sense in it.

This pity of yours runs in the line of absolute ignorance of the conditions there, and you are doing the Indian infinite harm. You are doing those now there at home more harm than those you would bring back. You are doing the white man greater harm by it than the Indians. I shall vote against the conference report, and I trust the Senate will send it back. It is here without authority. If there were such a thing as making a point of order against it I would raise it now against this provision as being legislation on an appropriation bill that has never had the consideration of either House. You can not make the excuse that such a bill passed here a year ago or passed in the House five years ago and then place it on an Indian appropriation bill and bring it in for the first time from the committee of conference. The provision ought to go out; it is not here by any law nor any right, and it is terrible in its consequences. I hope the Senate will vote down the conference report.

Mr. STONE. I want to ascertain from the Senator if he can state the exact number of these Apache Indians on the Fort Sill Reservation?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The report shows the number. The chairman of the committee can inform the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. They number about 250, I think.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Two hundred and fifty-odd, I think.

Mr. CLAPP. There were 257 at the time the report was made.

Mr. STONE. I understand it to be a fact that only 25 or 30 Indians who were taken there from New Mexico are alive.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Only about 30 of them were engaged with Geronimo in his raid. Many who are now there have been born since then.

Mr. STONE. My information is to the effect that of the 257 Indians on the Fort Sill Reservation all but about 30 have been born on that reservation.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Oh, no.

Mr. CATRON. There are 98 of the male Indians who are under 40 years of age.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Even though only about 30 were actively engaged in actual hostilities, the Senator from Missouri will at once see that the children of the warriors who were captured will be filled with the traditions of the gallant deeds of their fathers when they were free. You can imagine how they have been raised. In my judgment they are more dangerous than if they had seen some of the trouble. If they are taken back to New Mexico they will go back with the knowledge of the prowess of their fathers, their courage, and the number of white scalps they had carried at their belts from many a bloody field.

Mr. STONE. I am told by the Representatives from Oklahoma, who are familiar with the conditions there, or who ought to be, that the great body of those Indians are young men, women, and children who have been born since the Geronimo band was taken to the Indian Territory or to Oklahoma and confined as prisoners at Fort Sill. I am told by these gentlemen that their condition is very much to be lamented; that they are breeding in—brothers and sisters cohabiting, and that children are born from that cohabitation—that they are afflicted with diseases; that consumption is prevalent, and other fatal diseases are decimating them. If those conditions are true, something ought to be done to relieve the situation. I would not desire to send an Indian to New Mexico or to Arizona whose presence there would be regarded as a menace to the peace of either of those States and of the people residing there, but some provision ought to be made, some solution arrived at, of this problem. What does the Senator from Arizona suggest ought to be done with these Indians—hold them there continuously as prisoners and let them die as they are dying, like pigs, with cholera, or should we provide homes for them at some place?

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator from Arizona yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. STONE. I should be glad to have some idea as to what should be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CRAWFORD in the chair). Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. In a moment. I do not think the conditions the Senator from Missouri sets forth exist there to any greater extent than they do in any other reservation containing the same number of Indians, and probably in reservations much larger. The condition of which the Senator speaks exists in mountainous parts of this country among white people. It is a question of sentiment again. You do not know the question you are dealing with nor the animal you are dealing with. He is as easily taken care of at Fort Sill, in Oklahoma, as in Arizona, and much easier in fact, for many of them know no other country and are now occupying 50,000 acres of better land than he can find in either an Arizona or New Mexico reservation. If these conditions exist there as stated by the Senator from Missouri, they will continue if the Indians are removed to either of the other reservations in Arizona or New Mexico, for, as the Senator from New Mexico has well said, the home Indian will not affiliate with those who were born in Alabama or Oklahoma. There is no kinship or relation between them that either would recognize. You will find the same isolation, you will find the same difficulty, in their efforts to maintain any rights at all in Arizona as now confronts them at Fort Sill. Besides, if they were born in Oklahoma, in the name of conscience, why would you want to send them away from there?

Mr. STONE. I did not ask the Senator about sending them away.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I was asking the question not of the Senator from Missouri but of the Senate, in answer to a Senator's suggestion why you should ever think of sending them to a place where they were not born and of which they can know nothing.

Mr. STONE. I am not talking about sending them back.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Senator from Missouri was talking about their morals, then; was that the question?

Mr. STONE. What I asked was, what solution the Senator from Arizona or the Senator from New Mexico would propose for this most lamentable condition existing now at Fort Sill?

Mr. CURTIS. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. The Secretary of the Interior, it seems to me, has submitted a proposition which, if accepted by the conferees, would have been acceptable to the Senators from New Mexico and also to the Senators from Oklahoma. He submitted an estimate to Congress, as follows:

For the relief and settlement of the Apache Indians now confined as prisoners of war at Fort Sill Military Reservation, Okla., on lands to be selected for them by the Secretary of the Interior, $250,000, to be expended under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Unquestionably, that is an answer to the question, and is what the Senator from New Mexico endeavored to call to my attention.

Mr. FALL. If the Senator will yield for a statement, I will say that I am informed by the Representatives from Oklahoma that they will be glad to have these Indians down there; and the only method by which we can get them down there is by a reference of this report back to the committee.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I think it is——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I think it is due to say that, while it may be said that this agreement is not within the strict limits of the powers of a conference committee, there is very strong authority for it. Members of both Houses, of very high legal authority on these subjects, claim that the difficulty arose from having originally put in a provision on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior which had not in that form passed the Senate; but it was thought that it would at least justify the action of the conferees if they agreed on a report in the form practically, I think, as the provision passed the Senate.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him whether the provision has ever passed either House of Congress in the form in which it is now suggested by the conferees?

Mr. CLAPP. It never passed the House of Representatives; but the question in conference always is this: Are the conferees within something that one House or the other has done? If the other House had passed the provision in the form in which it appears now in the conference report, there is no question, of course, but what the action of the conferees would have been within the limits of their power. If the Senate had put it on the bill in that form it would likewise have been within the jurisdiction of the conferees, although the House might never have acted upon it. The Senate having acted, the conferees thought that would be some justification in bringing the subject before the Senate and the House.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me just a moment, I want to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that the action he refers to was taken by the one party before the Senators from New Mexico and Arizona came into the Senate?

Mr. CLAPP. I was going to explain that fact, too. If the Senator will allow me, it has always been my custom in conference, when a matter of vital importance to the Senate was reached and there was any question about it, to confer with the Senators from that State. I did not do so in this case, because the Senate having passed the bill, and it not being in my mind at the time that the Senators from the State had come into the Senate since the passage of the bill, I naturally accepted the action of the Senate as satisfactory to the Senators——

Mr. FALL. I merely wanted to put that fact in the RECORD.

Mr. CLAPP. Otherwise they certainly would have been notified.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, the courtesy and the kindly consideration for which the Senator from Minnesota is so well and properly distinguished are such that no explanation was needed from him, so far as I was concerned, as to any conduct of his in regard to the matter. I am glad, however, that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] has drawn out the fact before the Senate that whatever legislation of this kind had passed the Senate passed before our advent here, or we confidently believe it would not have been passed at all.

The solution of the question in my mind, as asked by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], is found in the suggestion of an appropriation sufficient to take care of these Indians where they are. The Indians born in Oklahoma are not acclimated in Arizona and never will be. Their condition is better where they are. Whatever sympathy you have, let it be shown in appropriations taking care of them in the only environment to which they are accustomed. I have nothing more to say.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, on Saturday I took up the consideration of the condition of these Indians, irrespective of the proposition coming from the conference committee or any other proposition pending. I took it up for the purpose of pointing out the deplorable condition of these Indians; and, notwithstanding the Senator from Minnesota, in charge of the bill, sought to lead me off to a consideration of the proposition submitted by the conferees, I resisted that temptation. I would not send these Indians back into an antagonistic atmosphere or among a people who carry in their memories the atrocities of their ancestors. If it is found convenient, I would take the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior and appropriate money enough to take care of these Indians without sending them back among the people in whose bosoms there still remains this antagonistic spirit. The antagonism is not an unreasonable one; it is one entirely in accord with human nature.

I would inquire whether or not the extra 40,000 acres of land that were added to the military reservation in order to enable them to take care of these Indians might not be dissociated from the military reservation, and the status of freemen be conferred upon these Indians, except the 30 remaining Indians who participated in the war, and let them acquire property rights upon these 40,000 acres, or such rights as are appropriate for an Indian to possess, and leave them in the climate, in the country, and in the environment where they were born and where they have grown up? I would cheerfully participate in securing such rights for these Indians in view of the fact, as suggested by the Senator, that they are not acclimated to Arizona, and their traditions perhaps are only such as come down through the camp talk of a tribe of Indians.

I did not suggest, nor would I suggest, that these Indians be sent back. The Senate bill as it went to conference provided that an investigation might be made. I would go further. We know the facts, and it might be found wise to make available the land upon which they now live. I spoke only in favor of changing the status of these Indians from prisoners of war to that of ordinary Indians and providing for them where they are, except as to 30 men in that tribe who actively participated in the war resulting in their capture. I would keep those men as prisoners of war. They should have been hanged when they were captured; they should have been dealt with at that time. Where else in the history of this or any other country have we allowed prisoners—either prisoners under the civil government or prisoners of war—to build up families, produce children, and add to their numbers as prisoners of war, giving the status of the children that of prisoners of war? No. I am not in favor of sending them back; and I said no word on Saturday that would intimate it. I spoke only as to their condition, with a view of enlightening the mind of the Senate, that it might deal with this question from an intelligent and humane standpoint.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, "Lest we forget." In addition to what my colleague has said, I will state that in the city of Prescott, Ariz., is a pioneers' home for aged and infirm pioneers. It is within the bounds of truth to say that some of the venerable pioneers who are occupants of that home bear upon their bodies scars inflicted by bullets fired from the guns of Apache Indians in the early Indian wars. In addition to this, some of those persons in the pioneers' home, and many persons outside the home, have just claims for the destruction of their property by these Apache Indians. The claims are mildewed with age, and it is a mournful commentary to reflect that they have not been paid. In this connection, in order that we may become somewhat familiar with the past history of these Indians, I will submit and ask to have read a memorial adopted by the Twelfth Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Arizona, which convened in 1883. This memorial is addressed to the Congress of the United States and depicts the character and describes the outrages of the Apache Indians.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary proceeded to read the memorial referred to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if permitted, I should like to ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the memorial be printed in the RECORD without further reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

The memorial referred to is as follows:

MEMORIAL IN REFERENCE TO INDIAN AFFAIRS.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Twelfth Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Arizona, beg leave to represent to your honorable bodies: From time immemorial the Apache Indians, an aboriginal tribe, inhabiting the country between the Rio Grande and the Gulf of California, have been a curse to civilization and a plague spot on the continent.

Since the first efforts of the Spaniards to colonize and to christianize this country, more than three centuries ago, these savages have retarded progress and paralyzed prosperity in a portion of the grandest and richest part of the globe.

After the Mexican Revolution the Apaches impinged upon that weak and struggling Government to the extent of devastating and comparatively depopulating the northwest provinces.

Since the acquisition of this country by the United States the depredations of these Bedouins of America have been continued with undiminished fury. For these Indians have been segregated vast reservations, unwieldly in size, and altogether unadapted to the purposes had in view by the Government. But such segregations, princely extents of rich mineral, agricultural, and grazing lands, have been withdrawn from development, and millions of acres of productive country rendered of no use save to serve as the lurking places of an implacable foe. The cringing solicitude with which the demands of the semibelligerent and belligerent Indians have been complied with, and the manner with which they have been supplied with necessaries, and even luxuries of life, has not inspired the Indians with gratitude, but has given them a contempt for our Government and has imbued them with the idea that their Great Father at Washington is only the timorous keeper of a great free hotel, where they are entertained gratuitously through fear of their anger. They call the reservation agents "squaws," and despise our people with more than a Mongolian insolence of race prejudice. To their brutalized minds kindness appears to be a confession of weakness and forbearance seems evidence of fear. They have so often set at defiance the attempts of our soldiery to dislodge them from their mountain fastnesses that they believe themselves well able to cope with American troops whenever a favorable time may arrive. Not only are they ignorant as to our national strength, but statements of our number as a people are derided by them as "forked-tongued," to use for once a part of the figurative twaddle with which the novelists have so completely deceived the American public as to the real characteristics of these beastly monsters. The nature of the Apache can not be comprehended by a knowledge, however intimate, of the habits of other Indians. They are the most treacherous and cruel creatures that disgrace the earth. Murder is with them a trade; torture, a fine art; outrage, mutilation, and burning at the stake a delight. His career of bloodshed has been the same for ages. The killing of some of the braves in the wars, instead of intimidating the remainder, has only fired anew their unforgiving hearts. They implicity believe that some day they will crush out American civilization, even, as tradition tells them, their ancestors obliterated the civilization of that extinct race whose ruined cities in every part of this Territory delight the antiquary and puzzle the historian. Their presence in Arizona is a continual menace to our welfare. Their present deceitful calm reassures no one; it is but "the torrent's smoothness ere it dash below." The presence here of the efficient Indian fighter, Gen. George Crook, does not remove our apprehensions. The people know, by woeful and repeated experiences, that no outbreak, however vigorously resisted, can be put down without long delay and great loss of lives and property on the part of the Government of the United States, and still worse on the part of noncombatant citizens. These particular difficulties are more the fault of our Government at Washington than the fault of our soldiers, for the special obstacles arise as much from the mountainous nature of the countries in which the Indians are allowed to remain, as from the nature of the savages. The Apache is no contemptible foe. In point of intellect, in cunning and duplicity, in warlike skill and untiring energy, in tenacity of purpose and wonderful powers of endurance, the Apache has no equals among the warlike tribes of North America. His daily thought and his nightly dream is destruction. His traditional hatred toward all the peaceful and industrious tribes is irreconcilable. There is not a grown Apache male in this Territory who does not, in his secret heart, thirst for American blood. He is the veritable Ishmaelite, whose hand is against every man, and that hand will continue to be stained with American blood as long as he knows that his record of villainy is the open sesame by which he can command the distinguished consideration which he now receives.

This treatment of the Apaches is not understood by the peaceful and industrious tribes, and they are demoralized and tempted to depart from their good behavior by the reflection that they are comparatively neglected, while the murderous fiends are so assiduously conciliated.

If an American sailor is murdered on some remote shore, we send a costly expedition to demand satisfaction and to prevent a repetition of the crime, but the depredations and murders that have, during the past 20 years, characterized the diabolism of the Apaches have been in many cases slightly considered and in more cases ignored with an indifference worthy of the stoicism of the Indian himself.

In addition to our local grievances, it is a source of international disgrace and shame that these nomadic savages should be maintained here to commit depredations upon the adjoining Republic of Mexico, thereby provoking retaliation, and to a considerable extent interfering with the welfare of the northern tier of States of our sister Republic.

The people have, in their desperation, often fitted out expeditions of hardy and experienced frontiersmen to suppress Indian insurrections, and such volunteer troops have often passed through hundreds of miles of country, rife with savage outrage, without seeing an Indian. In such way do they take advantage of the facilities for hiding afforded by mountainous country.

The only solution of the problem is the removal of the Apaches to a prairie or level country, where they can be easily guarded and forced to take up agricultural pursuits until by such a life and by communicating to them the rudiments of education succeeding generation shall have lost the instinct, as well as the power, to follow in the footsteps of their sanguinary ancestors.

Such a mode of disposing of the Indians would be as much a benefaction to them as to ourselves. It is not visiting upon them the heavy hand of retribution for their atrocities, but is the only possible way of ever making them other than a millstone around the neck of the Nation. It is the course which has brought to their present condition the Canadian and other at present semicivilized tribes of this continent.

The vacillating policy, the creation of reservations in mountainous countries, the treaties, presents, and general whangdoodleism of our Indian Department are as cruel to the savages in the ultimate result as to us. How severe the present régime is upon us is shown by the fact that with a climate superior to that of many of the most populous and prosperous portions of the East, a soil of surpassing fertility, and a wealth of mineral resources exceeding any other known to history, Arizona is to-day, save in a limited number of protected and settled localities, a virgin and undeveloped land, the present visible wealth of the Territory being a mere bagatelle as compared with its possibilities under more favorable auspices.

In the administration of Indian affairs extravagant sums of money have been drawn from the National Treasury for the ostensible purpose of improving the conditions of these Indians, but up to this time without any perceptible advantage to the intended beneficiaries.

That your memorialists believe that the extraordinary success which has distinguished the military campaigns of Gen. George Crook against the savages has been due to his employment of other savages to follow them into the mountain retreats in their own fashion of warfare. Your memorialists are aware that the tribal hostilities existing among the different clans will always prevent their confederating together against the whites, and that they will, by being placed in the same region of country with other hostiles, be the most efficient check and guard, the one upon the other.

It appears to your memorialists but just and right that a long suffering people should be relieved of this perpetual incubus by the removal of the Apache and other belligerent Indians from our boundaries into some level country, where they can be managed successfully and where the expenses will be somewhat less fabulous than at present.

Wherefore your memorialists humbly pray that measures may be taken to remove the hostile Indians from the Territory of Arizona; that the costly system of Arizona Indian reservations, with its attendant temptations to peculation, may be terminated; and that the lands included in the reservations may be relegated to the use of the citizens of the United States.

Approved February 10, 1883.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was rejected.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, if the bill goes back to conference, I desire to state that the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] was on the conference committee heretofore, but has been detained from the Senate by sickness. That left only two Senators on the committee on the part of the Senate, and I ask that the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] be added to the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] is entitled to preference by reason of his rank on the committee, and I suggest that he be selected for the place.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, a few moments ago I went to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] and asked him especially to leave me off, because I was not certain that I could be here during the conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the senior Senator from Kansas will be added to the conference committee on the part of the Senate; and the committee will consist of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN].

Mr. CLAPP. I ought to say that I recognize the seniority of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], and it was only after conference with him and at his request that I asked that the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] be designated as one of the conferees.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 7424) to amend an act approved July 20, 1912, entitled "An act to authorize Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5135) for the relief of John J. Troxell.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate (S. Con. Res. 28) instructing the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the two Houses to correct the enrolled bill (H. R. 21969) to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and goverment of the Canal Zone.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21094) to create a commission on industrial relations, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania, Mr. HENSLEY, and Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses of the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21969) to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 5135. An act for the relief of John J. Troxell;

H. R. 6722. An act for the relief of Stephen Campbell and Isaac Overdorf; and

S. J. Res. 133. Joint resolution appropriating the sum of $20,000 out of money appropriated by Senate joint resolution No. 129 for subsistence of American citizens now in Arizona fleeing from threatened danger in the Republic of Mexico.

COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21094) to create a commission on industrial relations and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BORAH. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. BORAH, Mr. PENROSE, and Mr. BANKHEAD conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to say that, while the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] is the senior minority member of the Committee on Education and Labor, from which the bill was reported, I understand he will not return for the session, and for that reason he has not been appointed upon the committee of conference.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 26321) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, to report it with an amendment, and I submit a report (No. 1052) thereon. I ask unanimous consent that we may take up the bill for immediate consideration. The committee recommends its passage amended by striking out all after line 7, on page 1 of the bill, and inserting in lieu thereof the bill as finally enacted by Congress at this session and vetoed by the President August 15, 1912, with certain modifications.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest the want of a quorum. I do not mean to delay matters, but I think we ought to have a quorum here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina makes the point of no quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Crawford	Martin, Va.	Smith, Md.
Bacon	Culberson	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Mich.
Borah	Cummins	Massey	Smoot
Bourne	Curtis	Nelson	Stone
Bristow	Dillingham	Oliver	Swanson
Bryan	Fall	Overman	Thornton
Burnham	Fletcher	Page	Tillman
Catron	Gallinger	Perkins	Townsend
Chamberlain	Heyburn	Pomerene	Warren
Chilton	Johnston, Ala.	Reed	Wetmore
Clapp	Jones	Simmons	Williams
Clarke, Ark.	Lippitt	Smith, Ariz.
Crane	McCumber	Smith, Ga.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with an amendment to strike out all after line 7, on page 1, and to insert a substitute therefor.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the bill is a very long one. The original bill, as it first came here from the House of Representatives, and as passed by the Senate, had 515 changes. These differences were composed in conference. The bill before us is the bill as it finally came from conference, and was agreed to by both Houses, and was vetoed by the President, except that we have now made two changes affecting matters because of which the President vetoed the bill.

In the one change, relating to the civil service, section 4 is left in as the Senate placed it in the bill, and as it finally passed, with an addition of a penalty clause put on by the House.

As to the other, all relating to the abolition of the Commerce Court is stricken out of the bill.

It seems to me it is unnecessary to read the bill, or to consider it, except en bloc. Therefore I should be glad if the Senate would take up the matter and either approve or disapprove of it en bloc in that form. It has already had the approval of the Senate in every particular except in relation to the Commerce Court and the civil service.

Mr. OVERMAN. I hope the suggestion of the Senator from Wyoming will be complied with.

Mr. HEYBURN. Is every other item in this bill as it was in the bill when it passed the Senate?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. I hope that will be done. This bill has been read time and again. This is the same bill that passed both Houses once. The committee offers a substitute for the House bill, to which there were 515 disagreements, and after a month, probably, we passed the bill. The committee has offered the same bill that was vetoed by the President, except the abolition of the Commerce Court. I am going to introduce this amendment as the report of the minority of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. STONE. Do I understand that in this bill, now presented, the provision abolishing the Commerce Court is left out?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is left out of the bill reported by the committee. I am going to offer an amendment to the committee's bill which will contain the original provision abolishing the Commerce Court and including the joint resolution passed by both Houses in reference to the court.

The only difference between it and the bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations is the abolition of the Commerce Court, and then there is the provision in the committee report appropriating $62,000. Of course, if the Commerce Court is abolished, it will not need the clerks and other officers and incidental expenses which amount to $62,000. So the only difference between the majority and the minority of the Committee on Appropriations is that this amendment abolishes the Commerce Court, and it does not include section five, with relation to the civil service, which has been referred to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. I must confess that I do not understand the status of this bill. I understand the bill which passed the House and Senate abolished the Commerce Court.

Mr. OVERMAN. It did.

Mr. SIMMONS. It went to conference.

Mr. OVERMAN. It did.

Mr. SIMMONS. And the President vetoed it because of the abolition of the Commerce Court and because of the civil-service tenure provision. Now, do I understand that the House has receded from the provision in the bill abolishing the Commerce Court?

Mr. OVERMAN. It has not.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is it proposed that the Senate shall recede——

Mr. OVERMAN. The bill offered by the majority of the Appropriations Committee leaves in the Commerce Court. It recedes from our position. The amendment I have offered insists upon abolishing the Commerce Court, whereas the majority report of the committee recedes from that position.

Mr. WARREN. I think I ought to make one explanation.

The House, when it abolished the court, did not abolish the five judgeships. The Senate not only abolished the court, but did away with the judgeships. The House conferees would not recede from their position, and the Senate did recede. So that in both cases the judges' positions are left intact. The report of the majority of the committee, for which we ask the indorsement of the Senate, differs from the law we passed, as stated, in those two particulars. The proffer from the minority is that we recognize one of the subjects upon which the President vetoed the measure, but that we do not recognize the other. I believe it is no secret that if the bill goes to the President containing the provision for the abolition of the Commerce Court we may expect another veto. It is just a question whether we shall conform to circumstances and so construct our bill as to secure approval, get through with the business of the session, and go home, or whether we shall go on presenting bills to be vetoed ad infinitum.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the amendment I propose does not abolish the judgeships, and leaves out section 5, which is the civil-service matter. I say, if we want to go home, the proper procedure is to adopt my amendment, because the House is going to insist upon the abolition of the Commerce Court, and the sentiment of this country is for the abolition of that court.

The House of Representatives, by a large majority, Republicans and Democrats, voted in favor of its abolition. The Senate, by a large majority, voted for the abolition of the court. Then, shall we let the President stand against both Houses of Congress and against the people of the country when we shall say again we want the Commerce Court abolished? I am in favor of sending it again to the President in that form.

I will say to the Senator we will get away quicker by passing this amendment than by letting it go to conference with 515 differences. When will we get away, then? If you adopt this amendment, in my judgment, the House will concur to it as soon as it reaches there. Let it go to the President, and if he vetoes it again we can probably pass it over his veto. If you adopt the committee's amendment, the House will insist upon its bill, and it has a right to insist. It is purely a legislative matter, and notwithstanding the President's veto we could send the bill to him again within a very short time.

I think I know the reason he vetoed the bill. It was more than on account of the Commerce Court, knowing the sentiment of the people of this country, and the circumstances surrounding the establishment of the court; that it was established by only a small majority, while by a large majority, Republicans and Democrats in the Senate and the House, it was abolished, and they will do it again, and I say he can not afford to veto it.

Mr. WARREN. I know the Senator from North Carolina wants to be fair.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator think, unless we adopt his amendment, the bill will come back and every item will be open?

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator think if we adopt the amendment I propose the bill will come back again?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does not the Senator think if we agree to it the House will concur in it?

Mr. WARREN. Whether it does or not the bill will come back, if we are correctly informed.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator from Wyoming know that we will have another veto?

Mr. WARREN. That is what Senators and others have said to me—that we shall have another veto.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is the Senator authorized to speak for the President and to announce that we will have another veto?

Mr. WARREN. I do not speak for the President, but several Senators have stated to me and the public press has announced that there would be another veto if the Commerce Court were abolished.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia will state his point of order.

Mr. BACON. It is not in order to attempt to influence votes of Senators here by any threat as to whether the President will or will not approve of a proposed piece of legislation.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator need not shake his gory locks at me [laughter], as I am not threatening anybody. I simply had the bill laid before the Senate, and the Senate can do as it pleases.

Mr. BACON. If I have shaken any locks at all, the offense would necessarily be so small that I think it ought to be excused. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARREN. I do not know whether Senators want to go home or not or whether Senators will vote as they did before, but I feel assured that each Senator will vote his own convictions and that each carries his sovereignty under his own hat, and I expect each will follow his own wishes in the matter.

Mr. JONES. I wish to ask the chairman a question in order to ascertain if I understand the situation. As I understand the bill the chairman of the committee offered, it is the bill that passed the Senate and the House and went to the President, with the exception of the items which the chairman has stated.

Mr. WARREN. With the two main exceptions and the three minor ones.

Mr. JONES. The amendment of the Senator from North Carolina contains everything that was agreed to by the Senate and the House except what he has stated.

Mr. WARREN. Unless the Senator from North Carolina has changed the copy, there is no difference whatever except in his proposition of abolishing the Commerce Court.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the only difference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina to the amendment. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is unnecessary to read it, as it is the other bill, except to abolish the Commerce Court.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the reading will be dispensed with.

The amendment to the amendment is, on page 1, to strike out all after line 7 and insert:

Prior to October 1, 1912, each executive department and other Government establishment at Washington, D. C., shall transfer to the Public Printer such machines, equipment, and materials as are used in addressing, wrapping, mailing, or otherwise dispatching publications; and each head of such executive department and other Government establishment, at Washington, D. C., shall furnish, from time to time, to the Public Printer, mailing lists, in convenient form, and changes therein, or franked slips, for use in the public distribution of publications issued by such department or establishment; and the Public Printer shall furnish copies of any publication only in accordance with the provisions of law or the instruction of the head of the department or establishment issuing the publication. The employment of all persons in the several executive departments and other Government establishments at Washington, D. C., wholly in connection with the duties herein transferred to the Public Printer, or whose services can be dispensed with or devolved upon another because of such transfer, shall cease and determine on or before the 1st day of October, 1912, and their salaries or compensation shall lapse for the remainder of the fiscal year 1913 and be covered into the Treasury. A detailed statement of all machines, equipment, and material transferred to the Government Printing Office by operation of this provision and of all employments discontinued shall be submitted to Congress at its next session by the head of each executive department and other Government establishments at Washington, D. C., in the annual estimates of appropriations: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed as applying to orders, instructions, directions, notices, or circulars of information, printed for and issued by any of the executive departments or other Government establishments, or to the distribution of public documents by Senators or Members of the House of Representatives, or to the folding rooms and documents rooms of the Senate or House of Representatives.

SEC. 9. That the Commerce Court created and established by the act entitled "An act to create a Commerce Court and to amend the act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1910, be, and the same hereby is, abolished and the jurisdiction vested in said Commerce Court by said act is hereby transferred to and vested in the several district courts of the United States.

All cases pending and undisposed of in said Commerce Court are hereby transferred to and shall be deemed pending in the district court of any of the judicial districts within which the original cause of action brought before the Interstate Commerce Commission arose, such district to be designated by the complainant; and the venue of all suits and proceedings hereafter brought to enforce, set aside, annul, or modify any order of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be in any of the judicial districts within which the original cause of action brought before the commission arose.

The venue in suits brought to enforce an order for the payment of money shall be in the district court of the judicial district in which the complainant resides. The procedure in the district court in respect to cases of which jurisdiction is conferred upon them by this act shall be the same as that heretofore prevailing in the said Commerce Court and the right of appeal from the district courts in such cases shall be the same as the right of appeal heretofore prevailing under existing law from the Commerce Court. No interlocutory injunction suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of any order made or entered by the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be issued or granted by any justice of the Supreme Court, or by any district court of the United States, or by any judge thereof, or by any circuit judge acting as district judge, unless the application for the same shall be presented to a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, or to a circuit or district judge, and shall be heard and determined by three judges, of whom at least one shall be a justice of the Supreme Court, or a circuit judge, and the other two may be either circuit or district judges, and unless a majority of said three judges shall concur in granting such application. When such application as aforesaid is presented to a justice of the Supreme Court, or to a judge, he shall immediately call to his assistance to hear and determine the application two other judges: Provided, however, That one of such three judges shall be a justice of the Supreme Court, or a circuit judge. Said application shall not be heard or determined before at least five days' notice of the hearing has been given to the Interstate Commerce Commission, to the Attorney General of the United States, and to such other persons as may be defendants in the suit: Provided, That if of opinion that irreparable loss or damage would result to the complainant unless a temporary restraining order is granted, any justice of the Supreme Court, or any circuit or district judge, may grant such temporary restraining order at any time before such hearing and determination of the application for an interlocutory injunction, but such temporary restraining order shall remain in force only until the hearing and determination of the application for an interlocutory injunction upon notice as aforesaid. The hearing upon such application for an interlocutory injunction shall be given precedence, and shall be in every way expedited and be assigned for a hearing at the earliest practicable day after the expiration of the notice hereinbefore provided for. An appeal may be taken direct to the Supreme Court of the United States from the order granting or denying, after notice and hearing, an interlocutory injunction in such case; and upon the final hearing of any suit brought to annul, enjoin, or restrain any order of said commission the same requirement as to judges and the same procedure as to appeal shall apply. The provisions of this section shall also apply to the issuing and granting of interlocutory injunctions suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of orders made by any administrative board or commission created by and acting under the statute of a State. That in such case the notice required shall be served upon the defendants in the case, and upon the attorney general of the State. All cases pending in the Commerce Court at the date of the passage of this act shall be transferred forthwith to said district courts. Each of said cases and all the records, papers, and proceedings shall be transferred to the district court wherein it might have been filed at the time it was filed in the Commerce Court if this act had then been in effect, and if it might have been filed in any one of two or more district courts it shall be transferred to that one of said district courts which may be designated by the petitioner or petitioners in said case, or, upon failure of said petitioners to act in the premises within 10 days after the passage of this act, to such one of said district courts as may be designated by the judges of the Commerce Court. The judges of the Commerce Court shall have authority, and are hereby directed, to make any and all orders and to take any other action necessary to transfer as aforesaid the cases and all the records, papers, and proceedings then pending in the Commerce Court to said district courts.

SEC. 10. That until otherwise provided by law, the regular annual estimates of appropriations for expenses of the Government of the United States shall be prepared and submitted to Congress, by those charged with the duty of such preparation and submission, only in the form and at the time now required by law, and in no other form and at no other time.

SEC. 11. That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this act are repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from North Carolina to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CLAPP. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, I voted against the abolition of the Commerce Court when the question was before the Senate heretofore for the reason that I believed the court served a most valuable public service in facilitating the disposition of cases that came from the Interstate Commerce Commission. I see no reason to change my opinion, and therefore I shall vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. I transfer it to the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LIPPITT. I have a pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], which I transfer to the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CULBERSON. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. BRIGGS] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON].

Mr. WILLIAMS (after having voted in the affirmative). Forgetting for the moment my pair, I inadvertently voted. I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I transfer the pair to the Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. SHIVELY. I wish to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. KERN].

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] is necessarily absent, and I have been requested to announce his pair with my colleague, the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the absence from the city of my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay." I wish this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that during my necessary absence I was paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. I transfer the pair to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SANDERS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]; that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON]; that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]; that the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]; that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER]; that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]; that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]; that the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN]; that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]; that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER].

So Mr. OVERMAN'S amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. The amendment covers the entire matter to be included, so that the bill may be put on its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

THE PRESIDENTIAL TERM.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I now ask the Senate to resume the consideration of the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. CLAPP. I will ask the Senator from Iowa if he would be willing to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business for the consideration of the bill relating to bills of lading?

Mr. CUMMINS. No, Mr. President; I do not feel that I can do that. I hope we can speedily reach a vote upon the joint resolution.

As it is printed there is a grammatical error in the amendment proposed by the committee which I desire to correct. On page 2, line 9, there is what is known as a divided infinitive, and I ask that the word "again" and the word "hold" be transposed, so that the line will read, "shall be eligible to hold again the office by election."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 9, in the committee amendment transpose the words "again" and "hold," so as to read:

Shall be eligible to hold again the office by election.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Constitution of the country, Article II, section 1, is as follows:

SECTION 1. The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and together with the Vice President, chosen for the same term, be elected as follows—

I need not read further at this point, because the proposed amendment concerns only the paragraph I have read.

In order, however, fully to understand its scope, I read another paragraph from Article II:

In case of the removal of the President from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve on the Vice President, and the Congress may by law provide for the case of removal, death, resignation, or inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly, until the disability be removed, or a President shall be elected.

It is known to all Senators that Congress has provided that in the event of the death, disability, removal, or resignation of both the President and the Vice President the succession shall be through the officers ordinarily known as Cabinet officers, beginning with the Secretary of State.

I now ask the Senate to listen to the reading of the proposed amendment.

The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. The term of the office of President shall be six years; and no person who has held the office by election, or discharged its powers or duties, or acted as President under the Constitution and laws made in pursuance thereof shall be eligible to hold again the office by election.

The President, together with the Vice President chosen for the same term, shall be elected as follows:

The effect of the amendment is to render ineligible for election to the office of President any person who has theretofore held the office, speaking broadly, whether by election, whether by succession as Vice President, or whether by succession under the act of Congress.

It involves a question which has been under debate for 125 years. It began in the Constitutional Convention of 1787 and has continued until the present time.

I do not intend upon this occasion to review the debate from the historical standpoint. I refrain from doing it for two reasons. First, I desire to be brief, for I can not think that at this time in the session it is appropriate to consume much time in the discussion of a question which has been well known to the American people during the whole period of our existence as a Republic.

My second reason is the more important one. I do not review the opinions of the men of former times in regard to this subject because, as much as I venerate the memories of the statesmanship of the earlier days, I do not attach great value to their opinions upon the subject. The people of the country have changed; the Government of the country has in a large measure changed; the influences surrounding a President of the United States have changed. The problems with which both the President and Congress are compelled to deal have changed. The duties and the responsibilities of a President have been marvelously transformed. We are living in a new age. I value the trained judgment of the men who now compose the Congress of the United States, taught by their observation, broadened by their experience, far more than I value the opinions of men, however wise, who lived under different conditions, and who looked at the Government from a standpoint which we can not occupy.

I would as soon consult the great patriots, the thinkers, and statesmen of the earlier days with respect to the regulation of railways, the control of corporations, the restriction of individual wealth, as I would with regard to the propriety of confining a President to one term. It is for us looking to the welfare of the people whom we serve, enlightened by all that has happened during the history of our country, to say whether we believe that the public good would be better attained through the limitation proposed in this joint resolution than through the custom which now prevails.

The President of the United States has more power than any other man in the world. I believe the statement I have just made will not be contradicted. I am sure that it can not successfully be overthrown. His general commission under the Constitution is to execute the laws made by Congress, interpreted by our courts. He appoints all the judges of the United States. Directly or indirectly he appoints, promotes, and demotes the nearly 400,000 men and women, exclusive of our military service, who are necessary to the maintenance and operation of our governmental functions. He is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy and directs the movements of both. He appoints all the chief officers of the Army and the Navy without any limitation in law. He is the representative of the people of the country in their relations with foreign nations. He is always the chief figure of the Government and generally the leader of the political party to which he belongs.

It is manifest that in the discharge of these high, comprehensive duties and in the exercise of this vast power he should have an eye single to the general good. So far, I am sure, I am in accord with every thoughtful and patriotic man. He should exercise this power uninfluenced by fear or by favor. He should be as free from the temptations of ambition as he should be free from the coercion of influences that always surround one invested with great power.

We will assume that a President of the United States when he enters upon his office has been selected by reason of his great qualities, by reason of his unusual capacity, by reason of his recognized intelligence, by reason of his known devotion to the public welfare.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. The amendment as proposed extends the terms for a period of six years. Am I right in assuming that if the amendment should be adopted at some period during the ensuing term—that is, the term after March 4—the amendment would not extend that particular term of office to six years?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator is right in so assuming.

Mr. POMERENE. That was the construction I placed upon it, but I confess that it is open to some little doubt.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think when the Senator looks at it carefully he will find there is no real doubt with regard to the construction of the joint resolution in that respect. It would not extend the term of the incumbent.

Mr. POMERENE. So it would apply only to an election after the amendment had gone into effect and not to the term of office at the time it was adopted?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator is quite right.

I have described in a very meager way the man who ought to be elected President of the United States, and I am very glad to say that the history of the American people furnishes us many instances in which such men have been elected to the high office. We will all agree, therefore, that this man, so equipped and so invested with this power, ought to be as free as possible from all the influences that would tend to divert him or withdraw him from the path of duty. He ought to be as free as men in a world like ours can be to discharge his duty, having no other thought save to faithfully and impartially execute the laws of the land and to thus advance the general interest.

He enters the office, we will assume, with these high ideals and these noble purposes. Instantly he begins to think—I use the word "instantly" in a comparative sense—of the time when he must be renominated and reelected. At once he begins to wonder whether the American people will by renominating him and reelecting him approve what he is doing or whether by refusing a renomination and a reelection they will disapprove what he has done.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask the Senator from Iowa whether he thinks the fact that the President does realize that what he does must meet with the approval of the American people or meet with their disapproval is a bad influence hanging over him? On the other hand, is it not one of the strongest influences that can exist to give him a high purpose so his conduct may meet the approval of his fellow citizens?

Mr. CUMMINS. As is usual in every debate here, I have been asked to go forward to a part of my argument which I have not yet reached. The Senator from South Dakota must have realized that I intended to say something with regard to that phase of the subject before I finish, and I will deal with it as frankly and as candidly as it is possible to do.

I answer the question of the Senator from South Dakota at once by saying that the desire for the approval of good men is a motive for upright conduct. No one can question that conclusion.

But, Mr. President, I am not prepared to say that it is the most powerful or pervasive influence that can surround an occupant of the office of President of the United States, nor that it is the influence that always commands the conduct of a President or any other official of this or any other country.

As I was remarking, it is the most natural thing in the world that the moment the President is embarked upon his office he begins to think of the future. He begins to plan for reinstallation in the same office at the end of the term which he is serving. I am not criticizing anybody for so thinking It is just as inevitable as it is to breathe. We can not divest ourselves of these natural impulses, and, therefore, the very best man in the world is susceptible to the influence I have just suggested.

He begins to make his appointments. Do you think that it is possible for any President of the United States, I care not how men may have idealized him, I care not how upright his instinctive purposes are, to keep his eye single upon the public welfare in the selection of men who are to cooperate with him in the maintenance of the Government and forget his ambitions?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. If we are to assume that the basis of correct conduct of this country is in accordance with the consensus of opinion of 90,000,000 people, then the thing which he ought to do is to keep his mind attentive upon the thoughts and views of that 90,000,000 people in order to know that he is serving the public.

Mr. CUMMINS. Undoubtedly, Mr. President. The Senator from Idaho has stated a fundamental proposition. That is the very thing that we desire to accomplish. We want him free from every disturbing interest and every diverting ambition so that he may look upon the good of these 90,000,000 people and look upon nothing else. We do not want him to be recalling to his mind the convention that comes near the end of his first term. We do not want him to be considering how he may secure delegates to that convention. We do not want him to be remembering how efficient a postmaster may be, or a marshal may be, or any other officer necessary to carry on the operations of the Government may be. We want him to remember just one thing, and that is that he has the laws of this country to execute, that they are made, or ought to be made, for the welfare and the benefit of all the people, without any undue benefit or advantage to any one of them. It is not for him to usurp the power or the jurisdiction of Congress. It is for him to take the laws which Congress has made and the Constitution which the people have made and with them protect and defend all the people of the United States without any discrimination whatsoever; and what we desire I am sure is to so change our Constitution that the President may be turned aside in the least possible degree from this high performance of his duty.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator from Iowa recognizes, I take it, that there is as a part of our condition now a force that is prone to secure policies that are adverse to the best interests of the entire public.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think that there are such influences surrounding all men.

Mr. CLAPP. If it is true that a man in that office can not keep his eye off from the advantage that comes to him from the influence of his power in the matter of again meeting the approval of the people, and it is necessary to withdraw his vision from that line of advantage to himself by making a prohibition against his again asking the approval of the people, is he not of that character, of that make-up, that without any incentive left to ask the approval of the people he is liable to yield to the influences of the other character?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; Mr. President.

Mr. CLAPP. I wish that were true.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have cherished the belief through a long life that most people are honest. I have never lost my faith in the desire of the great majority of the people of the country to render justice to their fellow men, and I have not lost my faith in the capacity of the American people to select Presidents who shall execute the laws which their Representatives in Congress pass.

I believe, however, that any scheme of Government in order to accomplish its best results must withdraw all the temptations which can be withdrawn and which are alluring to the human mind and human ambition, so that those whom we put in authority over us may exercise that authority with the least disturbing or improper influence. I do not expect that we will ever be able to organize an ideal Government. I do not expect that we will ever have an ideal President who will do everything that he does with eyes blind to everything save the public good. But I do expect that when we take away from the President of the United States the temptation constantly before him to so use his influence that it will be helpful to him in accomplishing his natural ambition of renomination and reelection he will walk a straighter course than he otherwise would. I believe that most men want nothing but the welfare of the people. I am assuming that we will be able to select such a man. I do not think one needs the lure and the glory of office in order to be well disposed toward his fellow men. I do not think that a man because he knew he could not be again elected to the office of President therefore he would not consult and be guided by the popular will and the popular good.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. If I thought that, then I would despair of my Government under any form, simply because I would believe that no man could be selected from our midst with virtue enough to exercise these powers. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. I can not say that I share with the Senator in his faith. I go further than the Senator in his faith. I believe that men can be elected, and in the main are elected, who seek to serve the public. But the point I make is that if a man does subordinate his personal interests to the public service along one line of activity, and you close that line and then practically leave open the other line, withdrawing from it any penalty, that man needs as much safeguarding one way as the other. If I felt that I had to lock my barn against a man who might take my horse from the barn, I would feel as against the same man that I should lock my house that he might not take the contents of my house.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think the Senator from Minnesota will upon reflection assert that the instance he has just given is parallel with the case we are discussing. Of course, on the same theory we ought to have no law making any act a criminal offense, because we ought to assume that every man would comport himself in accord with the high commands of the best civilization.

We had a day or two ago before us a measure which was intended to limit the rights of individuals to make contributions to political campaigns. If the individual is not to be limited, if society as a whole should not put any restrictions upon its membership, why should we take any of these precautions that are intended to promote public morality?

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will pardon me, why we should take them is because there is in society that element which requires this restraint, but what I am complaining of is that the Senator's plan, instead of being the ordinary policy of legislation to impose a penalty for an offense, shuts out one avenue to selfish interests and at the same time opens up a much more dangerous avenue.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know the Senator from Minnesota is opposed to this proposition, honestly opposed to it, and he and I do not weigh these influences in the same scale.

Mr. President, I do not intend, of course, to call upon history to prove what I have just stated. I have neither the inclination to do it, nor have I, as I look at it, the time to do it; but if the Senator from Minnesota, looking back over a quarter of a century, or any other period that he may select from the history of his country, sees in these influences as they now are less injury than though they were removed, and at the same time there were removed or restricted the right of the people to reselect a man to this high office, then he is justified in reaching the conclusion that he has announced. I, for one, do not read history in that way.

I believe that there are so many instances in the past in which the great power which I have so inadequately described has been used for the purpose of securing the favor that was necessary to renomination and reelection, and I have seen so many instances when I thought that public officials had been turned aside from the path of duty which they themselves would have followed had they not been surrounded by others of great influence who had special interests to serve, that, for one, I would rather trust the man with a desire to win public approval without a reelection than to trust him, good as he may be according to the standards of human nature, subject to the influences that I have attempted to describe.

I do not agree that it is necessary, in order that a man shall desire above all other things the esteem of his fellow men, that he must attach that esteem to an office, or that he desires it only as it is to be worked out through the machinery and the manipulations of political organizations in giving him a further tenure in public life. I think it is the commonest and probably the very best attribute of human character that we do desire to stand well with those who are about us, and that we do desire to stand well with them whether we are in office or whether we are out of office. It is the only compensation of public life; it is the only real compensation of any life to win the good will and hold the good will of our fellow men.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. I simply desire to say that at the proper time, far less adequately than the Senator from Iowa, I shall use that as one of the arguments why, in my judgment, this joint resolution ought not to be adopted. One of the fundamental thoughts with me in this connection is the very thought that the Senator has emphasized so strongly and clearly.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if I believed that a President of the United States, elected to that great office without any hope of renomination, would fall more easily under vicious influences, and could be persuaded more easily into wrong paths, than though there were before him the hope of a renomination and reelection, I would not be for this joint resolution. It depends, therefore, wholly upon our estimate of the motives which keep men most truly to the faithful performance of a public duty. I think that, upon the whole, will be accomplished more certainly and more perfectly with a limitation to a single term than if the incumbent of the office knew that he could be renominated and reelected, and knew further that he must be renominated and reelected, or else suffer the inference of a public censure.

One more suggestion, Mr. President, and then I shall have finished.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. If I understand the Senator's position correctly—and it appeals to me as being a splendid position—it is that we must assume generally that men intend to be honest; and, assuming that we will elect honest men to the Presidency, it needs no inducement of a second term to keep them honest. On the other hand, there may be a temptation in the shape of a second term for them to step aside from the straight path of integrity.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from North Dakota has stated my position very accurately.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the Senator be correct in his position, then this amendment would seem to me to be wholly unnecessary. I do not believe that you can assume that a man is going to be honest without making this proposed amendment wholly unnecessary. But he may be honest and still feel responsive to the views and wishes of a majority of his countrymen. No man should regard alone public opinion; but it is hurtful to no man in making up his conclusion to know what a vast body of intelligent people are thinking.

Mr. CUMMINS. But, Mr. President, answering the Senator from Idaho, this is not an angelic world. There is a good deal of strife, a great deal of struggle. There is a vast difference of opinion upon nearly every subject. It is the most natural thing in the world when a President is opposed for him to use all the instruments at his hand to make his fight and to secure that indorsement, which, in the eyes of the world, he must have or stand repudiated among the people. However, Mr. President, I will not go further into that phase of it. Possibly at a later time I may again take it up; but I find myself opposed by, if I may say so, my Progressive friends, or most of them, upon this proposition. I recognize that; and I now come to them upon their own ground. I suppose that we are all—I am speaking now mainly to the Progressives, because I know I can not assert it of all my Republican friends—in favor of the initiative. We believe that the people ought to have a right to say what their Constitution shall be. I have always believed that our forefathers, not understanding the future temper and spirit of the American people, placed too many obstacles in their path in the way of amending their fundamental law. I myself believe in this joint resolution. I believe it will be better for the people if the President could serve but one term in that office; but even if I did not believe it, it would be my duty to vote for the joint resolution, and it is the duty of every man who has any respect for the rights of the people to vote for it, in order that they may have an opportunity to say whether they want to limit their Chief Executive to a single term.

I lay down as a proposition, concerning which there can not be reasonable dispute, that whenever a respectable proportion of the people of this country demand an opportunity to determine whether a given change shall be made in their Constitution, it is our bounden duty to give them that opportunity. I know that our forefathers held a different view with respect to that subject; I know that they intended to make it almost impossible to amend the Constitution of the United States. I have never sympathized with that view. I have always in my relation to these questions, when I believed that there was a sufficient number of the people who were to be affected by the Constitution, who desired an opportunity to submit the question to a vote, that they should have the opportunity to vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I quite agree with the Senator on that proposition, but I was wondering if there has been any manifestation on the part of the people that they want to amend their Constitution in that particular.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am coming to that, Mr. President. There has been a constant agitation upon this subject for 50 years or more. I said it began 125 years ago, and it did; but there has been a constantly recurring demand throughout the country for this limitation during all the time that I have known anything about public life; and it has been but a few days since the Democratic Party—and it comprises about half the people of the United States, and it may happen that in the coming November it may comprise more; at any rate, it comprises a very large and a very respectable element of American life—and that party in the most solemn way possible pledged itself to this principle, representing, as I assume, its membership, and representing, as I know, a vast number of an opposing political faith.

We can not shield ourselves here behind the belief that the people do not want to vote upon this proposition. They do want to vote upon it; and the man who stands here refusing to give them an opportunity to say for themselves what their Constitution shall be and whether they do want to put upon this office the limitation indicated in the amendment, as it seems to me, repudiates the fundamental principle which has attained in the last few years a strong place in the hearts of the people.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CLAPP. In the first place, while the Democratic Party embraces a large proportion of the people of this country, the convention of that party, I think, was limited to a thousand or twelve hundred delegates. I must take issue with the Senator as to the demand for this proposed amendment to the Constitution. I know the only time I ever discussed it in my State my opposition to it met with the most decided approval from a vast audience of people. While it is true the subject has been talked of, I do not believe the people are asking for it.

Mr. CUMMINS. It will do no harm to let them say that.

Mr. CLAPP. I was just going to say that I believe in leaving these things to the people and let them come from the people. Fortunately, we have in our organic law a means by which, instead of men initiating a movement of this kind in Congress, the people, if they desire a change in the Constitution, have it in their power to bring it about. Instead of being placed in a position of opposition to the things for which I stand, one of my objections to this very measure is, if there is a demand for it, I believe that it should come from the people, and the people have the means, through their State legislatures, of bringing it about.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I know the Senator from Minnesota does not intend that what he has just said shall have the construction that I put upon it, and that I properly put upon it; but nevertheless, if he will remember, he will know that what he has just declared has been the shield behind which the Senate of the United States has for 50 years attempted to prevent certain changes in the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CLAPP. That has been true; and amid all the problems that confront us the one thing which, in my humble opinion, is a matter of comfort and cheer is that that condition is changing, and that now the people themselves are equipping themselves with instrumentalities and the sentiment for bringing about their own desires in legislation.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have never been afraid of the people. It does not require a great volume of petitions or the action of many legislatures to convince me that a subject which has been one of debate and difference over so long a period of years ought to be settled by the voice of the men and women who are to be affected by it. I can not understand this reluctance to submit the question to the final arbitration of the people of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not have the pleasure of listening to all the Senator has had to say on this subject, but I rather deprecate the tendency that has grown up in this body whenever a question is up for consideration to say that "the people demand it." It is sometimes a flippant way of disposing of very important questions. It is not an easy matter offhand to determine whether the people demand things or not. I do not know whether the people have demanded some things that have been done of late years, but I am pretty sure that if they have demanded some things that have been done, they will demand that they shall be undone after a little while. That is my individual judgment.

Now, I hope—and I presume the Senator from Iowa does not need any admonition from me—that this important question that is before the Senate to-day will be discussed on its merits. I am for it. I have believed ever since I began seriously to think about political matters that it would be better if the President had one term of six years. I believe it would remove from our governmental system evils which we have all felt and about which a good many of us have complained. I think that the people ought to have an opportunity, through the legislatures, to express their view and to determine, each for itself, whether or not it is wise to make this change in our fundamental law.

But I rose particularly to say to the Senator that I will take pleasure in voting for this proposed amendment to the Constitution; and I should be glad, indeed, if it could be discussed without calling into the discussion some extraneous matters about which, perhaps, the Senator from Iowa and I disagree and about which, perhaps, there is a very broad difference of opinion in this body.

I thank the Senator for giving me the privilege of saying that much.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have not called into the debate any extraneous matter. During some time I presented my views in regard to the reasons which influenced me and brought me to the conclusion that this country will be more wisely governed if the President is limited to a single term. I was then proceeding to the further proposition that, if there was a sufficient proportion, or a fairly reasonable proportion, of the people of this country who believe that this amendment ought to be submitted for a vote, then we ought to submit it, even though we may not have reached finally and definitely the opinion that it would be wise in its operation. I do believe that, Mr. President, profoundly.

So far as I am concerned, I am in favor of an initiative which would permit a fair proportion of the voters of the United States to send their desires to Congress, and that, upon becoming advised of those desires, it should be our constitutional duty to submit amendments which they believe would better their condition. I for one——

Mr. CLAPP. I favor that proposition.

Mr. CUMMINS. I for one have never believed that the legislature of a State or the Congress of the United States ought to be interposed between the people and their desire to change their Constitution. The legislatures do not make the State constitutions; the Congress of the United States did not make our National Constitution and has not made any amendments to our Constitution. That power is reserved to the people themselves or to their legislatures in the various States, and there ought to be some easier and more effective way in which those who desire an opportunity to vote upon an amendment to the Constitution may do so.

It is true that the late convention in Chicago—I mean the latest convention in Chicago—did not specifically declare for this limitation; but it did specifically declare that the people ought to have a chance to amend their Constitution whenever there was a fair expression of opinion of their wish to do so.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, no one differs from the Senator on that.

Mr. CUMMINS. And if the Senator from Minnesota believes that the number of voters in this country who desire to amend their Constitution in the way provided by this resolution is so insignificant that it ought not to be heeded, then his position is well taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I very much dislike to interrupt the Senator from Iowa, for I am much interested in what he is talking about; but a moment ago he made the assertion that the latest Chicago convention had declared in favor of making it easier for the people to amend the Constitution. I may be wrong in my recollection, but my recollection is that it declared in favor of making it easy for the people to override the Constitution. I do not remember anything in that platform about amending the Constitution. If the Senator has a copy of the platform I should like a reference to it. It seems to me that it rather declared that the people ought to interpret their fundamental law by plebescites from time to time, and that when there was a difference between the legislative body and the judicial body it ought to be submitted to a popular election to determine which was right. If I am wrong in my recollection, I should like to have it corrected.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The convention which met at Chicago a few days ago, to which I suppose reference is made, did declare in specific terms for a more easy way of amending the Constitution. That was separate and aside, I think, from the principle to which the Senator has referred; but the declaration is in the platform, as the Senator from Iowa has stated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If that be true—and I accept the statement of the Senator from Idaho, because he was one of the ex dei machina of the occasion—then I wish to express my pleasure. It has seemed to me for a long time that our forefathers had made the amendment of the Constitution somewhat more difficult than it needed to be. I do not think it ought to be easy, but I think it ought not to be difficult to the point of impracticability, at any rate.

Now, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa another question. He has said something about not having Congress propose amendments to the Constitution. Whom would he suggest to propose such amendments? Would he let anybody who wanted to do so propose amendments?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it is an academic inquiry made by the Senator from Mississippi——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the Senator's pardon; it is entirely practical, and not academic.

Mr. CUMMINS. Because it is not related to the proposition under consideration; but I have no reluctance about answering. I think that if half the States in the Union, or even less than half, a respectably fair proportion of the States in the Union, were to unite on a proposed amendment to the Constitution and transmit it to Congress, that then it ought to be submitted; and I think, although I do not regard this as so practicable, that if a fair proportion of the voters individually were to sign a petition to Congress and present a constitutional amendment, it ought to be our constitutional duty to submit it without any regard to our own opinion of its merits.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will pardon me just a moment longer, because this is a matter that I have had at heart for a long while, to some extent. Although I know it is a little off from the main trunk of the Senator's argument, I think the fundamental law of the country, its Consitution, ought not to be capable of being changed too readily, because it would lose its sacredness in the minds of the people. It is not, after all, courts that maintain fundamental law and constitutional restrictions upon the passions of the majority; it is public sentiment. In the long run, courts, with increased and increasing unpopularity, would break down and cease to be bulwarks for the defense of the rights of the minority against the invasions of the majority, and that is the only raison d'etre for a constitution at all. I have sometimes thought that it ought to be easier, and I wish to interject this thought into the debate in order that it may be the cause of further thought to others. It has occurred to me that if a majority of the House of Representatives, constituting a majority in representation of both the people and of the States, followed by a majority of the Senate, constituting a majority of the States, were permitted to submit or to propose constitutional amendments, and then if the proposal were ratified by a vote in the country at large, such that the vote should constitute not only a majority of the people, but a majority of the States, so as to preserve the rights of the smaller States under our system, there would be sufficient difficulty about the operation to preserve the sanctity and sacredness and constitutional fundamental obligations and at the same time enable the Government to adapt itself to changing conditions.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not differ very widely with the Senator from Mississippi. I do not advocate the submission of amendments to our Constitution without the gravest deliberation. My suggestion was simply to begin the submission by an initiatory petition or by the action of a majority or a fair proportion of the States. There ought to be given, of course, the fullest time for discussion and thought in order that the people shall not hastily and without full knowledge or information express their opinion.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment. But the Senator from Mississippi and I agree in one thing, anyhow, and that is that the mode prescribed by our forefathers is so restricted that it practically forbids amendments unless there be unanimity among the people and among the Members of Congress.

I now yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in reference to the proposition of making it more easy to amend the Constitution and in reference to what the Progressive Party declared at Chicago, I desire to read a paragraph:

> The Progressive Party, believing that a free people should have the power from time to time to amend their fundamental law so as to adapt it progressively to the changing needs of the people, pledges itself to provide a more easy and expeditious method of amending the Federal Constitution.

I desire also, if I may, to insert in the RECORD a joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin on the 5th day of August, covering the same subject matter.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 131) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution:

"ART. XVIII. The Congress, whenever a majority of both Houses shall deem it necessary, or on application of 10 States by resolution adopted in each by the legislature thereof, or by a majority of the electors voting thereon, shall propose amendments to this Constitution to be submitted in each of the several States to the electors qualified to vote for the election of Representatives, and the vote shall be taken at the next ensuing election of Representatives in such manner as the Congress prescribes, and if in a majority of the States a majority of the electors voting approve the proposed amendments and if a majority of all the electors voting also approve the proposed amendments, they shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of this Constitution."

Mr. CUMMINS. I feel very much obliged to the Senator from Idaho for corroborating my recollection of the of the platform recently adopted at Chicago. I am not in harmony with all the parts of that platform, but I am in entire harmony with that part of it which has just been read, and I believe thoroughly in the general direction which is proposed in the resolution referred to by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does he or does he not think that any proposition to make the amendment of the Constitution easier is useless if it be accompanied by another proposition, to enable a majority in an election at any time to act as official interpreters of fundamental law? What is the need of making an amendment easier when all you have to do is to get a majority vote in favor of what you and the majority please, regardless of judicial decisions if they have been contra?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, as is very well known, I am not an advocate of the proposed review of judicial decisions in a popular election. I think it is fundamentally wrong and must result in disaster whenever it is attempted among a people like ours; but that has nothing whatever to do with the question in hand. We have drifted away from the matter, and I bring Senators now back to the last proposition which I made, and I am addressing it directly to those who have agreed with me here respecting public policies. I am simply asking them if they intend to deprive the people of this country of the opportunity to say for themselves whether they want the tenure of a President limited to a single term.

It is utterly impossible, Mr. President, for any man to question the generality of the sentiment throughout the country. I do not mean, now, its universality. I know there is great difference of opinion with regard to this matter, but no man can deny that a very large number of voters of the United States want the term of a President limited to a single term. There may not be a majority of them, but there are enough of them to fairly ask the Congress of the United States that we give them the chance to decide for themselves upon this important matter.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If a resolution were pending here now proposing an amendment to the Constitution by which the decisions of our Supreme Court could be reviewed by a popular vote—and that is a question that is agitated quite a little just now—would the Senator feel obliged to give such a resolution his support, when his convictions are very strongly against it?

Mr. CUMMINS. I answer that question in this way: For years and years I believed in the sanctity and sacredness of legislative assemblies. I believed there ought to be no constitutional amendment submitted under any circumstances unless that amendment commanded the approval of the required number of the legislative branch of the Government. I have been converted with regard to that subject, and the very men who are standing here opposing this resolution are the men who have converted me. I have come to the conclusion that the initiative is right, and that when a fair proportion of the voters of a State or country ask that a proper question be submitted to them, then it is my duty to submit it and take the consequences, whatever they may be. Therefore I answer the question of the Senator from South Dakota by saying that whenever you bring to me evidence that one-half of the number of voters of this country believe in the proposal to review judicial decisions at a popular election, who are in favor of limiting a President to a single term, I will vote to submit an amendment of that character to the voters of the United States. I am not afraid, as I said before, of the voters of the country. I will trust them with a subject upon which I hold a contrary view just as completely as I would trust them with a subject upon which I was in harmony with them. I do not change my attitude with regard to the rights of the people because they may be for the moment or permanently opposed to my own opinion.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. BRISTOW. It seems to me that it narrows down, then, to a question of opinion on the part of each individual Senator as to how many people he thinks are in favor of the submission of a certain amendment which might be proposed to the Constitution. Personally I believe that more people in the United States would prefer the Constitution so amended as to recall Federal judges than want it amended as suggested by the Senator from Iowa. I think a great many more people in the country would prefer an amendment of that kind to the one that is now pending. Would the Senator vote for such an amendment if one were proposed?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Kansas would secure an answer to that question if he would introduce a resolution of that character, and then he will discover that in many States a petition signed by 10 per cent—some 8 per cent—of the voters will require the submission of any law without the intervention of a member of a legislature. I think that proportion is too low, but would any of my brother Senators living in a State in which that was the law presume to question the propriety of submitting the law? Now, here we have no proportion. There is no such thing in our Constitution. Therefore we must judge as best we can whether there are enough people in the country who want the chance to vote upon this question to warrant us in submitting it for their determination.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. For one, I cheerfully concede that should there appear to be a positive, widespread demand among the people of the United States for the submission of such a resolution, and an opportunity to vote upon it, I would not feel, even though not in sympathy with it, that I should arbitrarily interpose my vote as a Member of this Senate against affording to the people such an opportunity; but does the Senator go so far as to contend that in any event the individual judgment of a Senator, as to the propriety of such a resolution, should weigh for nothing in determining whether or not it should be submitted, and in the absence of any convincing proof, at least to him, that there is a firm, widespread, well-fixed demand for an opportunity to vote upon such a resolution?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not say, Mr. President, that the individual opinion of a Senator ought not to have its proper weight. There is no hard and fast rule that can be laid down for the Government of such a case as this.

I am sure that if I thought the demand was general and widespread that I could then subordinate my own opinion freely. If I thought, however, it was limited and uncertain, then I would give my opinion much greater weight, and so I think the Senator from South Dakota and I do not differ very much.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I agree with the Senator on that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Now, I ask the Senator from South Dakota this question. I do not know whether he was here during the early part of my remarks——

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think I have heard most of them.

Mr. CUMMINS. I assume he agrees that the Democratic Party represents a reasonably large proportion of our people, and I assume he agrees that the Democratic Party is composed of people whose views are entitled to fair consideration. Now, let me read to him a recent declaration of that party, which represents, I suppose, about one-half of all the voters in the United States:

> We favor a single presidential term, and to that end urge the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution making the President of the United States ineligible for reelection, and we pledge the candidate of this convention to this principle.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In regard to the declaration just read, I wish to say this to the Senator, that there has been nothing in my personal observation or experience during almost a generation, now, which leads me to believe that there is any widespread, well-founded demand for this proposed change in the Constitution. I never have, although of course such may have occurred, observed any demand for it in the discussions in this Senate until this joint resolution was introduced a few weeks ago. During the three years I have been here we have discussed nearly every possible phase of amending and changing the organic law, but not this. I have never seen a petition for any such change anywhere. I have never received a letter from a single constituent suggesting such a change, and I am constrained to believe, Mr. President, that the 1,000 delegates representing Democracy had in their minds the stalking of a great vote throughout the United States just now, and it was that apprehension that gave birth to this resolution and gives it rather undue prominence just now.

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course the last hypothesis of the Senator from South Dakota is impossible. It is not founded upon the history of this resolution.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, as the author of this resolution, which is now before the Senate, I have had some occasion to know something about what public sentiment is on this question. I am somewhat astonished that the Senator from South Dakota should not have heard from anyone that he was in favor of this change in the Constitution. I think I can say with perfect assurance that there is a very widespread desire on the part of the people of this country that this amendment should be adopted, and I say that from communications I have had from different parts of the country, from all classes of people, who upon seeing that such a resolution had been offered here have written to me on the subject expressing their views with respect to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I said a moment ago, we are getting rather in the habit in our discussions of announcing that the people want certain things. I do not think there is any very tumultuous demand for this change in the Constitution. I unreservedly announced in the time the Senator so generously awarded me that I was for it, but I do not know of any other citizen in my State who is for it. I have not heard from a single constituent of mine in favor of it; it may be that when, as it probably will be, it is agitated in conservative New England, the people will line up for it, but I committed myself to it as one citizen of my State, not knowing that there is another citizen in the State who desires it.

If the Senator will permit me just one word further, I am going to repeat what I said a moment ago. Perhaps it is educational and illuminating in its way that extraneous matters are being brought into this discussion.

We are not going to amend the Constitution by a referendum vote. We can not do it. We can only amend it in the old-fashioned way, and that is what this resolution proposes to do, and I think we ought to focus our minds upon that fact, that if this is brought about the probabilities are that it will be brought about in the same way that other amendments have been made to the Constitution in the history of our Government.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I agree that it has become the habit of the Senate to drift away from the very point at issue. Sometimes I have deplored the habit; sometimes I have helped to fasten it upon the Senate. I intend now, however, to offend no longer against what I recognize as a proper rule, and I shall endeavor not only to adhere to the very question itself, but to bring my observations to a speedy end.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. What I propose to say is not specially pertinent to the exact question before the Senate, but when the Senator from South Dakota——

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. STONE. Just a moment. When the Senator from South Dakota referred to that clause in the Baltimore platform—really I believe it was the Senator from Iowa who read from it——

Mr. CUMMINS. I read it, Mr. President, as indicating that there was a demand in this country for this amendment.

Mr. STONE. So I understood; as contributing a little bit to the literature or history of this movement for one term for President I call attention to this fact, for it is a fact, that in 1896, when Mr. Bryan was made the candidate of the Democratic Party, in his letter of acceptance, he stated that if elected he would serve but that one term. I know he did me the honor at that time of reading his letter to me before he gave it out, and I rather protested against the insertion of that clause, thinking that he was unnecessarily depriving the country of four years more of useful service. As it turned out, of course, it did not make any particular difference. But it will be recalled that Mr. Bryan is the originator in these latter years of this movement for a one term and did it under exceptional circumstances.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield for a question only.

Mr. PAGE. I thought the Senator from Iowa had resumed his seat or I would not have risen. The Chair recognized the Senator from Missouri, and the Senator from Missouri said he would yield to me in a moment, and I rose for the purpose of asking unanimous consent.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. There is a very severe storm raging outside. We over here are unable to hear what is being said on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. BORAH. Stop the storm.

Mr. ASHURST. Senators are either not talking loud enough or are casting some reflections on the Democratic Party.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair finds it difficult to control the storm inside and can not, of course, control the storm outside.

Mr. BORAH. I want to say just a word, not in criticism of the Democratic Party, but in the way of a compliment to it. It ought to be borne in mind that while the Democratic platform covered this subject, the Democratic candidate's letter or speech of acceptance did not cover it, and that while the platform spoke, the silence of the candidate would seem to indicate that there had been at least a yielding to better judgment after the platform was adopted.

I also wish in this connection to call attention to some language of the candidate on the Democratic ticket upon this subject, not in the way of criticism, but because I particularly approve of this language, if the Senator will yield while I read a paragraph.

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I read:

> Administration is something that men must learn, not something to skill in which they are born. Americans take to business of all kinds more naturally than any other nation ever did, and the executive duties of government constitute just an exalted kind of business; but even Americans are not Presidents in their cradles. One can not have too much preparatory training and experience who is to fill so high a magistracy. It is difficult to perceive, therefore, upon what safe ground of reason are built the opinions of those persons who regard short terms of service as sacredly and peculiarly republican in principle. If republicanism is founded upon good sense, nothing so far removed from good sense can be part and parcel of it. Efficiency is the only just foundation for confidence in a public officer, under republican institutions no less than under monarchs; and short terms which cut off the efficient as surely and inexorably as the inefficient are quite as repugnant to republican as to monarchical rules of wisdom. Unhappily, however, this is not American doctrine. A President is dismissed almost as soon as he has learned the duties of his office, and a man who has served a dozen terms in Congress is a curiosity.

Furthermore, the distinguished writer says:

> If there be one principle clearer than another, it is this: That in any business, whether of government or of mere merchandising, somebody must be trusted, in order that when things go wrong it may be quite plain who should be punished. In order to drive trade at the speed and with the success you desire, you must confide without suspicion in your chief clerk, giving him the power to ruin you, because you thereby furnish him with a motive for serving you. His reputation, his own honor or disgrace, all his own commercial prospects, hang upon your success. And human nature is much the same in government as in the dry-goods trade. Power and strict accountability for its use are the essential constituents of good government.

That is a wise statement.

> A sense of highest responsibility, a dignifying and elevating sense of being trusted, together with a consciousness of being in an official station so conspicuous that no faithful discharge of duty can go unacknowledged and unrewarded, and no breach of trust undiscovered and unpunished—these are the influences, the only influences, which foster practical, energetic, and trustworthy statesmanship.

It seems to me that there is an apparent reason why the distinguished leader of the Democratic Party did not refer to this in his speech of acceptance.

Mr. STONE. I should like to say to the Senator——

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield, and to whom?

Mr. STONE. I simply want to congratulate the Senator from Idaho on his habit of carrying around with him the works of Dr. Wilson.

Mr. BORAH. I make it a point to gather wisdom from all sources.

Mr. CUMMINS. In the quest for wisdom the Senator from Idaho has gone far afield in this instance, in my opinion.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me a question?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. How does the Senator from Iowa account for the distrust of the common people that is implied in this opposition to his proposed constitutional amendment?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have been vainly inquiring about that for the last hour. We are accustomed to hear their intelligence and their patriotism vaunted, and I am vaunting it still. What I want is to try to refer to it and ascertain whether the voters of this country want their Presidents to be limited to one term, as proposed by this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], who has frequently addressed the Chair for the purpose?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to ask the Senator from Idaho a question. I did not understand from what authority he was reading.

Mr. BORAH. I was reading from Dr. Woodrow Wilson's work on Congressional Government.

Mr. CHILTON. I merely wished to suggest that I apprehend the book from which he was reading was written possibly before the present administration of the Government began.

Mr. BORAH. Possibly so.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not enter upon that controversy.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. CULBERSON. If the Senator will yield a moment, I desire to remind the Senator from Idaho that while Gov. Wilson did not discuss this plank of the platform in his speech of acceptance, he said distinctly the next day that he indorsed the platform and he would take up the other matters in due time.

Mr. BORAH. I believe that the reflections of the governor as expressed here in this book are worthy of consideration. He may yield to his platform, but I doubt if it followed his judgment upon that.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask the Senator from Idaho whether, in the letter of this distinguished personage or in his views in regard to social, economic, and industrial reforms, he has not put forth in his time a great many suggestions with regard to the rights of man and the way to work them out in government, and I should like to know whether he rests as confidently upon other prominent expressions as he does upon the expression he has just read?

Mr. BORAH. I am not familiar with all of Gov. Wilson's views, but I will say that outside of a few lines in his speech of acceptance I could find no fault with his speech of acceptance. I could agree to it, outside of his statement of a tariff for revenue only, from beginning to end, so far as I now recall it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not refer to his speech of acceptance. I referred to his former writings. I am not disparaging them at all, but I do not believe the Senator from Idaho will bring them forward to support his views upon many of these subjects.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, may I be allowed to finish?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would not keep the Senator from doing that, but I have been very much tempted to ask just one question, if the Senator will permit me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa if it were thought by the Senator from Idaho that the present candidate of the Democratic Party had perhaps overwritten himself in some respects and written things at one time which later on he would not have rewritten, whether he has fallen much behind the measure of recklessness of expression in public writing that has actuated the literary career of the gentleman who presided spiritually as its hero over the destinies of the latest convention at Chicago. I should like to ask him if he ever read any of the opinions of dead Presidents that were written by the ex-President. I should like to know if the Senator from Iowa thinks the Senator from Idaho thinks that Woodrow Wilson has ever written any more carelessly than Theodore Roosevelt?

Mr. CUMMINS. I would have to refer that to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to say, first, I did not read the excerpt as assuming that Dr. Wilson had changed his mind at all, and certainly I did not read it assuming that he was writing recklessly, because I agree with what he says. I read it in support of the position which I take on this matter, and for the further reason that, in my judgment, when he did not touch upon the subject in his letter or speech of acceptance in all probability he was not thoroughly in harmony with it, that he did not write recklessly nor speak recklessly.

Now, so far as a comparison between the two gentlemen is concerned, comparisons are sometimes odious; but if the Colonel has written some things which he ought not to have written, he has written a vast amount of material which it is altogether to the benefit of the country that he did write.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And so with Gov. Wilson.

Mr. BORAH. I did not take any other view, and I trust the Senator from Mississippi will not become oversensitive when I quote the governor of New Jersey upon a question on which I agree with him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The other man—Gov. Wilson—has never written a personally unkind or unjust thing. He never accused Thomas Jefferson of cowardice. He never accused James K. Polk of being unknown. He never accused Tyler of being dishonest, and he never accused the balance of that long line of Presidents of being everything else disreputable.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator ought not to touch too heavily upon the subject of what Col. Roosevelt said about Thomas Jefferson. Gov. Wilson has said about Thomas Jefferson practically the same thing Col. Roosevelt said about him. He said he was a negative character touching a philosophy in which he did not believe because it was popular. That is the substance of his statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Ah, that is the substance put upon it by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I can read it:

> The difference between Mr. Jefferson and Gen. Jackson was not a difference of moral quality so much as a difference in social stock and breeding. Mr. Jefferson, an aristocrat, and yet a philosophical radical, deliberately practiced the arts of the politician and exhibited oftentimes the sort of insincerity which subtle natures yield to without loss of essential integrity.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is not what Roosevelt said. He referred to him in so many terms as being timid and as being effeminate and as being various other things. In fact, I have long ago offered a chromo, and I will give it to the Senator from Idaho willingly, and pay $2.50 for it——

Mr. BORAH. I hope the Senator's picture will accompany it. That will make it a memento worth preserving.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And I will present him a chromo for any quotation from the ex-President, Mr. Roosevelt, regarding any President who ever sat in the White House, except Abraham Lincoln and himself, that was complimentary at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I intend very quickly to leave the field to my distinguished friend from Idaho and my friend from Mississippi. I regret that we have drifted so far from the question under consideration, but possibly the voyage may not be barren of result.

I believe in the resolution that has been reported by the Judiciary Committee. I believe that a President without the allurement of a second term, without the temptation to exercise the power with which he is invested for any other purpose save the welfare of the people, will render a higher and better and more efficient service than one who is surrounded with all the influences that the development of this time can create and which tend to turn him aside from the path of his duty.

I believe that there is a sufficient demand on the part of the people of this country to warrant the submission of this amendment for their consideration, for their action, and I earnestly hope that the resolution will receive the approval of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that I shall offer a substitute for the joint resolution of the Senator from Iowa. I shall read it now and ask that it be pending to be offered at the proper time.

> The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. The term of the office of President shall be four years. He shall be re-eligible for one additional term of four years and not thereafter re-eligible at any time. No person who has held the office, for any term or fraction of a term under the Constitution and laws made in pursuance thereof shall be re-eligible beyond his second term or term and a fraction of actual service.
> The President, together with a Vice President chosen for the same term, shall be elected as follows:

I wish to say a few words in justification of offering the amendment.

As well as I have been able to understand the thoughts that moved our ancestors when they left the question of the re-eligibility of the President indefinite, as they have done in the written word of the Constitution, it was that every man who was a delegate to the constitutional convention realized that the new Government had to be standardized and stabilized, and, as the French would say, "taught to march." Every man realized that the first President of the United States was going to be George Washington, a man of remarkable firmness and stability of character, coupled with an equally remarkable unselfishness and patriotism.

When the first news of the draft of the new Constitution reached Mr. Jefferson in Paris, where he was then United States minister plenipotentiary, there were several things which he found objectionable. Amongst others that there was no bill of rights, and amongst still others that there was no limit put upon the indefinite reeligibility of the President. First, then, there was no proper guarding of the rights of the individual from all government. He insisted, therefore, in his letters to his friends at home—and it was upon his suggestion that the concessions were made whereby the result was attained through proper amendments—that there ought to be within the body of the instrument itself a bill of rights retaining, preserving—buttressing, rather—the rights of the individual himself against all government; freedom of speech, freedom of religion, freedom of the press, freedom of associations, freedom from unreasonable search, freedom from causeless arrest, and the whole body of things familiarly known to us as subjects of a bill of rights.

He insisted also that there should be a direct and express reservation of the rights not granted or delegated to the Federal Government, and in one of his metaphysical moods he suggested that while he wanted the new Constitution adopted anyhow, even with its faults, because he wanted the American colonies to be in a union with one another, and to have the power to regulate and restrain trade, and to furnish a united front in the international world, in order to acquire at once the Constitution and Union, and at the same time not to have this rather undemocratic instrument as it was without the first 10 amendments permanently established with its undemocratic features incurred, it would be well that 9 States should ratify the Constitution, which under the terms of the Constitution would establish the Government, and that the other 4 States should withhold their ratification until these amendments demanded by them as conditions of ratification were adopted.

Then he added his expression of disagreement with the indefinite reeligibility of the President. He called attention to the fact that in all past history popular government had been overthrown in a majority of cases by the people themselves, who were, if I myself may so express it, "gone hero worshiping." No unpopular man ever overthrew any popular government. No popular government except by conquest or something of that outside sort was ever overthrown except by the people themselves, when the people themselves chose to make a god of a man. But he finally surrendered upon that particular point because he himself said—I am not quoting him expressly; I wish I could do it right now; I wish I had his words before me—because he said "the august personage" who "will be our first President" will not abuse the authority which will be conferred upon him nor fail properly to use the opportunity that will be given him.

He looked forward patiently for George Washington with his august unselfishness and his usual patriotism to fix the Government in its ways and then to set the example of self-denial from continuance in office after the great inaugurating which he alone could be trusted to do had been done. It might be possible in Jefferson's opinion that it would be necessary that Washington might be elected more than once or more than twice or a great many times, until the Government was "taught to march," and then he expressed the hope that after Washington's public service and the necessity of his service had expired, an amendment would be adopted which would forbid indefinite terms to future Presidents and fix a period beyond which they could not be reeligible.

I need not say that all this reasoning, which I have merely paraphrased, was sound reasoning. The history of the world shows that republican institutions everywhere where not overthrown by outside pressure have been overthrown by the people themselves, either seeking order through strong dictatorial authority to correct internal disorder or blindly making an emperor or dictator of some popular hero. Thus they themselves destroy themselves in destroying or voting away their own liberties.

In his old age Thomas Jefferson wrote a letter in which he regretted that indefinite reeligibility still existed, but admitted that perhaps after all the actual condition of things—the actual working system as historically evolved—was better than it would have been with an express inhibition of reeligibility after a fixed period, because George Washington had set an example, and such was the reverence in which the American people held him that no other man, unless a very audacious one, would ever fail to follow in his footsteps. Then, modestly referring to himself, he himself when his time came, after having received the addresses of some five or six State legislatures begging him to run for a third term, had done his best to add what authority his example carried to the authority of the example of George Washington.

Jefferson's expectation that there would be nobody with audacity enough to try to go outside of what had become the unwritten law of the American Republic—an election to two terms and no more—a rule established by the example of Washington, fortified by Jefferson's own example, to be still further fortified later on by the example of Andrew Jackson, and still further fortified in our day by the example of William McKinley, has not been entirely justified. There have been in our history two men who have had the audacity to attempt to violate the unwritten law, who have had the audacity to treat it with contempt. One of them was Gen. Grant, who was rebuked by his own party and not permitted to carry the matter any further—a great man, patriotic, true, but a soldier, and not a statesman; "overpersuaded" by the politicians who surrounded him, who themselves wanted to govern the country once more under a third administration of his. I verily believe that he subsequently regretted that he had permitted his name to be used in that way.

The other is rather a recent instance. I do not care to go into it, because it might arouse factional debate; but it is the instance of a man, at whose audacity in any particular case no man need marvel, because audacity is his habitual trait of mind. As Ed. Carmack once said of him, he is like a race horse in Tennessee, whose owner said, "His natural gait was running away." [Laughter.] He, too, has undertaken to violate the unwritten law of the Republic, after having publicly confessed its obligation and his own subjection to it. I think, while it was found exceedingly difficult to prevent a man of the heroism, patriotism, magnitude of character, and great popularity of Gen. Grant from succeeding in consummating the violation of the unwritten law, it will not be found at all difficult to prevent this gentleman from doing so.

I think the amendment which I propose to offer will cure the evil of apprehended danger from ambitious though popular men better than the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. I think that, even if it did not furnish a better and more satisfactory cure, it would be more apt to be adopted by three-fourths of the States, because it expresses in written language only "the unwritten law" of the Republic, something that nearly everybody has learned to revere and love, because it has been based, unwritten as it is, upon the example of the greatest and truest and purest and least selfish, most patriotic, and most revered Americans during the entire course of our entire history, as well as upon the written warning of Abraham Lincoln, who did not live to confer upon his country the additional service of another example of self-abnegation.

The people are acquainted with the idea of my proposition. The idea is popular amongst them. It gives a President an opportunity to test the sense of the people regarding his administration. In a great majority of cases the people have reelected their Presidents a second time. I have heard it said that that was generally done because the President in power could reelect himself. I deny that. John Quincy Adams was a very able man. He did not, because he could not, reelect himself. Martin Van Buren was the most skillful manipulator, and what we would call now "political boss," of his day, and he was the legatee of all-powerful Andrew Jackson, but he did not reelect himself, though he tried it with all his might and all his patronage. Arthur, the most elegant, well-bred, courteous, and suave of men, did not reelect himself nor even renominate himself. Hayes could not do it; did not even try to do it. A majority of the Presidents have been reelected because a majority of the Presidents have deserved to be reelected. That is the honest truth of Presidents of both parties. It is a tribute to the American people that 27 men, I believe, now, have sat in the White House. I may be a little off in my ready reckoning, but in all the one hundred and thirty-odd years of the life of this Republic, with these 27 Presidents, there has never sat in the White House either a fool or a personally dishonest man. There is no line of 27 kings anywhere in the world since the world began that can furnish a parallel to that.

But there is danger in indefinite reeligibility because, as Mr. Jefferson said and as all men of sound sense must say—

> Indefiniteness of self-succession in the Executive office leads gradually in the case of popular men, who are ambitious and unscrupulous, to life tenure, and life tenure leads gradually to hereditary succession.

The more popular and the stronger and the greater the abilities of the man, the more the danger to popular institutions, to free institutions, under republican forms that man is, unless he be not only great and wise and strong and popular, but be self-restraining, unselfish, and unambitious at the same time.

Washington, in the very beginning of the Republic's existence, could have wrecked it as a Republic; there can be no doubt of that, and if he had been twice as popular as he was he could have wrecked it twice as easily. The thing that is most dangerous to the people themselves is always the human thing that the people worship. An unworshiped, an unpopular man, could not do any harm to popular government anywhere. It is only when, being fed upon the good will of the people, he has by long tenure fortified himself to such an extent that he is capable of getting along without their good will any further that he becomes dangerous. This is the answer to Cassius's question, "Upon what food hath this our Cæsar fed?" and so forth.

The people of Rome were not very far wrong when they selected Julius Cæsar as a representative, and the best living representative, of popular institutions and popular aspirations in his time and day. He was infinitely preferable to the plutocracy represented at that time by the Roman Senate, for it was not any longer even a patriciate; it had become a plutocracy, the most contemptible of all forms of government, and yet I think that few people will be found to deny the fact that in him even they had set up one evil against another, and that their own will had stabbed their own vitals. They had gotten rid of a mean and a contemptible, though oppressive, government, and put in its place a less mean one and a less contemptible one, but an equally oppressive one, not under Julius Cæsar himself, because the man's character was such—magnanimous, forgiving, and broad minded—that while he would have kept all power in his own hands he personally would not have abused it, but in his successors whose life tenures their blind worship of him had made possible. It began earlier with Marius, when he was elected consul the sixth time, the hero of the people, followed up by the election of Julius Cæsar, his party successor in democratic leadership again and again and again. Life tenure for lesser men followed. In Rome it never became an hereditary succession, but the only reason it did not was because the legions took charge of the elections, and made it a military election in the course of time. It lasted as such until the legions even lost virility and there was established the feeble quasi hereditary Byzantine régime.

There ought not to be indefiniteness of succession in Executive office. It does not make so much difference where you put the line of demarcation, only it ought to be prescribed or else understood and fought for. In the Constitutional Convention there was an offer that no man should serve beyond 8 years in succession, and another proposition beyond 12 years in succession. Many propositions were offered, and, in my own opinion, some proposition to limit the indefiniteness of reeligibility would have been adopted except for the fact which I have mentioned. That fact I repeat. There was but one man in America at that day whom all Americans, North and South, equally trusted, and that was George Washington. There was a feeling in the minds of all men that the new Government was an experiment, and if there was any hope for success for it at all it lay in the man whom everybody had concluded to make Chief Magistrate, and that perhaps it would therefore be well to leave an indefinite tenure of office, in order that perhaps even for his lifetime he might rule the destinies of the American Republic. As I said a moment ago, Mr. Jefferson expressed that idea, though not in those precise words, in one of his letters before Washington was elected President. It would be easy, with time for research and the setting forth of the results of research, to demonstrate that many entertained it.

Washington justified their confidence. Lesser men, temporarily equally popular, but more egotistical and more selfish, may not.

"Forewarned is forearmed," except for those "whom the gods first make mad"—those who "rush in where angels fear to tread."

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

J. FRED. C. TALBOTT,
GEORGE EDMUND FOSS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish some kind of a statement might be made to the Senate so that we will understand what disposition has been made of the important matters in the naval bill. Of course, amendments referred to by number and by number alone give us very little light. I should like to inquire what was done with reference to the battleship question?

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator from Missouri that all the amendments except two were previously agreed to. There is no material change in any of the other amendments, except that the provision for two battleships has been stricken out and one battleship provided for of the dreadnought type, costing $7,425,000.

The House also receded from its amendment to the Senate amendment providing for eight submarine torpedo boats instead of four, as proposed by the House. In other respects there has been no material change.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator.

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, I am opposed to that part of the report which agrees to the construction of one battleship only, believing, as I do, that the Senate should insist upon the construction of two battleships. I take no stock in the argument which I have heard advanced that the one battleship, to which it seems the House has finally agreed, would equal in efficiency the two battleships which the Senate amendment had authorized. The Navy Department strongly urges the construction of two battleships, each of which should be equal in fighting efficiency to any ships now constructed and the superior of most of them; and the two battleships provided for by the Senate amendment would have met those conditions.

But the Navy Department does not believe it is practicable to construct now any one battleship that would be equal in efficiency of the two battleships authorized by the Senate bill. The Navy Department has warned us that if we cease for a single year to carry out the two-battleships-a-year program mapped out by the Government naval experts, in the course of a very few years the United States will reach the level of a fifth-rate naval power; and I for one am not willing by my action to contribute to that result.

It seems certain to me that if we expect to retain our prestige as a Nation and to enforce the policies that we have adopted with reference to other nations we must be prepared to keep our Navy up to the standard necessary to maintain that prestige and enforce those policies. According to my idea it would be a blow at the honor of the national flag if we should take any steps in the direction of curtailment of the national defense.

But I must not be understood as criticizing my brother Senators who do not coincide with my own views in this particular matter, for I assume that their motives are fully as good as my own, and least of all must I be understood as trying to place myself on a pedestal of patriotism higher than that which they occupy, for I assume that their patriotism is fully as great as my own. But I am so impressed with the correctness of my position in this matter that, although I have not seen my home nor my family since last Christmas and although I am sure that I love both as much as any Senator here can love his own, I am, if it should be necessary, in order to obtain the authorization of two battleships, willing to stay here until the term of this Congress expires; and holding these views I can not concur in the motion to adopt the report of the conference committee.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is hardly necessary for me to say that I entirely agree with the views and the criticisms made by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON]. No one can feel more strongly than I the necessity of two battleships annually for this country while the present condition of affairs exists throughout the civilized world.

I think, however, that the controversy which has arisen on this matter at this session has not been without its fruit. I think it has demonstrated that the American people, without regard to party, are in favor of maintaining the Navy at a point where it shall be a complete defense to the United States. I think it is evident from the almost unanimous tone of the press and from everything that can be learned elsewhere that the American people do not wish their Navy to be made the subject of party action by either party. It is a national question purely. The Navy is also our great arm of defense.

Mr. President, nothing can be clearer than that if we do not make up for what we lose this year we shall drop back to a place in which we will not be without peril among the great naval powers of the world. If we allow only one ship this year we must have three next year. The American people will not tolerate neglect of the Navy. A few years ago England undertook to economize with her Navy. To-day, in a panic almost, she is striving with feverish eagerness to recover the ground then lost. So, after dropping away from what she considered essential to her safety—the double standard—she has now doubled her program and is building vessels in the utmost haste.

Those who have followed the course of events in Europe will have noticed that England has withdrawn her Mediterranean fleet to Gibraltar. It is the first time in 200 years that she has taken a backward step in that famous sea, through which lies her route to India, and it was owing to the unwise economies she made by cutting down her naval program. If we cut down ours and build less than we ought to, we shall inevitably find ourselves doing the same thing—striving to make up for the lost time by sudden and extraordinary authorizations. It is much wiser and better to build two battleships every year and keep the fleet at the point at which it ought to be maintained. That, Mr. President, was the feeling of the Senate, as we know by the overwhelming majority in favor of two battleships; it was the feeling of the conferees.

But this session has dragged on to such a point, it is now so late in the summer, that after the recent action of the House the Senate conferees did not feel that they were justified in holding the Congress here longer in the struggle for two ships, because the next naval bill will be with us in four months, and then, if we do our duty, we will make up for what we have lost this year.

It was on that ground that the conferees, after many weeks of conference and contest, finally acceded to the compromise offered by the House. I ought also to point out that the House receded on the Senate addition with respect to submarines. The House authorized four; the Senate doubled the number; and the House acceded to it. Otherwise, as the Senator from California has said, this bill is the same as when partial agreement on the first conference report was made and agreed to here.

It is the same except for one or two slight changes made necessary by the fact that points of order were raised in the House as to new matter introduced in conference. I think the points were highly technical and of no great importance, but certain words were there which had not been used in either House, and those amendments have been modified to meet points of order in the House. Otherwise the bill is just the same as when the Senate agreed to it on the first report of the committee; and, much as I regret that we have not two battleships, I think that the wise thing for the Senate to do now is to accept the report of the conference, which is a complete agreement.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, with considerable reluctance I find myself unable to agree with my associates on the committee with reference to the conference report. I think the action of the House on the battleship matter is parsimonious and not creditable, and that they will use this as a lever to put upon the country a program utterly insufficient in the future. In order that I may not be drawn into their plans in any way, I am obliged to record my vote in the negative on this question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. In response to various inquiries, I submit certain tables which I should like to have published in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the tables referred to will be printed in the RECORD as requested.

The tables are as follows:

Sea strength—June 25, 1912.

In order to answer the frequent inquiries of societies and persons throughout the country interested in the maintenance of the Navy and its relative strength and importance in comparison with foreign navies the following information has been compiled:

[1] Battleships having a main battery of all big guns (11 inches or more in caliber).
[2] Battleships of (about) 10,000 tons or more displacement, and having more than one caliber in the main battery.
[3] Armored cruisers having guns of largest caliber in main battery and capable of taking their place in line of battle with the battleships. They have an increase of speed at the expense of carrying fewer guns in main battery and a decrease in armor protection.
[4] Includes all unarmored cruising vessels above 1,500 tons displacement.
[5] Includes smaller battleships and monitors. No more vessels of this class are being proposed or built by the great powers.
[6] England has no continuing shipbuilding policy, but usually lays down each year 5 armored ships with a proportional number of smaller vessels.
[7] Includes vessels of colonies.
[8] Germany has a continuing shipbuilding program, governed by a fleet law authorized by the Reichstag. For 1912 there are authorized 1 battleship, 1 armored cruiser, 2 cruisers, 12 destroyers. Eventual strength to consist of 41 battleships, 20 armored cruisers, 40 cruisers, 144 destroyers, 72 submarines.
[9] $3,570,000 authorized for experiments and further construction.
[10] $78,837,591 authorized to be expended from 1911 to 1917 for the construction of war vessels.

"Vessels building or authorized" includes vessels authorized but not yet laid down, as well as those actually under construction.

The following vessels are not included in the table: Ships over 20 years old unless they have been reconstructed and rearmed within five years; torpedo craft over 15 years old; transports, colliers, repair ships, converted merchant vessels, or any other auxiliaries; vessels of less than 1,500 tons, except torpedo craft; torpedo craft of less than 50 tons.

Vessels undergoing trials are considered as completed.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

Mr. PAGE. I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday, August 21, 1912, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3) to cooperate with the States in encouraging instruction in agriculture, the trades, and industries and home economics in secondary schools; in maintaining instruction in these vocational subjects in State normal schools; in maintaining extension departments in State colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure, and that before adjournment on that calendar day the Senate will vote upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendments that may be offered to that bill—through the regular parliamentary stages—to its final disposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Vermont will please send the request to the desk, it will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Wednesday, August 21, 1912, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3) to cooperate with the States in encouraging instruction in agriculture, the trades, and industries and home economics in secondary schools; in maintaining instruction in these vocational subjects in State normal schools; in maintaining extension departments in State colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure, and that before adjournment on that calendar day the Senate will vote upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendments that may be offered to that bill—through the regular parliamentary stages—to its final disposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to inquire if that would displace the unfinished business if it is not disposed of before that time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that it would not, being a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. CUMMINS. That it would not displace it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That it would not displace it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then I have no objection.

Mr. LODGE. What is the unanimous-consent agreement which is asked for?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request will again be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Wednesday, August 21, 1912, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3) to cooperate with the States in encouraging instruction in agriculture, the trades, and industries and home economics in secondary schools; in maintaining instruction in these vocational subjects in State normal schools; in maintaining extension departments in State colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure, and that before adjournment on that calendar day the Senate will vote upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendments that may be offered to that bill—through the regular parliamentary stages—to its final disposition.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to giving consent to take up the bill, but I think to agree to vote on a bill of that importance on the day we take it up is pressing it rather hard.

Mr. PAGE. Would you prefer to do it on the following day, Senator?

Mr. LODGE. I think the bill is of too great importance to agree by unanimous consent to take a final vote upon it at this session. Here we are in the last days of the session. This is a bill involving the expenditure of $12,000,000——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Sixteen million dollars.

Mr. LODGE. Sixteen million dollars, and opening up an entirely new field of United States expenditure.

I am frank to say that I have been so occupied that I do not pretend to understand the details of the bill. I am entirely friendly to vocational education, but that is a very different thing from proposing to embark the Government of the United States in it; and it seems to me that to make a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on it after one day's debate, which may be interrupted and taken up by conference reports—some large appropriation bills are still out of the Senate and the unfinished business is pending here—is asking a good deal.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the fact that we have out at the present time, either in conference or not reported to the Senate, the following appropriation bills: The Army bill, the Indian bill, the Post Office bill, the legislative bill, the sundry civil bill, the general deficiency bill. And it would be almost useless for us to give unanimous consent now with respect to any bill unless it is provided that its consideration shall not interfere with appropriation bills or conference reports.

Mr. PAGE. I am quite willing to make that provision.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator could not make that provision if he asks for unanimous consent—as he has already asked for it—because his request is that we shall vote upon that calendar day, and that would be impossible——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand objection has already been made. If not, I make it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia objects.

Mr. PAGE. I believe it was a distinguished Senator from Arkansas who rose in his place one day and said that he proposed to talk upon a certain bill, which was then pending before the Senate, but not about it. I think I shall have to talk a few minutes upon the joint resolution offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], but not about it.

I think I have been so modest in taking the time of the Senate in the past that it will forgive me if I take a few minutes at this time to state why I ask, as I do, the consideration of my bill at this term.

This bill was introduced into the Senate the first day of the session, in April, 1911, and was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. After some little discussion the committee took it up, passed upon it favorably with the exception of a single vote, and directed me, as a committee of one, to take it up with the educators of the country, perfect it as best I could, and try to report the best possible bill at the following December session.

I went home, and sacrificing the greater part of my vacation, I commenced taking up this measure with the educators of the different States. I took it up with every State superintendent of public instruction, every governor, the president of every university, especially the president of all the State agricultural colleges, with the dean of the State experiment stations, with the head of all the schools that were devoted to the education of teachers, and when I came back to the Senate in December I presented a bill that I think was fairly good.

That bill was reported to the Senate on the 26th day of February last, and for weeks and weeks it has naturally been the first bill, or about the first bill, to be considered whenever the Senate has taken up the calendar for consideration. But every time the calendar has been taken up Senators have requested unanimous consent that unobjected bills be considered. I submit to Senators here that in all this time, indeed for the four years I have been in the Senate, I have never made an objection to a unanimous consent.

Mr. President, I feel that it is one of the most important bills before the Senate. I am sure the claim that it is going to take several days to consider it is wrong. I have made diligent inquiry of all the Senators that I thought designed to speak to the bill, and I think I can say truthfully that I do not believe it will take three hours to pass the bill.

I want to say to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], if he will allow me, that the greatest opposition to this bill came from the State of Massachusetts. Massachusetts is one of the most progressive States in education in the Union. They have a very able commissioner of education, Dr. Snedden. He was a distinguished educator on the Pacific coast, but Massachusetts was able to overbid the Pacific coast and they drew him to Massachusetts. Dr. Snedden prepared a complete bill which he asked me to substitute for my bill. I could not agree with Dr. Snedden in all the suggestions he made, but finally one of the commissioners of education of the State of Massachusetts, Mr. Prosser, was sent here to Washington to take up this bill with me, and he spent two hard weeks at work in perfecting this bill. The result is, I will say, to the Senator from Massachusetts, that to-day there is no State in the Union that has given a more hearty indorsement to this bill than Massachusetts I wish to read what the commissioner of education there now says about it. I quote from Dr. Snedden's letter, which I hold in my hand:

The bill seems to me to be in excellent shape, and my desire is that it shall be passed as nearly as possible in its present form. Nothing could give greater encouragement to the development of this type of education at the present time in the various States of the Union than the passage of Senate bill No. 3, and I wish you all success in your efforts.

Mr. President, New York next to Massachusetts was, perhaps, the most persistent in its opposition to the bill. One of her Congressmen, Mr. REDFIELD, of New York City, is the president of the National Association for the Promotion of Industrial Education. He came to me and said, "Senator PAGE, if you pass that bill New York will have to pay her share of the taxes, and she will get no benefit from the bill." "Why?" "Because the conditions in New York are such that the city and the rural districts will not agree that the State shall pay any part of the taxes. The result will be that under your bill, which compels the State to pay as much as the Federal Government shall appropriate, we can not receive one dollar. We shall be compelled, of course, to pay the most of any State in the Union."

After some discussion with Congressman REDFIELD we reached the agreement that the bill should be changed to read that instead of the State paying as much as the Federal Government the State or the local community should pay twice the amount paid from the Federal Treasury. That simple change solved the difficulty in New York, and to-day Congressman REDFIELD is offering no objection to the bill so far as I know.

I have put almost a year's time into this matter. I think I have written between 3,000 and 4,000 letters. There have been no protests from any State that have not been most carefully considered. The bill as it is drawn to-day, in my judgment, generally meets the views of educators all over the United States.

There is in this country what is called the National Educational Association. It met in Chicago a few days ago and passed a resolution upon this bill which I should like to read, because this is perhaps the great educational association of this country. Bear in mind, this is an old organization and that this meeting at Chicago was a most important one, being the fiftieth meeting of that organization. Here is their preamble and their resolution:

Whereas vocational choice is inseparable from the several vocations to be pursued;
Whereas the public schools have hitherto left these matters to the solution of the worker and the employer;
Whereas the increasing demands of the occupations of the home, shop, and farm are forcing upon local communities the necessity for some form of vocational training; and
Whereas the United States, in order to protect its population, by maintaining its vigor and morality, to change its large output of raw material into an output of finished product, to make it possible to fight not with armored cruisers but with brain and skilled workmanship, and to maintain its commercial prestige, demands some form of vocational training: Be it
Resolved, That this association recommends to the Federal Government—

I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to that point—

Resolved, That this association recommends to the Federal Government the passage of a law, under conditions clearly recognizing the autonomy of the States in adaptation to local conditions, carrying with it an appropriation sufficiently liberal to render possible its operation, which law shall have for its end the ultimate improvement of the home, shop, and farm through vocational training; that such aid be administered through the United States Bureau of Education, or a similar body; thence through the State board of control of each State to the several local boards of control in the several communities; and that such grants to such local communities and to such States be dependent upon actual results secured in such local communities and such States.

The Grange, which perhaps speaks more authoritatively for agriculture than any other of the organizations of this country, has passed resolutions favoring this bill. Prof. T. C. Atkeson, the overseer of the National Grange, says:

Now, as to the Page vocational education and the Lever extension bill—

I call the attention of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] to this particular statement, because it shows the opinion of the Grange to-day, as to the comparative desirability of the bill introduced by him and known in the House of Representatives as the Lever bill and Senate bill No. 3.

Now, as to the Page vocational-education bill and the Lever extension bill. As a member of the National Grange legislative committee I have appeared before committees of Congress in favor of both of these measures. At the last session of the National Grange it adopted this resolution:

"Resolved, That the National Grange in forty-fifth annual session assembled does hereby indorse the Page bill, Senate bill, to provide for vocational education in secondary schools, the training of teachers for these schools, agricultural extension, and agricultural demonstration."

The Lever extension bill was not in existence at the time the National Grange met, so the legislative committee was left to use its own judgment as to that matter.

There are a number of considerations connected with the effort to substitute the Lever extension bill for the broader and more comprehensive Page vocational bill which we do not now care to discuss. While we have a pretty clear knowledge of the inside facts, we know of no reason just now why we should question the motives of anyone. Until the National Grange instructs us otherwise the legislative committee will stand pat on the Page bill.

Another organization that appeared here last winter at the suggestion of the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] to speak upon his bill was the State Bankers' Associations of the Northwest. The president of that association was Mr. Joseph Chapman, jr., of Minneapolis. I have under date of August 10 received a letter from him saying that that organization had passed upon the Page bill affirmatively:

I know you will be delighted to know that your letter to me was read in our conference and your speech delivered under date of June 6 was ordered printed in full in our proceedings, and a resolution passed strongly indorsing the Page bill. I will send you copy of the proceedings within two weeks.

I might go on and name organizations all over the country which have indorsed this bill. I want to say to the friends of vocational education that there are no exceptions to the general rule that every organization that has for its object the uplift of the American boy and girl, so far as I know, favors the Page bill.

Mr. President, we are constantly discussing the conservation of our national resources, our mines, our quarries, our forests, our water power. We spend day after day in talking about the conservation of those resources, forgetting that the greatest asset, the greatest resource of the American Nation to-day is her boys and girls, and these are passing into the dump. While the Senator from Massachusetts may say that we ought not to educate them, but that the States ought to do it themselves, I want to say to him that the universal judgment of the country now is that many of the States are too poor to do this work alone. I can point to Senators here who have told me that with the aid offered by this bill they will still be unable to do it, but the bill is so formulated that they may accept or not accept.

Judge McAdoo, the chief magistrate of New York City, says that the criminal ranks of his city are being recruited largely from the boys and girls who at 12, 13, and 14 years of age pass out into the city, some of them as bootblacks, some as newspaper boys, some as messenger boys, some in one occupation, some in another. He says they are drifting into a cheap and oftentimes criminal manhood largely because they are not being cared for in a proper school.

I dislike to take the time of Senators, for I know how anxious they are to close up the affairs of this session and go home, but if you pass this bill through the Senate at this session, it is my purpose to go home and during my vacation take up the bill with the leading educators of every State of the Union and I shall hope that their influence upon their Members of Congress will be such that next winter we may pass the bill through the House of Representatives.

If we can do that we will probably have just one year earlier start on this great measure than we shall if we do not pass the bill at this session. As some Senators here know, I spent a good part of my vacation last fall in this work, and because I am willing to do it again this year, and because I feel very deeply the necessity for this great work, I hope the Senate will take up this measure at this time and pass it.

Mr. STONE. I am afraid the Senator is a little too frank in stating his purpose. Are we to understand hereafter that the letters we get from our constituents about this bill—I am not speaking about its merits—have been written under the persuasive influence of the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. PAGE. I would be very happy to answer that question.

Mr. STONE. I am led to ask the question not so much because of its application to this particular measure, but we are all of us getting from time to time a world of letters and telegrams about this measure and other measures. Somehow we have been impressed—I have, I know—that these letters and telegrams have been inspired by somebody and that they are not the outflow of a real voluntary or spontaneous public opinion. Hence, I say that the Senator's statement is calculated to leave the impression upon those who may receive such letters in the future that he has induced somebody to write them.

I would feel more impressed by communications of that kind if I felt that they were written simply as the spontaneous act of the correspondent rather than under the inspiration of some other powerful and influential personage.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I have taken up this matter with the heads of the colleges of this country, not with the hoi polloi, which usually, I presume, attack the Senator. I have gone to the highest authority in education in this country. I have sought to make them converts to my faith, and when they have evinced any opposition to the bill, I think they have been asked to communicate their objections quite as much as their approbation; at any rate I have not sought to keep them from writing any Senator exactly how they feel. I have frequently asked them if they had any objections to the bill to communicate them to their Senators in order that I might take it up with them and try to make the bill satisfactory. However, to be absolutely frank with the Senator from Missouri, I shall have to plead guilty, in part at least, to what he charges me with.

Mr. President, I believe there is no piece of constructive legislation before this Congress so important as this; I believe there is no asset of the American people that is going to destruction as fast as the American boy; I believe there is no proposition before the American people to-day that has taken such deep hold upon their minds as this. If there is any organization which is devoted to the uplift of the American people that has not favorably passed upon this measure I do not know where it is.

I may be wrong, but I believe that the bill as now framed is nearly perfect, because when a man like Dr. Snedden says that he wants it to be passed without the change of a single line, I think that means that it is a good bill. I believe that Senators will accept what they have received from their own States in regard to the merits of this bill as authoritative, and if they do I believe that it is not going to take more than two or three hours to pass the bill, although I wish it might be discussed for two or three days. All I say can is, that I would like to have the Senate pass upon this matter now so that I may know how they feel. If they do not want me to press the measure now I hope they will so indicate now by their votes. I have said to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] that on no account would I do anything discourteous to him, and that I would not move to take up the bill if he would regard it an act of discourtesy to do so.

While I am on my feet, inasmuch as I see we can not get unanimous consent, I am going to make the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill, and in doing so I want the Senate to be perfectly frank. If there is any man here who thinks the bill ought not to be passed, I want him to vote against it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I inquire, Mr. President, if that motion is in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. It will displace the unfinished business.

Mr. LODGE. I hope the Senator will not make that motion immediately, because it is a nondebatable motion, and some of us have something we should like to say at this point.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call the attention of the Chair to the parliamentary status. If I understand it correctly, it is this: The joint resolution to amend the Constitution is before the Senate, and the Senator from Vermont is speaking, as he says, on that joint resolution, but not about it. His proposition is to make a motion to take up his bill while the joint resolution is before the Senate by unanimous consent, and I submit respectfully that it is out of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that, under the rules, the Senator is quite in order in moving to take up another bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina will state it.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the motion of the Senator from Vermont is agreed to, it will displace the unfinished business, will it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will, if it is agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. But a motion to take up another matter, thereby displacing the unfinished business, is in order at any time.

Mr. PAGE. I shall very cheerfully yield to the Senator from Massachusetts if he desires to make some remarks at this time, although I do not want to lose my place.

Mr. LODGE. The motion of the Senator cuts off any debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Absolutely.

Mr. PAGE. I withhold the motion if I may be allowed to retain my place while the Senator is debating the question.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to take about five minutes to say one or two things in regard to the bill.

Mr. PAGE. I yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Vermont a question. I voted to take up his bill the other day. There are some features of it I am heartily in favor of, as he knows; but does the Senator really think he can get this bill through at this session?

Mr. PAGE. I have no doubt of that, if the sentiment of the Senate is as I believe it to be. I want to say to the Senator that, from letters I have received from different States in the Union and from assurances I have received from Senators, I believe there are 72 Senators who favor this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to be perfectly frank with the Senator——

Mr. PAGE. If the Senator from Massachusetts or anybody else will show me that there are 25 per cent of the Senate opposed to my bill I will retire cheerfully.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to be very frank with the Senator. I have talked with a good many Senators, and talked with the Senator from Vermont in regard to this bill. I live in the same hotel with the Senator from Vermont and have conversed with him about it and advised him against this course. I believe he is injuring the prospects for his bill. I do not believe there are a dozen Senators upon this floor who want the bill to be taken up at this time. As I have said, there are many features of the bill which I can support; but, I repeat, I do not believe there are a dozen Senators here who will advise the Senator to take the course he suggests with reference to this great bill, involving twelve or sixteen million dollars, in view of the fact that the session is about closing, when many conference reports are to come before us, and when there is demoralization on all sides. Under those circumstances I ask the Senator if he does not think it would be better to make this bill a special order for next session? We will be back here in two or three months, and then it can be taken up, discussed, and voted upon when we are fresh. We shall have nothing before us in the early part of that session but the impeachment trial, and I urge upon the Senator, as a friend of the measure to some extent, to put it off until the next session. I do not think that he is enhancing the prospects of his bill.

Mr. PAGE. If the Senator had stood, as I have stood, here for months and months, with a place of privilege upon the calendar, and yielded to everything, as I have done, for months and months—the bill will have been on the calendar for six months on the 26th day of this month—he might have a different opinion regarding the propriety of taking it up.

I desire to yield to the Senator from Massachusetts to make his remarks, but I do not wish to yield the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator has read a number of letters from distinguished gentlemen in my State, for whom I have the greatest respect and with whom, I trust, I shall find myself in accord; but I can not hold opinions simply because they tell me to; I can not hold opinions simply because they hold them; I must have grounds for my action here more relative than that. I have been here a good many years, and I know organized pressure when I see it brought to bear. I also know, Mr. President, that many of these gentlemen are thoroughly, honestly, and sincerely in favor of this bill, and I shall be glad if I can find myself in agreement with them.

I have talked with one of them, Mr. Frederick P. Fish, of Boston, a very distinguished lawyer, who is deeply interested in the bill, who came to see me and talked to me about it at great length. He said he realized its importance and its complications, and he did not expect to see immediate action, for he understood it must be thoroughly discussed, and that there was some division of opinion even among those who favored it.

Mr. President, I do not profess to understand this bill or its provisions. I have had a great deal of work upon my hands during the last few months and I have had a great many other subjects to consider, which have absorbed all the time and attention which I had at my command. I want time to make myself understand the bill reasonably well before I vote. It is not a question of favoring vocational education. I suppose we all agree that vocational education is a very valuable thing. I believe too that many persons think that, like other forms of education, it is best in the hands of the States. The Senator waves aside that matter of involving the Government of the United States in this project; but, Mr. President, this is only one of continually recurring instances of the United States gradually absorbing the functions of the States. It is not as if the United States seized them by violence or force; on the contrary, it comes in the much more insidious way, of the people in the States themselves seeking to come within the jurisdiction of the United States, because the United States has the great National Treasury behind it.

Mr. President, I think this process of gradually absorbing the functions of the States and of the United States stepping in more and more to take up one function after another is a very serious matter, indeed; it is much more serious than this bill or a dozen similar bills, because it can only lead to a gradual atrophy of the powers of the States.

I was not bred in the State rights school, as everyone is aware who knows anything about me; but, Mr. President, everyone familiar with our history knows that the States are older than the Constitution. The division of this country into States lies behind all our constitutions; and in the division of the country into States, in the organization of this Government by States, instead of having one great country with no State divisions, lies now, as I think always has lain, the great sheet anchor of our Government. I think, Mr. President, that when we are invited by any bill to make a new advance into new paths, to take on ourselves new functions which the States have hitherto exercised, we should look carefully at the direction in which we are going.

I do not say it ought not to be done; there are many cases which have occurred and others which will occur in which it ought to be done; but it is not a point to be pushed lightly to one side; it is one to be gravely considered when we are urged to enter upon new fields; and I, for one, want an opportunity to consider this bill. I do not say I shall speak five minutes on it; I do not say I shall vote against it—my inclination is in favor of it—but to ask us to take up a bill of this magnitude, involving an expenditure of some $16,000,000 annually, involving a new departure on the part of the United States and its entrance upon a new field—to ask this tired Senate, with a bare voting quorum, to take such a measure up in the last days of a dying session and to pass it without any serious debate or consideration—for there is no time for us to give proper consideration to it now—seems to me rather an extreme request. That we should take it up and debate it, and inform ourselves about it and learn from the Senator from Vermont in regard to it, I am only too happy to concede; but I am not ready to agree that we should take up this bill and promise to vote on it at a certain time, to-morrow or the day after, when we all know that at any moment a conference report or an appropriation bill may be here which will involve hours of debate; and we might find ourselves confronted with a unanimous-consent agreement to vote without an opportunity of discussing this measure. I think it is only fair to the Senate to give us a reasonable opportunity to take up the bill and discuss it before asking us for unanimous consent to vote upon it. Unanimous consent to vote is seldom if ever asked before there has been any debate.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I am not asking unanimous consent. My request for unanimous consent was denied. I want to say further to the Senator from Massachusetts that he is the Senator who, when my bill has come up here in the regular order, has objected to its consideration.

Mr. LODGE. I have objected to it once, and that was the other day when the Senator asked unanimous consent to fix a time for voting upon it. That is the only occasion on which I have ever objected.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator, I have no doubt——

Mr. LODGE. I gave my reasons then, which were the same as they are now.

Mr. PAGE. I have no doubt the Senator thinks he is correct about that matter, but on an occasion when the bill came up prior to that I went to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and said, "Senator, it seems to me that my bill is being sidetracked. I hope you will let me have an opportunity to consider it when it comes up in regular order." The Senator from Utah said, "I will see the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and see what he says about it." He turned around to the Senator from Massachusetts and came back and said to me, "The Senator objects." I may be wrong about that.

Mr. LODGE. I know nothing of that, Mr. President. I do not carry private conversations to the floor, and I do not recall that one.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to say in regard to the question which the Senator has brought up concerning the autonomy of the States that the State of Massachusetts has perhaps in Mr. Fish one of the ablest educators in New England. The board of commissioners of Massachusetts have reflected his sentiments. He objected to the very points to which the Senator objects; but when they sent on their representatives from Massachusetts to aid in the revision of this bill they made important suggestions in order that the State autonomy might not be impaired. I want to read to show how the bill has been changed in that respect. I read from section 19 of the bill:

SEC. 19. In order to secure the benefit of the secondary school department fund, the industrial or home economics school fund, the district agricultural school fund, the college teachers' training fund, or the normal teachers' training fund, the board for vocational education for each State—and that board for vocational education was the Massachusetts idea—and the District of Columbia shall adopt, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and place in operation a general administrative scheme or plan, with such modifications as may be made from time to time, for the proper distribution of moneys to school of secondary grade and to colleges and normal schools as herein provided.

Mr. Fish, I confess, is probably one of the strongest educators in New England, and it is his mind that has gone into this bill so as to take away from the Federal Government the power to control and leave the State autonomy perfect and complete.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

Mr. PAGE. If the Senator will allow me to make my motion, then I will yield.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator before he makes his motion.

Mr. PAGE. Very well.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I am favorable to the purposes sought to be accomplished by this bill. I voted the other day to take it up for consideration, but I think this is a very inopportune time for the bill to be pushed, especially as the session is fast being concluded. So I want to suggest to the Senator, as one who is favorable to this bill, with proper amendments—and if it be properly amended I expect to support it—that he consent to submit a request that this bill be made a special order for Wednesday, December 18. I believe that will accomplish better results and do more to secure its final passage and enactment into law than by pressing it at this time.

Mr. OVERMAN. On December 18?

Mr. SWANSON. December 18. There is a special order for December 16. I believe that would be the best course that could be pursued by the friends of this bill. There is scarcely a quorum here now, and it would simply be a subject of discussion and then laid aside. It has not been carefully considered, and there are certain amendments I should like to see made to it.

I hope the Senator will submit a request for such an agreement, and I believe if he does so the forces, the people who are in favor of this bill, will be able to reach a better conclusion and a better result.

Mr. PAGE. Do I understand the Senator to suggest that I ask that it be taken up at that time?

Mr. SWANSON. And made a special order.

Mr. PAGE. And carried to its final conclusion?

Mr. SWANSON. Of course.

Mr. PAGE. I think if an enemy of the bill had asked me to do that I would have objected, but I always like to take counsel of my friends, and while I would very much prefer now to have a day fixed for a vote, I will make the request for unanimous consent, as suggested by the Senator from Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator please suggest the terms of the proposed unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. LODGE. Did I understand the Senator from Virginia to suggest that we should agree to vote on the 18th day of December?

Mr. SWANSON. No.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No.

Mr. SWANSON. But that it be made a special order for that day.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Until displaced by something else.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous conset that Senate bill No. 3 be made a special order for Wednesday, December 18, 1912, not to interfere with the impeachment trial. Is there objection?

Mr. PAGE. Am I to understand that its consideration is to be continued until disposed of? I have had one or two special orders, and they have managed to sidetrack me. I should like to have the special order protect me at that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A special order can not be made to cover other days than the day specified.

Mr. SMOOT. If the special order is made for Wednesday, December 18, 1912, not to interfere with the impeachment trial—allow me to suggest this to the Senator from Vermont—upon that day the bill will come up, and if the Senator has enough votes in the Senate, and I have no doubt he has, he can at that time make the bill the unfinished business. Will not the Senator content himself with having it made the special order for the 18th, and then if there are enough votes in the Senate in favor of the measure, he can have it made the unfinished business?

Mr. PAGE. I should like to ask why my bill can not receive the same treatment that is accorded all other bills—let it come up and some time be named for a vote upon it? That is the way we do with almost all other bills that come up here. I have had one or two special orders——

Mr. SWANSON. I suggest to the Senator that this order be made in precisely the same language in which the order is made with reference to Senate bill 4043. Then, under the rules of the Senate, if a majority of the Senators are desirous of passing this bill they can keep it before the Senate for consideration until it is passed. Then you can reach an agreement for a final vote, and there will be no difficulty in arriving at a vote if a majority of the Senators desire it.

Mr. SMOOT. That is just what I suggested.

Mr. SWANSON. That is the plan which was adopted as to Senate bill 4043, which is a bill to prohibit interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors in certain cases.

Mr. PAGE. That bill has not passed to successful issue, has it?

Mr. SWANSON. It has not. But it has been made the order for December 16. I suggest that this bill be made a special order for the 18th and taken up for consideration, and after that, if a majority of the Senate wants to continue with it, it is impossible to displace it by anything else.

Mr. PAGE. I ask unanimous consent for the following order:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Wednesday, December 18, 1912, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed with the consideration of the bill (S. 3) to cooperate with the States in encouraging instruction in agriculture, the trades, and industries and home economics in secondary schools; in maintaining instruction in these vocational subjects in State normal schools; in maintaining extension departments in State colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure, and on that legislative day the Senate will proceed, without further debate, to vote upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill—through the regular parliamentary stages—to its final disposition.

Mr. LODGE. That is entirely different from the unanimous-consent agreement suggested by the Senator from Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. SMOOT. If we agree to that unanimous consent, it will interfere with the impeachment trial. This agreement provides for the legislative day. That may run on three or four days, and we have the impeachment trial. I certainly shall object to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing to agree that the bill be made a special order for that day, and then if a majority of the Senate so desires it can be made the unfinished business.

Mr. PAGE. I have had one or two special orders, and in every case have been sidetracked. I fear the Senator from Utah is not friendly to the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not been unfriendly to it and have made these suggestions merely because of the fact that we have before us the appropriation bills and the conference reports, and on the 18th day of December we will not have any appropriation bill or any conference report to take into consideration.

Mr. PAGE. I take it the Senator from Utah will object to my bill. I waited——

Mr. SMOOT. I objected to the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. PAGE. Then I move——

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Vermont is about to move to take up the bill?

Mr. PAGE. I am.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator permit me to say a word?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I entirely acquit the Senator from Vermont of any personal discourtesy toward me, and I recognize the importance of the bill which he desires to bring before the Senate. I am as heartily in favor of it as he is, but it is somewhat extraordinary, as it seems to me, to displace business that has already been taken up, and I hope that it will not be done.

Mr. CLAPP and Mr. SMOOT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont withhold his motion?

Mr. PAGE. I do for the moment.

Mr. CLAPP. I simply desire to say to the Senator from Vermont that in view of the statement of the Senator from Iowa, while I would otherwise be glad to vote with him to bring on the consideration of the bill in which he is interested, I would not now feel like voting for it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. In case the motion which the Senator from Vermont proposes to make should carry, would this bill be the unfinished business until supplanted by something else?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would be.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then if the Senator from Vermont will yield to me a minute, I will suggest that the Senator make his motion to take up his bill immediately after the disposition of the joint resolution of the Senator from Iowa. I want to say that I do not think the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] has been treated fairly in reference to his bill. It is due perhaps to the fact that he has been a little too considerate of others, for I have noticed here that the Senators who have succeeded in getting their matters before the Senate have been those who have been the least considerate of the desires of other Senators. In fact, I have noticed that, and under the pressure of a threat to hold up the Senate or to prevent the consideration of bills by unanimous consent generally the thing a Senator desires is brought about. I am as anxious to get away from here as any man can possibly be, and I had hoped that the Senator from Vermont might be content to have the Senate take up his bill next session. But, at the same time, so far as I am concerned, I propose to vote with him in reference to the proposition he wishes to submit. He has an important measure, and he has been encouraged to believe that it would be considered at this session.

I would not object to having it supplant the matter now before the Senate, but that is from a selfish reason, because I am opposed to the proposition now pending. The Senator from Vermont can move to take up Senate bill No. 3 immediately after the pending resolution is determined, and then a majority could continue it as the unfinished business until it is disposed of or until the end of the session. We can not now fix a day for a vote, because of the uncertainties of conference reports and of adjournment, but the Senator can certainly begin consideration of his bill if a majority is so disposed.

Mr. PAGE. May I ask the Presiding Officer whether that would be a proper motion to make?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not informed as to the exact nature of the suggested motion.

Mr. PAGE. That the bill be taken up for consideration at the conclusion of the joint resolution now before the Senate.

Mr. STONE. That is not it. As I understand, the proposal is that the Senator is to move to have the bill made a special order to be taken up immediately after the conclusion of the special order set for December 16.

Mr. TOWNSEND. No. The Senator did not understand me correctly.

Mr. STONE. I so understood the Senator.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator did not understand me correctly; at least I did not intend to leave that impression. The proposition was that this matter be taken up immediately after the conclusion of the joint resolution of the Senator from Iowa, which is now pending before the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, that might result in prolonging the session beyond the time when otherwise Congress would adjourn. It is not a very safe proposition, because Congress may adjourn notwithstanding the motion.

Mr. MYERS. Will the Senator from Vermont yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PAGE. I yield.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I have listened to this discussion, and by permission of the Senator from Vermont I wish to say a few words in connection with it.

Personally this body has always and invariably been exceedingly kind and courteous to me. As a new Senator here I have several times enjoyed what I considered very kindly consideration and very great courtesy at the hands of this body, and personally I have no cause to complain, but I am going to take the responsibility of saying a few words about the methods of doing business here.

It does not seem to me right for a bill of the importance of this bill, Senate bill No. 3, never to come to consideration during a session that lasts some eight or nine months. It seems that under the rules here there is no way of getting a bill up except by unanimous consent. I have been here month after month, and I have seen the calendar called under unanimous consent. Invariably I have obtained unanimous consent for such matters as I have desired to bring before the Senate, and personally have no cause to complain, no Senator having objected to any measure for which I asked consideration. The measures for which I asked consideration were not very important, but perhaps if they had been there would have been no objection. But I see no way, if there be objection, in which a vote on a bill on this calendar can be reached. I have never yet seen the calendar called for the consideration of bills other than by unanimous consent. And suppose a man has a bill on the calendar——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Montana is certainly in error about that. The Senator from Vermont is about to make a motion, and if a majority of the Senate shall vote for it, he will have that bill before the Senate; and that can be done any day.

Mr. MYERS. But I will say to the Senator from Iowa it seems that that will involve displacing a measure in which the Senator from Iowa is interested and which is the unfinished business.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senate can not do two things at the same time. It can not be engaged in the consideration of two bills at the same time.

Mr. MYERS. And the Senator from Iowa seems to think it would be some injustice to his measure. Perhaps it would be.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I call the attention of the Senator from Montana to the fact that this bill was not presented until June 14.

Mr. MYERS. Does the Senator mean that it was only then introduced into this body?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I mean that the present bill, which substantially modifies the old bill, the Senator from Vermont never perfected until June 14.

Mr. MYERS. But the original bill was introduced earlier in the session?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But he never perfected it until the time I have stated. It is a bill which would not harmonize with any State machinery with which I am familiar. It certainly would not in our State.

Mr. MYERS. I have never been the author of a bill of this importance, but it does seem to me that a bill of this importance ought to have some way of coming to a vote without asking unanimous consent and without displacing a measure in which some other Senator is interested.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There have been a dozen times when, with a majority of the Senate, the Senator could have had the bill taken up, without displacing any other business.

Mr. MYERS. There may have been a dozen such times, but they seem to have been of no benefit to the Senator from Vermont. It seems to me a bill of this importance ought of its own right to have some way of coming to a vote. I sympathize with the effort of the Senator from Vermont to get this bill up for consideration, and I believe it ought to be brought up for consideration, whether there be merit in it or not, and let it be considered on its merit, and if it is not meritorious let it be defeated, and if meritorious passed. I believe it ought to be done at this session. I do not think Senators ought to be in a hurry to get away as long as there is public business here demanding attention, and I hope in some way the Senator from Vermont may be able to get consideration for his bill at this session or at an early date in the next session, whichever he may prefer.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Chair to the two unanimous-consent agreements printed on the calendar to-day. I direct particular attention to the second provision, which is to this effect:

It is agreed, by unanimous consent, that on Monday, August 19, 1912—

Which is to-day—

following the action of the Senate on S. 957, relating to bills of lading, the Senate will take up for consideration Calendar No. 348, S. 3, to cooperate with the States in encouraging instruction in agriculture, the trades, and industries—

Which is the bill of the Senator from Vermont—

That shows that this bill comes up by unanimous consent to-day at a certain time, following the action on the bill which is made the order of business by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not agree with the Senator for two reasons: First, that it was to follow a bill that has not as yet been considered; next, it relates to the morning hour, and when the hour of 12 o'clock arrived the unfinished business was placed before the Senate, so that, as a matter of fact, in the view of the Chair, both of these unanimous-consent agreements fell at 12 o'clock to-day.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa has probably been as good a friend to this bill as anyone in the Senate. When I went to him and asked him his wishes in this matter, he said he thought he would have no objection to my making a motion that would give the Senate the alternative of continuing the consideration of his joint resolution or taking up my bill. I then thought I could do so without being discourteous to him or without doing him any wrong. But I shall not knowingly place myself where I am going to displease him in this matter. If the Senate will say to me that after he has concluded the consideration of his joint resolution I may have consideration of my bill, I will withdraw my motion. I now ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the consideration of the joint resolution of the Senator from Iowa my bill be taken up and made the special order, if that is a proper request, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that is a proper request.

Mr. SMOOT. You desire to have it taken up for consideration?

Mr. PAGE. For consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do I understand the request to be that we shall at this session take up the bill and continue here until it is disposed of?

Mr. PAGE. No, sir. I will take my chances on that. It is that after the consideration of the joint resolution is concluded we shall take up the bill, and, if we then have time to consider it properly and pass it, I should like to have it taken up, considered, and passed; but if we do not, I suppose I must be content.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I frankly say I do not want——

Mr. SMOOT. The request is that a special order be made to take it up for consideration, as I understood the Senator. We could not have an order coupled with the condition that if we have time it shall be considered. That could not be included in the order. As I understand it, the Senator from Vermont wants to have it made a special order, to be taken up for consideration.

Mr. PAGE. But I did make the suggestion that if the Senate was friendly to that request I would take my chances. I do not care to have the order made strictly according to parliamentary practice, but if it is understood that, barring the consideration of appropriation bills and conference reports, and after the joint resolution shall have been considered, my bill will be taken up, I am quite willing to leave it in that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state the request as the Chair understands it. It is that upon the conclusion of the consideration of the joint resolution now before the Senate, Senate bill No. 3 be made a special order and be taken up for consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood that the bill was to be made a special order subject to the consideration of appropriation bills and conference reports.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will so state it. The request is that on the conclusion of the consideration of joint resolution No. 78, it be made a special order subject to the consideration of appropriation bills and conference reports. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What would be the effect of the special order? How long would it continue?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest that it would continue until adjournment on that day, and then if not disposed of——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. To the adjournment on that day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And then it would go to the Calendar of Special Orders.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If it just lasts until adjournment on one day, I am willing to consent to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

FUR-SEAL CONVENTION.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16571) to give effect to the convention between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia for the preservation and protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the North Pacific Ocean, concluded at Washington, July 7, 1911, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"SEC. 11. That from and after the approval of this act all killing of fur seals on the Pribilof Islands, or anywhere within the jurisdiction of the United States in Alaska, shall be suspended for a period of five years, and shall be, and is hereby, declared to be unlawful; and all punishments and penalties heretofore enacted for the illegal killing of fur seals shall be applicable and inflicted upon offenders under this section: Provided, That this prohibtion shall not apply to the annual killing on the Pribilof Islands of such male seals as are needed to supply food, clothing, and boat skins for the natives on the islands, as is provided for in article 11 of said convention; the skins of all seals so used for food shall be preserved and annually sold by the Government, and proceeds of such annual sales shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States: Provided further, That at the expiration of the said five years' suspension of all commercial killing, as above provided, said killing may be resumed under authority of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor: Provided, however, That the number of 3-year-old males selected from among the finest and most perfect seals of that age found on the hauling grounds, to be reserved for breeding purposes, in each year ending August 1, shall not be fewer than the following: In 1917, and in each year thereafter until 1926, inclusive, 5,000. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor, or his authorized agents, shall have authority to receive on behalf of the United States any and all fur-seal skins taken as provided in the thirteenth and fourteenth articles of said convention and tendered for delivery by the Governments of Japan and Great Britain in accordance with the terms of said articles; and all skins which are or shall become the property of the United States from any source whatsoever shall be sold by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor in such market, at such times, and in such manner as he may deem most advantageous; and the proceeds of such sale or sales shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall likewise have authority to deliver to the authorized agents of the Canadian Government and the Japanese Government the skins to which they are entitled under the provisions of the tenth article of said convention; to pay to Great Britain and Japan such sums as they are entitled to receive, respectively, under the provisions of the eleventh article of said convention; to retain such skins as the United States may be entitled to retain under the provisions of the eleventh article of said convention; and to do or perform, or cause to be done or performed, any and every act which the United States is authorized or obliged to do or perform by the provisions of the tenth, eleventh, thirteenth, and fourteenth articles of said convention; and to enable the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to carry out the provisions of the said eleventh article there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $400,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT OF THE MANAGERS.

The agreement of the conferees on the bill (H. R. 16571) to give effect to the convention between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia for the preservation and protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the north Pacific Ocean, concluded at Washington July 7, 1911, is a compromise between the opposing views of the two Houses. There was only one point in difference between the Houses—the length of the closed season. The Senate fixed it at 10 years, the House at 1 year. The conferees agreed upon a closed season of 5 years. A compromise was absolutely necessary, because it was essential that the bill should pass at this session, as a failure to pass it would probably lead to the loss of the treaties by which pelagic sealing has been stopped.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I present a letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor in regard to the matter of fur-seal fisheries. It is a letter addressed to me, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD without being read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
Washington, August 19, 1912.

Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: While I regret that the Senate insisted upon the adoption of the committee's recommendation for a closed season of 10 years, I am glad that the question has been clearly presented and made a matter of record. It seems to be obvious to everyone that under the present system it is the one desire to serve the Government. If the right decision is made the public has the advantage, and if the wrong decision is reached the public must pay the price. I was interested, therefore, to have the matter clearly presented, and this has been done.

In my judgment sufficient weight had not been given to the question of our good faith. A reading of our negotiations must satisfy any unbiased mind that throughout our country has insisted that pelagic sealing is alone responsible for the depletion of the seal herds. This position was emphasized throughout the discussions during the convention over which I had the privilege to preside. That convention was held as a result of continued and most urgent requests on our part, and it is not too much to say that the consent of Great Britain, Japan, and Russia to the treaty was little short of a concession to our earnest request. While it is true that we reserved the right to order a closed season, it is equally clear that the compensation provided for Great Britain and Japan in such an event is in itself a recognition of a right on the part of these countries to a continued participation in the output of the seal herds. This provision was not inserted as an equivalent, but was intended as a guaranty that we would not arbitrarily deprive the other countries of their participation in the annual catch. This is emphasized by the further provision in article 10 that such restrictions may be imposed by us "as may seem necessary to protect and preserve the seal herd or to increase its number." This provision leaves no doubt that restrictions are not to be imposed arbitrarily, but only if in our judgment they are necessary to the preservation and the increase of the herd. Having taken the position throughout that pelagic sealing was the sole cause of the depletion, and having had no experience since the signing of the treaty to justify a change of policy, it appears to me that we are not in a position at this time to order a closed season in good faith.

It should be remembered also that further treaties with respect to other kindred subjects are still contemplated, and that a reversal of our position without sufficient reason must necessarily embarrass us in future negotiations with these and other countries.

Furthermore, it is to be regretted that a closed season at this time will prevent us from subjecting the question at issue to a conclusive test. With pelagic sealing stopped a few years of experience would have enabled the Government to determine once for all whether the preservation of all females and the killing of surplus males will result in the conservation of the herds. If a closed season is now ordered it will be difficult, if not impossible, to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion upon this question. A closed season for a long term of years is sure to discourage similar negotiations and, indeed, to put the seal treaty itself in jeopardy, whereas the adoption of a policy which has been advocated by every expert in and out of the service would give us the benefit of an actual test under the conditions upon which we have always insisted, and would leave Congress free to order a closed season at any time in case our experience demonstrates the incorrectness of that policy.

Again, it may not be improper to call attention to the fact that the payment of the stipulated amounts to Great Britain and Japan in the event a closed season is ordered would not represent the sole loss to us. In addition, we will lose an annual income of from $250,000 to $300,000, without figuring on the increase of the herds upon which we confidently count now that pelagic sealing has been suppressed. This loss is permanent, because the male seals that are not killed before they reach the age of five years are practically lost owing to the fact that after that age the fur is valueless.

I trust you will pardon me for adding one word as to some of the charges that were made on the floor of the Senate against the integrity of the service. It was stated, among other things, that the law of 1910 limits the killing to 3-year-old seals. This is not my understanding, nor do I believe that a careful reading of existing law will justify such an interpretation. The law of 1910 was drafted by the solicitor of this department under my supervision. It was not the purpose at that time, when pelagic sealing was still in vogue, to recommend such a restriction. No one in the department has ever understood that the law fixed a 3-year limit. On the contrary, it has been the accepted opinion that the statutory 1-year limit still obtains. By the rules of the department the limit was raised to 2-year-olds, and now since pelagic sealing has been stopped, and there is no longer danger of losing seals before they reach the most desirable age, I have in my last report recommended that the age for killing be restricted to 3-year-olds. I mention this fact because it was charged that those who are responsible for the administration upon the islands had disregarded the law. This is untrue. In killing seals under three years they acted in compliance with the rules of the department and under my instructions. Whatever responsibility there may be is mine, and I can not permit these criticisms to rest where they do not belong.

It was also said that at the time when the law of 1910 was under consideration it was understood that there would be a cessation of killing. All that I can say is that I was not a party to such an understanding. I did not create the impression by anything that I said or did, nor do I believe that it would have been proper for me to have had an understanding with members of the Senate committee about proposed legislation when that understanding was not conveyed either to the Senate or to the House or to the President, all of whom gave their consent to the law and were entitled to know the conditions upon which it was enacted. The law speaks for itself. It places the responsibility for the decision as to the killing or not killing with the Secretary, and I have exercised that discretion in the light of the best advice that it was possible to obtain. I did say that in making my decision I should be governed largely by the effect which that decision might have upon our chance to secure a treaty for the suppression of pelagic sealing. Conservation of the herds was regarded as the paramount purpose. Pelagic sealing was accepted by us as the sole cause of the depletion of the herd. The treaty to suppress pelagic sealing was our controlling purpose, and I did say that I would be governed in my decision by this consideration. This was done. Every step taken was approved by the State Department, which was then engaged in the negotiations, and the State Department was of the opinion that a cessation of killing would retard the progress of the negotiations rather than promote.

Finally, it has been said that seals have been illegally killed on the Pribilof Islands. For this statement there is, in my judgment, no justification. I have followed with care the administration upon these islands. I have visited the islands in person; have examined the returns; have instituted inquiries on this side and in England where the skins are sold; have personally interviewed members of the firm that sells the skins, and a member of the firm which has dyed nearly all Alaska skins for a long period of years. I say, without hesitation, that there is no foundation to the charge that any seal has been killed under the age of 1 year, which is the limit fixed by the statute. More than that, there is no foundation for the charge that seals have been killed under 2 years, which is the limit fixed by the rules of the department. This charge is not made by anyone, nor is it based upon the information of anyone who has ever seen one of the seals killed or one of the skins taken. It is not based upon the accounts rendered to this Government by its officers, or by the dealers or dyers in England where the skins are disposed of, but it rests upon descriptions of the ages of seals which have been arbitrarily inserted into these accounts by an outsider without reason, justice, or fact. The charge that female seals have been killed is likewise essentially untrue. It is true, and as to this I have made careful inquiry, that while the catch of the pelagic sealers is composed of about 80 per cent of female seals, the Alaskan seals which are taken on Pribilof Islands are, to all intents and purposes, composed exclusively of male seals. I am reliably informed that these facts are capable of positive proof.

There is no difficulty whatever in distinguishing the skin of a male seal from that of a female seal, and my advices are that during this administration the skins of female seals coming from the Pribilof Islands have constituted a negligible quantity. It is true that each year a few skins of female seals are included. In the nature of things this is unavoidable. The seal is a wild animal; the selection for killing must be left to experts and, in the nature of things, a few exceptional mistakes are registered every year. The necessity for this is so obvious that if any official undertook to tell me that no mistake ever occurred, I would not credit his statement.

In conclusion I want to say that the Commissioner of Fisheries has throughout done everything in his power to urge the wisdom of having pelagic sealing suppressed. More than that, he was the first, early in 1909, to call my attention to the fact that the sealing lease would expire in the following year and to advocate the discontinuance of that system. As a result of his recommendations to me communications with the State Department looking to a renewal of the negotiations for a treaty were had some time before this matter was agitated in other quarters. And while the department was bound under the law in force to make preparation for a possible new lease, its policy throughout was to advocate a discontinuance of that system and the taking over of the seal herds by the Government in order that those herds might be properly conserved and that the Government might be free from time to time to adopt that plan which appeared to be best calculated to promote the securing of a treaty between the four nations immediately involved, and afterwards to protect the herds.

Very sincerely, yours, CHARLES NAGEL, Secretary.

BILLS OF LADING.

Mr. CLAPP. Last week we arranged by unanimous consent for taking up this morning Senate bill 957, relating to bills of lading. Of course we reached the unfinished business before we got to that bill. I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday at the conclusion of the routine morning business the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 957) relating to bills of lading, such consideration, however, not to interfere with the consideration of appropriation bills or the reports of committees of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The suggested agreement will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Wednesday, August 21, 1912, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 651, the bill (S. 957) relating to bills of lading, such consideration, however, not to interfere with the consideration of appropriation bills or reports of committees of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the unanimous consent requested?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am dull about these requests and can not remember from time to time what the rule is. Will the consent just asked interfere with the unfinished business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not at all. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. HEYBURN. I would inquire what effect it would have on the special order just agreed to. It may be that that will be the day upon which its consideration will terminate and this special order would follow it. We make the unanimous consent agreement to take up another bill on that day and no exception is made in favor of the special order.

Mr. CLAPP. The special order will not come up until 12 o'clock if we meet at 10. This precedes that. It may not be reached, as it was not reached to-day. I do not wish in any way or in any manner to interfere with the special order.

Mr. HEYBURN. The special order might well have been mentioned as an exception.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CORBETT TUNNEL, SHOSHONE IRRIGATION PROJECT.

Mr. MYERS. I ask leave out of order to introduce a joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 134) appropriating money for the payment of certain claims on account of labor, supplies, materials, and cash furnished in the construction of the Corbett Tunnel was read twice by its title.

Mr. MYERS. I ask that the joint resolution be read, and I shall ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CUMMINS. What is the request?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That the joint resolution be read and considered.

Mr. MYERS. I suggest that the joint resolution be read, and then I will ask for the consideration of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the joint resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there be, and is hereby, appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States the sum of $42,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of, and to be paid to, those persons who have and hold and who have presented or may present claims remaining unpaid on account of labor, supplies, materials, or cash furnished to the contractor or the subcontractor in the construction of the Corbett Tunnel, as a part of the Shoshone irrigation project, in the State of Wyoming, under any contract or contracts let for that purpose by the Government of the United States, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to forthwith and, as soon as may be, investigate, hear evidence about, determine, and declare the several amounts due and remaining unpaid on account thereof, and to whom so due, and to order the same paid hereunder.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask if we were to enter upon the consideration of the joint resolution at this time, would it displace the unfinished business now before the Senate?

Mr. MYERS. I do not want to displace the unfinished business at all.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask that the joint resolution go over for a day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a joint resolution, and if it went over under the rule it would go to a committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Has the joint resolution passed the House, or is it a Senate joint resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a Senate joint resolution.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. A parliamentary inquiry. It is not necessary that the joint resolution should be referred to a committee. It could be acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It could be acted upon undoubtedly.

Mr. MYERS. I simply want to say that I do not see any object in referring the joint resolution to a committee. The matter which the joint resolution involves was considered for two days by the Senate practically in Committee of the Whole, and it was adopted and discussed up and down the line on both sides, and everything in relation to it, I think, both as to the law and the facts, was brought out. I do not see any use in referring the joint resolution to a committee. What would be the object? The Senate is informed about the facts of the matter, and that is the reason why I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the joint resolution should pass, it would simply be reaffirming the attitude taken by the Senate, would it not?

Mr. MYERS. In a different form. This would take the money out of the Federal Treasury and would not make it a tax on the lands which yet remain to be sold of the Shoshone irrigation project.

Mr. CUMMINS. I remember very distinctly that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], when the veto message was before the Senate, stated that he would be glad to support a direct appropriation in order to reimburse these people for their losses. I hope that he will not require it to go to a committee. All the facts are known.

Mr. SMOOT. I hardly understood the joint resolution when it was first read. It is an appropriation of $42,000?

Mr. MYERS. "Forty-two thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. SMOOT. In connection with the Corbett Tunnel. I shall not object to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution? There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to hear the last sentence of the joint resolution read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Under any contract or contracts let for that purpose by the Government of the United States, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to forthwith and as soon as may be investigate, hear evidence about, determine, and declare the several amounts due and remaining unpaid on account thereof, and to whom so due, and to order the same paid hereunder.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is the last sentence that attracted my attention. Of course, the Secretary of the Interior can make no order for the payment of money out of the Treasury. I think that might be eliminated and then it would be paid under the previous clause in the joint resolution.

Mr. MYERS. Then, I ask that the last clause about the Secretary directing the payment be stricken out.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not quite catch the objection of the Senator from Idaho. There will have to be some auditing officer in order to ascertain the amount to be paid.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not object to that part of the joint resolution authorizing the Secretary to audit and determine the amount, but only to the sentence that the Secretary shall order the money to be paid.

Mr. MYERS. I ask the Secretary to read the last clause, which relates to the Secretary ordering the pay.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The sentence to which the Senator refers will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to forthwith, and as soon as may be, investigate, hear evidence about, determine, and declare the several amounts due and remaining unpaid on account thereof, and to whom so due, and to order the same paid hereunder.

Mr. MYERS. I ask that all after the word "States" be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the words will be stricken out.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the provision be added that the Secretary of the Interior shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount due.

Mr. MYERS. I will ask that that be added, in the language of the Senator from Utah, at the end in lieu of what was stricken out.

Mr. HEYBURN. Still there is no provision directing the payment of the money. The joint resolution undertakes to make an appropriation, which is proper; then it authorizes an auditing—that is proper. Now, we should certify the result of the auditing. Then, the joint resolution should authorize, upon that certificate being filed, that the Treasurer be authorized to pay the money.

Mr. MYERS. I will ask that the exact words suggested by the Senator from Idaho be inserted. I ask that the words be added suggested by the Senator from Utah, and then the words suggested by the Senator from Idaho.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution as modified will be read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution as modified, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of the Treasury of the United States, the sum of $42,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of and to be paid to those persons who have and hold, and who have presented or may present claims, remaining unpaid, on account of labor, supplies, materials, or cash furnished to the contractor or the subcontractor in the construction of the Corbett Tunnel, as a part of the Shoshone irrigation project, in the State of Wyoming, under any contract or contracts let for that purpose by the Government of the United States, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to forthwith, and as soon as may be, investigate, hear evidence about, determine, and declare the several amounts due and remaining unpaid on account thereof, and to whom so due, and to certify the amounts due to the Secretary of the Treasury, who is hereby authorized to pay the several amounts so ascertained to the persons entitled to the same.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE PRESIDENTIAL TERM.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business, Senate joint resolution No. 78, may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

DONATION OF CANNON, ETC.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, in a few days a monument to the memory of Gen. Sullivan, of Revolutionary fame, will be unveiled in the State of New York. The committee in charge of the ceremonies aided in the introduction of a bill authorizing the Secretary of War to supply, in his discretion, certain unused cannon. The matter is provided for in the bill now on the calendar, Order of Business 921, House bill 24458. The bill has similar provisions respecting other States. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 24458) authorizing the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to deliver to certain cities and towns condemned bronze or brass cannon, with their carriages and outfit of cannon balls, and so forth.

The ceremonies that I speak of will occur in a few days, and I hope there will be no objection to the passage of the bill at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which he has stated. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have no objection to this one bill, but I hope we can get to the calendar again this evening. When we were last on the calendar we began at Order of Business 793. That left two pension bills that were not taken up during the last consideration, one a private pension bill containing only one name, and one omnibus bill still on the calendar. I hope after we get through with the bill which the Senator from New York has called up we may go to the calendar at least for the purpose of taking up these pension bills.

Also one bronze cannon at some place in Mississippi to be hereafter selected.

[Laughter.]

Mr. BACON. I hope I may be permitted to amend that by putting Georgia also in the same category. The place has not yet been selected, but I have no doubt it would like to have the cannon.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not believe there are cannon enough to go around, Mr. President. [Laughter.]

To the city of Atlanta, Ga., to adorn the State capitol grounds in that city, one condemned brass or bronze cannon, with suitable outfit of cannon balls.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Georgia give the Chair his attention? Did the Senator's amendment provide for one or two cannon?

Mr. BACON. Just as many as we may be permitted to secure. I think about four for the capitol grounds would be appropriate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There are four corners to the grounds. [Laughter.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

EDGAR ALLAN, JR.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (S. 7427) for the relief of Edgar Allan, jr.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the bill is not a long one.

Mr. SWANSON. It is a very short one.

Mr. SMOOT. I really think if we are going to the calendar we should begin at the beginning, but I shall not object to this bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to credit in the accounts of Edgar Allan, jr., postmaster at Richmond, Va., $17,788.30 for postal funds, postage stamps, and other stamped paper, on account of losses resulting from burglary March 27, 1910, now standing against him on the books of the Treasury Department.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF COPYRIGHT ACT.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 24224) to amend sections 5, 11, and 25 of an act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyrights," approved March 4, 1909.

Mr. OVERMAN. Under the notice given by the Senator from Utah——

Mr. O'GORMAN. There are certain reasons why the bill referred to by the Senator from New Jersey should be passed. It is unanimously recommended by the committee. There can be conceivable objection to it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It will cause no discussion. All parties in interest have agreed to the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I am fully aware of the provisions of the bill, and I have no objection to them. The only question is whether we ought to take up the bill out of its order on the calendar.

Mr. O'GORMAN. We have done that with several other matters on the calendar, with the consent of the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has heretofore been read.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES E. C. COVEL.

Mr. JONES. The other day when the bill (S. 7378) for the relief of James E. C. Covel was reached, it was passed over at the request of the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I have no interest in the bill except that I reported it, and I consider it one of the most meritorious bills of this kind we have ever had before the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If I had known at the time the facts, which have since been explained to me, I would not have objected.

Mr. JONES. I ask unanimous consent that we now proceed to the consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, James E. C. Covel, who was a second lieutenant of Company H, Sixteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably as a member of said company and regiment on the 14th day of April, 1865: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARRY S. WADE.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator before a vote is put upon that motion allow me to call up a claims bill (H. R. 15181)? It is a very appealing case. The beneficiary has lost both eyes and is deaf. It ought not to be postponed.

Mr. SMOOT. I expect that the calendar will be taken up——

Mr. CRAWFORD. There is an amendment to this bill which will require adjustment between the two Houses. It will not take five minutes to dispose of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the bill?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is a personal-injury claim where a man, a Government employee, has through accident lost his sight entirely and his hearing in part, and it is a very appealing case. The committee report an amendment and it will have to be adjusted between the two Houses.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall not object to this bill, but it will be 6 o'clock now within four minutes, and there ought to be some regular hours, and I shall object to any other request for unanimous consent after this bill is disposed of.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "one," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Harry S. Wade the sum of $1,500, in full compensation for injuries received by him on May 16, 1911, while in the performance of his duties as an employee of the United States Government, being a machine driller engaged in drilling holes for blasting in connection with the construction of the Celilo Canal, Columbia River improvement, at Big Eddy, Wasco County, Oreg.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

SEAMEN IN THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to make an inquiry about the bill (H. R. 23673) to abolish the involuntary servitude imposed upon seamen in the merchant marine of the United States while in foreign ports and the involuntary servitude imposed upon the seamen of the merchant marine of foreign countries while in ports of the United States, to prevent unskilled manning of American vessels, to encourage the training of boys in the American merchant marine, for the further protection of life at sea, and to amend the laws relative to seamen, which came to the Senate from the House, having passed the House, and was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

That bill has been struggling to get through Congress for 18 years, and I want, from the chairman of the Committee on Commerce or some other member of that committee, to ascertain whether there is any prospect of this bill receiving early consideration.

Mr. NELSON. As soon as that bill came to the Committee on Commerce, being a bill of considerable importance, it was referred to a subcommittee of five members. The subcommittee had it under consideration for a brief time and finally, at the last meeting of the committee, when there was not a quorum present, I was advised by the subcommittee that they were unable to dispose of it at this session. I see two members of the subcommittee present, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD], to give the Senator from Wisconsin some further information on the subject. My understanding was that the subcommittee felt that they could not dispose of the bill at the present session of Congress, and for that reason they were not ready to report to the full committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to inquire of the Senator from South Dakota, who is a member of the subcommittee, whether any action has been taken by the subcommittee looking to an early report on the bill?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will say that the bill did not reach the Senate until quite late in the session—only a few weeks ago. It was pending in the House for a long time. The subcommittee had a meeting and had some hearings. A representative of the seamen was heard one night and some of the representatives of the shipping interests were heard.

The bill, in its general features, I think I am safe in saying, we favor, but in its details there are very important questions involved, and it was so near the end of the session that after the hearing the subcommittee came to the conclusion that it would be impossible, on account of conditions in the Senate and the lateness of the time, to get it back in season for us to have a hearing in the Senate, and the subcommittee so reported to the committee last Thursday.

The subcommittee did decide that in the last week of November, before the regular session begins, it would give a week to the consideration of the bill; that the members of the subcommittee would come on here to Washington for that purpose, and the parties interested were to be notified in the meantime to present in a short, crisp way their objections to the bill, so that the committee might do effective work in considering it during the week preceding the beginning of the regular session, with a view to getting in a report early in the session, so that the bill might come up without any undue delay for disposition at the next session.

That is the situation in regard to it.

THE PANAMA CANAL (H. DOC. NO. 914).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Congress has passed a bill for the government of the Panama Canal when it shall have been completed, in section 5 of which it is provided that no tolls shall be levied upon vessels engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States. Under existing law no vessels but those of the United States can engage in the coastwise trade. The same bill provides for the imposition, within the discretion of the President, of tolls not exceeding $1.25 per net registered ton upon all other vessels using the canal.

In the debates in the House and Senate it was contended that this was a discrimination in favor of vessels of the United States in violation of the following provision of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty:

The canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations observing these rules, on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any such nation, or its citizens or subjects, in respect to the conditions or charges of traffic, or otherwise. Such conditions and charges of traffic shall be just and equitable. (Art. 3, sec. 1, p. 1904.)

After full examination of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty and of the treaty which preceded it, I feel confident that the exemption of the coastwise vessels of the United States from tolls and the imposition of tolls on vessels of all nations engaged in the foreign trade is not a violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. But distinguished lawyers in the House and Senate differ from this construction, and the Secretary of State has received an informal protest from the British Government that the contemplated legislation is a violation of her treaty rights.

The necessity for the enactment of the provisions of the bill looking to the maintenance and government of the canal I have already explained in a special message, and this necessity makes me anxious to sign the bill. On the other hand, the question of the foreign relations of the Government is one in respect of which the Executive has especial responsibility, and such a protest from a friendly government, supported as it is by the expressed views of distinguished Members of both Houses, invites the greatest care and the closest examination on our part of our rights under our treaties, with a view to preserving national honor and observing our solemn obligations.

I am sure that it is not the intention of Congress to violate the Hay-Pauncefote treaty or to enact anything inconsistent with its provisions, and that it certainly is not its purpose to repeal, by subsequent enactment, the treaty, in so far as it represents the law of the land. It is of the highest importance, however, that this attitude should be made clearly known to the nations of the world, and that we should avoid any apparent justification for criticism.

I suggest, therefore, that before the time has elapsed in which I am called upon to express approval or disapproval of this bill Congress consider the wisdom of passing a joint resolution of the following tenor:

That nothing contained in the act entitled "An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone," shall be deemed to repeal any provision of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, or to affect the judicial construction thereof, or in any wise to impair any rights or privileges which have been or may be acquired by any foreign nation under the treaties of the United States relative to tolls or other charges for the passage of vessels through the Panama Canal, and that when any alien, whether natural person, partnership, company, or corporation, considers that the charging of tolls or the enforcement of any other regulation under and pursuant to the provisions of this act violates in any way any such treaty rights or privileges, such alien shall have the right to bring an action against the United States for a redress of the injury which he considers himself to have suffered, and the district courts of the United States are hereby given jurisdiction to hear and determine such cases and to decree the appropriate relief, and from the decision of such district courts there shall be an appeal by either party to the action to the Supreme Court of the United States, or, in the alternative, that Congress recall the bill, and insert the foregoing as an amendment to the bill.

Unless some such clause is embodied in the law, it would probably be contended that the legislative construction of the treaty given by Congress in enacting the law is binding upon our courts when the question of the rights of aliens under the treaty comes before them. The foregoing provision would avoid such effect and would leave the matter entirely free to judicial construction, unaffected by the political decision of either the executive or legislative branch of the Government.

This language negatives absolutely any desire on the part of Congress to repeal the Hay-Pauncefote treaty or to violate its provisions by this legislation, and leaves open to any person who deems himself aggrieved by the provisions of the act an opportunity to appeal to our courts.

I think the importance of our standing before the world as anxious to give to the world an opportunity to test this question in the courts is an earnest of our good faith in attempting to keep within our treaty obligations.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 19, 1912.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 6 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, August 20, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, August 19, 1912.

The House met at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

As the heavens declare Thy glory, O God, our Father, and the firmament sheweth Thy handiwork; as day unto day uttereth speech and night unto night sheweth knowledge; as Thy love was poured out through the heart of the Christ unto the children of men, so may we reflect Thy glory and Thy love in life's daily duties and in our conduct toward our fellow men, and thus prove ourselves worthy of Thy love and care. In the spirit of the Master who died that we might live. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, August 17, 1912, was read and approved.

GRACE G. JACKSON.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged House resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 636 (H. Rept. 1210).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Grace G. Jackson, widow of the Hon. U. S. Jackson, late Sergeant at Arms of the House, a sum equal to six months of his salary as such an officer, and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, for the payment of funeral expenses.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

RICHARD C. COLLINS.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I also present the following privileged House resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 641 (H. Rept. 1211).

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House the sum of $500 to Richard C. Collins for clerical services rendered the Committee on Mileage in the payment and computing of the mileage of Members and Delegates.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this amount is usually paid to some officer in the office of the Sergeant at Arms. In this instance the work was performed by the clerk of the committee, and the payment is made to the clerk of the committee instead of to an officer in the Sergeant at Arms' office.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, what salary does the clerk of this committee now get?

Mr. LLOYD. He gets no salary. It is the Mileage Committee. The work is done by the clerk of the Mileage Committee instead of by Mr. Estey, as heretofore. Mr. Estey has performed the work of the clerk of the committee heretofore and has received $500 for it.

Mr. MANN. And the clerk of the committee receives no salary?

Mr. LLOYD. No salary.

Mr. MANN. Then the committee has no clerk?

Mr. LLOYD. The committee has no clerk.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Oh, I beg pardon, but the committee utilizes the private secretary of the chairman.

Mr. MANN. I am not speaking of that. The committee has no clerk.

Mr. LLOYD. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MICHAEL DOYLE.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I also present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 659 (H. Rept. 1209).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is authorized to pay Michael Doyle for services rendered as a Capitol policeman from May 1 to May 17, inclusive, 1911, $49.58.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSENGERS IN THE POST OFFICE.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I also present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 671 (H. Rept. 1208).

Resolved, That seven messengers in the post office of the House now authorized to be employed during the session may continue to be employed during the period between the adjournment of the present session and the beginning of the next session of Congress and be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, how many messengers do they have in the post office now?

Mr. LLOYD. They have 14 session messengers, and it has been customary heretofore to provide for the continuance of 7 of these session messengers during the vacation period. This is the usual resolution that has been adopted by the House every year.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Missouri yield me two or three minutes?

Mr. LLOYD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, while we are considering matters from the Committee on Accounts I would like to call the attention of the Committee on Accounts, or the attention of officers of the House, to a matter that I think requires attention.

The State of New Mexico was admitted into the Union on January 6 and the State of Arizona on February 14 of this year, although I find that the Congressional Directory, which was issued in April of this year, and which publishes a list of the Senators with the terms of their expiration, had not at that time discovered that fact, nor have the officers of the House discovered the fact. The law provides that when a State is admitted to the Union a new star shall be added to the flag on the 1st day of the following July, which would require the additional stars for these new States on the first of the new fiscal year, and yet every day I am obliged, in looking at the delightful countenance of the Speaker, to notice that the flag which hangs draped over his desk is minus the stars that ought to be added and which under the law are required to be added upon the 1st day of July. I hope that the Committee on Accounts and the officers of the House will provide a flag that is up to date.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. This is Unanimous Consent Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

SEMINOLE ALLOTTEES.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 23184) directing the Secretary of the Interior to deliver patents to Seminole allottees, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will make a suggestion to the Members about the Unanimous Consent Calendar, to expedite matters. This is a very long calendar, of six or seven pages. If any gentleman has resolutely made up his mind to object to a bill, he ought to do it when the title is announced, and not wait to consume time to have the bill read.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, if it will accommodate the Chair, I will object to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

The next bill has been passed, and the Clerk will call the next one.

INCREASING LIMIT OF COST OF CERTAIN PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 6688) to repeal section 13 of the act approved March 2, 1907, entitled "An act amending an act entitled 'An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes.'"

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 13 of an act entitled "An act amending an act entitled 'An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes,'" approved March 2, 1907, which authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to convey to the purchaser from the United States of square 1131, the south part of square 1117, and the squares south of squares 1123, 1148, and 1149, in the city of Washington, all the interest of the United States in the land lying south of the squares so purchased and between them and the channel of the Anacostia River upon the payment by such purchaser into the Treasury of the United States of such sum of money as the said Secretary of War, upon consideration of all the circumstances, shall determine proper to be paid for said land, and which authorizes and directs the surveyor of the District of Columbia to mark out such land and determine the areas and to record a plat thereof, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CONFEDERATE CEMETERY, LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 24365) providing for the taking over by the United States Government of the Confederate cemetery at Little Rock, Ark.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Confederate cemetery in Little Rock, Ark., and which adjoins the national cemetery at that place, having been tendered by proper authority to the United States Government, the same is hereby accepted, under the conditions that the Government shall take care of and properly maintain and preserve the cemetery, its monument or monuments, headstones, and other marks of the graves, its walls, gates, and appurtenances, to preserve and keep a record, as far as possible, of the names of those buried therein, with such history of each as can be obtained, and to see that it is never used for any other purpose than as a cemetery for the graves of men who were in the military or naval service of the Confededate States of America: Provided, That organized bodies of ex-Confederates or individuals shall have free and unrestricted entry to said cemetery for the purposes of burying worthy ex-Confederates, for decorating the graves, and for all other purposes which they have heretofore enjoyed, all under proper and reasonable regulations and restrictions made by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War, under this act, is directed to take the necessary steps for the proper transfer of the cemetery to the Government, and when the same has been duly completed, to put it in charge of the keeper of the national cemetery at Little Rock, Ark., requiring him to exercise the same care in the preservation, beautifying, and caretaking generally as is done in regard to the national cemetery; also that a suitable gate or entryway be made in the stone wall which now divides the two cemeteries so that persons may readily pass from one to the other. Whatever additional funds may be required for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act shall be paid out of any fund which may be available for the maintenance of national cemeteries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. I will withdraw my objection. The gentleman from Arkansas has agreed to changes in the form of section 1, and I move to strike out section 1 and offer the amendment agreed on, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out section 1 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to accept a conveyance to the United States of the Confederate cemetery at Little Rock, Ark., which adjoins the national cemetery at that place, and when so accepted the Government shall take care of and properly maintain and preserve the cemetery, its monument or monuments, headstones, and other marks of the graves, its walls, gates, and appurtenances, and preserve and keep a record, as far as reasonably practicable, of the names of those buried therein, with such history of each as can be obtained, and to see that it is never used for any other purpose than a cemetery for the graves of men who were in the military or naval service of the Confederate States of America: Provided, That organized bodies of ex-Confederates or individuals shall have free and unrestricted entry to said cemetery for the purpose of burying worthy ex-Confederates, for decorating the graves, and for all other purposes which they have heretofore enjoyed, all under proper and reasonable regulations and restrictions made by the Secretary of War."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question? There is a Union cemetery for the burial of Union soldiers there. What is the area? Does the gentleman know how much that is?

Mr. JACOWAY. I will state for the benefit of the gentleman from Illinois that I am unable to give that information, but I should think it was something like 15 or 20 acres, probably.

Mr. CANNON. Is it filled up?

Mr. JACOWAY. The Confederate cemetery?

Mr. CANNON. No; the Union cemetery.

Mr. JACOWAY. Fairly well.

Mr. CANNON. What is the area of that?

Mr. JACOWAY. I should think it is about similar to that of the Confederate cemetery.

Mr. CANNON. Is it filled with graves?

Mr. JACOWAY. Fairly well filled, I think.

Mr. CANNON. I think the bill is a very proper one. With the living dwelling together in the House and Senate and the courts, I do not know that there is any necessity for it, but if the other could be taken for a Federal cemetery, provided it was required for Union soldiers, or vice versa. I should have no objection to an amendment which would allow it.

Mr. JACOWAY. The bill as it now reads would provide only for the burial of the Confederate dead in the Confederate cemetery, and for the Federal dead, of course, in the Federal cemetery.

Mr. CANNON. This is long after the war. I should have no objection to the form of the bill, but the gentleman does not seem to know the area.

Mr. JACOWAY. I think there is ample room, both in the Federal cemetery and the Confederate cemetery. I do not think there is any question about that. I am quite sure this is true.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I think there is ample room in each to supply burial places for those entitled to be buried there, and the two cemeteries combined will be large enough to afford for future years ample room for the burial of veterans on both sides, separated just as they are now. I hope, therefore, there will be no objection, and that the bill will pass.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMS). The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. JACOWAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to trespass on the time of the House at this time, but I do want to say I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] for the graceful and kind expressions he has made in regard to this bill. [Applause, Democratic and Republican.]

Mr. Speaker, in presenting this bill, which provides for the taking over of the Confederate cemetery at Little Rock by the Federal Government, I trust I shall hear no voice raised in objection on either side of this Chamber. I hope no Member from the South will read into my intentions aught that could reflect in any way upon the cause our fathers loved and fought for; that no Member from the North will raise his voice to a single provision in the bill. A citizen of these United States, a Federal officeholder, and sworn by my oath of office to preserve and keep holy and inviolate the tenets of the Constitution, and at the same time a son of the South, and the old South, if you will, heir to her traditions and legatee to the things she loved, I can not feel that aught can be urged against this measure. In the South we do not believe that our brothers of the North hold rancor in their bosoms, nor that black waves of hate sweep through their hearts; we feel that the last vestige of bitterness was expunged from our minds by the Spanish fire at Santiago and San Juan Hill when North and South, brothers in arms, bore the Stars and Stripes to victory. It is such measures as these, Mr. Speaker, that I lay before this body, that are as balm of Gilead to the gaping wounds of war, if such be left as the result of that terrible conflict which broke the boughs of the tree of our national development between the years of 1861 and 1865. Forty-seven years ago the gallant and intrepid Lee laid down his arms at Appomattox to the brave and suffering Grant. Since then the mutating finger of time has pointed to numberless changes that have come and gone, and to-day, as we stand upon the isthmus of time that connects the past with the future, we live united, under one Government, under one flag, with a common language, a common goal, and a common God. The hot passions of fratricidal wrath have burned out in their own consuming flames, and, as we believe, Mason and Dixon's line is less than a "fast diminishing shadow." In this Chamber, where but some two score years and ten ago the murderous challenge and hot and stinging words swept back and forth, a representative of the South stands at the bidding and by the will of his people of the South and asks for the passage of a measure that will have as much to do, as I believe, in cementing an undying friendship between the North and the South as anything that could be done.

When the United States picked up the gantlet of Spain and the call went out for 100,000 men, no section of the country gave more gladly than the South. From the field and the forge and the forum, the arts, the sciences, and the professions, our young manhood went out at their country's call, and we point with pride to the fact that it was a southern man, if I recall my history correctly, commanding a gunboat named for a southern city, at whose command the first gun of the war was fired.

A southern man stood upon the bridge with Dewey at Manila when luster was added to American arms upon the high seas, and a southern man, an ex-Confederate, too, turned the tide when the day was all but lost at San Juan Hill, a gallant old cavalier who led the charge into the murk of parked artillery. Later, when he heard the distant call of taps and broke camp on earthly ground and laid down to peaceful dreams all that was mortal of Gen. Joseph Wheeler was laid to rest in Arlington, shrouded in the stars and bars of the Confederacy, intertwined with the folds of Old Glory, while multiplied thousands, North and South, mourned his passing. Peace to his ashes.

Each of the contending factions of the Civil War staked its life upon the justice of a principle. While I, who hail from the South, have abiding faith in the righteousness of the southern cause, I would not let fall unkindly from my lips this day one word that would reopen the old wounds of war or resurrect a cause that has long since been settled by the sword. Mine was the heritage of war. The South, returning bleeding from the red fields of carnage, found ashes where empire was, her fields in waste, her credit gone. But even before her bells had ceased to toll, her dead lying somewhere out beneath the stars upon her hillsides and her valleys, she gathered about her the shattered fragments of the past and built anew, and if "great she was in war sublime she has been in peace." Where soldiers trod her fields the plowshare bit; the screaming shrapnel found its echo in the whistle of the mill. In one year she has builded 4,500 miles of railway, has cut 13,000,000 feet of timber from her virgin forests, mined 4,000,000,000 tons of coal, has given $800,000,000 of wealth to our export trade, turned from her factories $3,000,000 of finished products, and as a fitting climax to her other multiplied and varied accomplishments added $2,000,000,000 to her real estate values. In the arts and the sciences and all professions and avocations, she has made progress commensurate with her other achievements. These facts, Mr. Speaker, write an eternal traverse upon the accusations of all who would criticise her unjustly.

In this connection it might not be amiss to mention in passing that State of the South which I have the honor in part to represent, Arkansas. In view of the ubiquity of the average American and the rapidity of present-day transit, it would be useless to exaggerate, and I shall keep to the facts of the case. Arkansas is the cosmopolitan among the States. With the gold of the Klondike she combines the diamonds of the Kimberly; with the rice of the Orient, the wheat of the West. The sugar cane and the apple grow side by side; the ostrich and the Leghorn hen. The millionaire of the East can find within her borders the iron to build his roads and the coal to stoke his engines; the Sultan of the Far East could deck his harem with her diamonds and pearls. The farmers of the whole world can purchase a tract of land and grow rich cultivating whatever crop they learned to grow in the old country. Her latchstring hangs on the outside of the door to those wanting and hungering for ideal homes and where the returns from an honest modicum of effort yield the greatest prosperity, blessings, and privileges that can be realized. To indicate, Mr. Speaker, what has been done within 10 years in my own congressional district, I beg leave to submit the following table of statistics:

Whether a hospitality and warm-heartedness such as is possessed by the people of Arkansas is incident to or resultant from the fertility of the soil I can not say, but I know that it exists without bound. When the reunion of the Confederate veterans was held in Little Rock, a city of but some 60,000 inhabitants, 116,000 guests were accorded royal entertainment. This reunion was Little Rock's and Arkansas's tribute to the grizzled old men in gray who followed without faltering or asking why the fortunes of a Lee and a Jackson, and all bade good-by to the City of Roses feeling that they had been entertained by the most graceful and generous of hosts and, as they said, carrying with them a wealth of beautiful memories that would linger so long as they should live. We are especially proud of the fact that of all the aged veterans who came singly and in camps not one but that was given shelter and food without cost, and in doing so Little Rock felt that she was thus being honored, and on her part it was an opportunity she had long coveted. Bivouacked with his comrades or taken into the homes of the citizens, he was given the best that could be had. His wants were attended. He was made welcome and made to feel that he was an honored guest. Each morning the fair daughters of the city pinned upon his lapel the fresh and fragrant emblem of the City of Roses. Not alone was the old soldier of the South made to feel that the city was his, here and there shone the gold wreath and hat cord of the Grand Army of the Republic, and the soldier of the South and the soldier of the North fought again in perfect amity the battles of the past.

Such, Mr. Speaker, is the condition to-day. The war is long since over. Side by side upon the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States sit the ex-Confederate and the ex-Federal. Side by side in the tableted ranks at Arlington lie soldiers of the North and soldiers of the South. Some years since, when the present minority of this House was in power, money was appropriated to mark the graves of the Confederate soldiers who died in northern prisons. A member of the commission who had that work in charge is former Senator James H. Berry, of Arkansas, a Member of the Senate for 22 years, twice governor of our great Commonwealth, and an ex-Confederate soldier who left a limb on the field of Corinth. Money has been appropriated to erect a memorial stone to the Confederate dead at Arlington at Federal expense, and a portion of the National Cemetery has been set aside for a Confederate burying ground. With loving hands the name of Jefferson Davis, one time Secretary of War of the United States, and President of the Confederacy, was carved back upon the masonry of Cabin Johns Bridge from whence it had been stricken years ago.

This Nation, Mr. Speaker, has learned its lesson in the school of war. The sentiment "Let us have peace" did not die on the lips of him who gave it utterance, but still reechoes in the hearts of men throughout the world. For our great country may it be said:

No more shall the war cry sever,
Nor the winding rivers be red.
They banish our anger forever
When we laurel the graves of our dead.
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Under the roses the blue,
Under the lilies the gray.

EXCHANGE OF LAND FOR SCHOOL SECTIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25738) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange lands for school sections within Indian, military, national forest, or other reservations, and for other purposes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, the same bill has passed the Senate and is now upon the Speaker's table, and I want to ask unanimous consent that the House bill——

Mr. MANN. Oh, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman knows I will object to that. I thought the gentleman was going to ask to have it postponed.

Mr. RAKER. Would not the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the right to object, although a bill that has been up as often as this one has, and with as many other bills on the calendar, it does not seem necessary to take up so much time. I am going to object to it unless it is passed over.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, let me make the request on the matter.

Mr. MANN. I do not think that is the proper thing to do.

Mr. RAKER. Let me make my request. The gentleman may not object to it inasmuch as it is so modest and fair. The Senate having passed the same bill, which is now on the Speaker's table, I ask unanimous consent that the bill—H. R. 25738—which is the same as the Senate bill, be laid aside and that the House take up the bill S. 5068.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The bill will be stricken from the calendar, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DENVER, COLO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3974) to increase the limit of cost of the United States public building at Denver, Colo.

The bill was read in full.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be passed without prejudice.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DUBLIN, GA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 17683) to increase the limit of cost for the post-office building heretofore authorized at Dublin, Ga.

The bill was read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will say that in the report in this case there is no report from the department, no statement of the limit of cost of the building, no information concerning Dublin, no reason why the betterments referred to were not covered in the contract——

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say to the gentleman that there was appropriated for this building something like $60,000. The contract has been let, but owing to the fact that it could not be completed for the amount appropriated it was necessary to leave out a number of things which should have been included, such as subdrainage, waterproofing, and interior improvements. The Supervising Architect appeared before the committee and recommended this amount. The amount asked is only $8,000, and the committee thought it was meritorious and was entitled to the favorable consideration of the committee. It is an emergency case. I hope the gentleman will not object. The bill is one offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRANTLEY].

Mr. MANN. I would like to inquire of him whether the Treasury Department has sent a letter to the committee asking for the passage of it?

Mr. ASHBROOK. The Supervising Architect appeared before the committee and recommended the amount, and I believe the chairman of the committee also had a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. And now the Supervising Architect finds a condition which he did not create. As I understand it, the public-building bill authorized a building at Dublin at $60,000.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I believe it was $56,000.

Mr. MANN. Whatever it is. Therefore they proceeded to make plans which involved larger sums.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Eight thousand dollars.

Mr. MANN. And they left out some of the essential features of the building. Having done that, they come to Congress and say they can not complete their building or plans without more money. Does the gentleman think that is any different than providing for a new building at some place? Why should not these matters wait until we have a general public-building bill?

Mr. ASHBROOK. The gentleman from Illinois will understand that a contract has been let and the work is now going on. The contract was let without the inclusion of these things that the Treasury Department recommends should go in, to wit, subdrainage and the waterproofing, and the interior was cheapened very much.

Mr. MANN. Those are essential features of a proper building, are they not?

Mr. ASHBROOK. They certainly are.

Mr. MANN. Then why has not the Treasury Department included them in the contract?

Mr. ASHBROOK. The gentleman will have to ask the Treasury Department about that. We found the condition to exist which I have stated.

Mr. MANN. I know; but the gentleman has presented no report coming from the Treasury Department. That is what I want from the Treasury Department.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The report says that the Supervising Architect recommended these pressing additions.

Mr. MANN. Yes; the present Supervising Architect; but he is new, and he finds the condition named. I think we have the right to insist that that department as a department shall assume responsibility in the matter and state to us why it has disregarded the provisions of the act of Congress fixing the limit of cost upon the building. Until they have made some statement in that respect I shall be compelled to object.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman withhold his objection until the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRANTLEY] can be present.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to passing the consideration of the bill without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] asks unanimous consent that the consideration of the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

UNIFORM CHARGES FOR COPIES OF INTERIOR DEPARTMENT RECORDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25437) to make uniform charges for furnishing copies of the records of the Department of the Interior and of its several bureaus.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know who has charge of this bill, but there is a similar Senate bill over here somewhere.

Mr. RAKER. That is what I was thinking. We did not have the time to get the Senate bill.

Mr. MANN. I suggest that the gentleman ask that the House bill be passed over temporarily until the Senate bill can be got.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the consideration of the House bill be passed over temporarily until we can obtain the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CLAYTON. I do not object to passing over the bill temporarily, but I do not understand that all of the Members who are interested in this Unanimous Consent Calendar must give way until the gentleman can get to it. If this bill goes to the heel of the docket, I am perfectly willing.

Mr. MANN. That would not be fair, Mr. Speaker, to other Members, because we can pass the House bill now, and it would take no longer, an hour from now, to pass the Senate bill when it comes over than it would take to pass the House bill now.

Mr. CLAYTON. Very well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be passed over temporarily.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the next bill.

CONSTRUCTION OF DAMS ACROSS VARIOUS NAVIGABLE WATERS OF THE UNITED STATES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25882) to authorize the construction of certain dams across various navigable waters of the United States therein specified.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve the right to object.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I understand that gentlemen have endeavored to reach an agreement about this bill. It may be perfectly satisfactory, but I have not seen it yet.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will yield for a moment, I will say that we are on the verge of arriving at an agreement between all the parties concerned on every phase of the issue. Therefore, rather than waste time now in talking on a reservation of a point of order, I ask unanimous consent that we be allowed to take up the bill later in the day if we complete the agreement. If so, we do not want to waste time on it now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We could consider it at any time.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of such a tremendously important bill at any time the gentleman desires to take it up.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I do not want to take advantage of anybody.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the request is not for consideration at any time, but for unanimous consent, and unless it meets the approval of the gentleman from Wisconsin I shall object. I shall object here.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I object to bringing up such tremendously important legislation under these circumstances at the tail end of a long session like this.

Mr. ADAMSON. Then the gentleman objects to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. COOPER. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next one.

DAM ACROSS THE COOSA RIVER, ALA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25881) to authorize the building of a dam across the Coosa River, Ala., at a place suitable to the interests of navigation, about 7½ miles above the city of Wetumpka.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, there are a number of dam bills here. I think they ought to take the same course.

Mr. COOPER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will read the next bill.

DAMS ACROSS THE CLINCH RIVER, TENN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25238) authorizing and permitting M. C. McCanless, W. C. Hale, W. H. Mullins, John Loop, and E. M. Grant, their successors and assigns, to build and maintain dams and water-power development in and across Clinch River, in Grainger, Claiborne, and Hancock Counties, State of Tennessee.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will read the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS PENOBSCOT RIVER, ME.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 6763) to authorize the cities of Bangor and Brewer, Me., to construct or reconstruct, wholly or in part, and maintain and operate a bridge across the Penobscot River, between said cities, without a draw.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of Bangor and the city of Brewer, both being municipal corporations organized under the laws of the State of Maine and located in the county of Penobscot, on opposite sides of the Penobscot River, in said State of Maine, and the successors in interest of said cities, are hereby authorized to construct and reconstruct, wholly or in part, upon plans to be approved by the Secretary of War, and maintain and operate a bridge and necessary and convenient approaches thereto and abutments and piers therefor across and in said Penobscot River, substantially in the location of the present highway bridge between said cities, without having or constructing any draw or other means therein for the passage of navigation or shipping other than what may pass between the approaches and piers and under the spans of such bridge as the same may be constructed or reconstructed.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSTER. I see this bill does not provide for a draw to be put in. This is not a navigable stream? Is that true?

Mr. ADAMSON. I suppose so. I am not very familiar with the locality.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will say to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] that I have made myself familiar with this bill. The river is a navigable stream above the point of this bridge for the course of a few hundred feet. The river is not navigated, however, and there is no occasion for its navigation, and there is no one there objecting to fixing a permanent bridge there.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand the gentleman to say that this is not a navigable river except for a very short distance above the bridge?

Mr. MANN. A trifling distance.

Mr. FOSTER. Beyond that there is no navigation and no commerce?

Mr. ADAMSON. This is a reconstruction of an old bridge. It is not a new proposition. There is a draw in the present bridge, but it is never opened and nobody is kept there to open it.

Mr. FOSTER. Why is it that the bridge is not built under the general bridge act?

Mr. ADAMSON. The local conditions are such that the people said they did not need a draw, and there was no occasion to use it.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not proposed to be built so that the general bridge act will apply?

Mr. MANN. No; it is like building a bridge across a nonnavigable stream.

Mr. FOSTER. There are no regulations as to tolls because, I suppose, there is no prospect of there ever being any commerce.

Mr. MANN. It is a city bridge and there are no tolls.

Mr. FOSTER. Sometime it might go out of the hands of the city into the hands of private parties.

Mr. MANN. No; there is no more danger of that than there is that the streets will go out of the possession of the city. This is a part of the highway.

Mr. ADAMSON. The city maintains a dam above the bridge, and provision is made for sluicing the logs and lumber; there is no other navigation.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman from Georgia answer a question?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will answer it in some way.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Has the Government expended any money in the improvement of the river beyond the point where this bridge is to be built?

Mr. ADAMSON. If it has, we have not discovered it. This is the bill of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. GOULD]. He took charge of it and carried it through the committee, and what facts I know about it I derived from him and from the report.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The reason I asked the question was simply to give another illustration of the fact that it is undesirable for one committee to provide for the improvement of rivers and still another committee of the House authorized to report bills such as this one that will permanently obstruct further navigation of the river, and when, as a matter of fact, the chairman of the committee does not know whether the river is under improvement by the Federal Government or not.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Mississippi is unfair to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that this proposition involves another attempt further to invade the jurisdiction of our committee, nor do I mean to say that the personnel of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is superior to that of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors when it comes to going around over the country and learning about rivers. I admit that we have not the facilities for traveling over the country making the investigations and looking over bridges to justify us in scrutinizing all the details as the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors do, but when gentlemen come before us and make statements about local conditions, we act on them unless contradicted, and if the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] should come before us and make a statement of the local conditions in his district I think we would believe him and I think he would admit we would do right in doing so.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Absolutely, but the only point I made was that, in the interests of harmony in legislation about such matters, they ought to be taken care of by one committee.

Mr. MANN. Let me suggest to the gentleman that as a matter of fact the Government has never made any improvement of this river above the bridge, so I do not see what the Committee on Rivers and Harbors would know about it if they had jurisdiction.

Mr. ADAMSON. It has taken them a long time to find out about it if they ought to improve it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. But they would know the fact that it had not been improved and whether they are to undertake the improvement of the river.

Mr. ADAMSON. There is another good illustration, inasmuch as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] is in the illustration business. He asks so many questions about it and manifests the entire absence of information or local knowledge on the subject, it appears that the River and Harbor Committee would not have attended to it any better than we have done because they have not learned anything about it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DAM ACROSS THE CURRENT RIVER.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25592) authorizing the construction, maintenance, and operation of a dam or dams across the Current River, in Ripley, Carter, and Shannon Counties, for the purposes of improving navigation and the development of water power.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I understood the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] to say that he wasn't willing for these bills to remain on the calendar.

Mr. COOPER. I supposed that all the dam bills were on the calendar together, and I did not hear this one read.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have asked to have the bill passed without prejudice and let it remain on the calendar.

Mr. COOPER. I want to be perfectly fair; I object to the passage of any dam bills at this late hour in the session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

BRIDGE ACROSS KINGSTON LAKE AT CONWAY, S. C.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 6777), an act to authorize the board of county commissioners of Horry County, S. C., to construct a bridge across Kingston Lake at Conway.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the board of county commissioners of Horry County, S. C., be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a steel or wood bridge across Kingston Lake at Conway, S. C., at such a point as may be determined by the said board of county commissioners, and approved by the Secretary of War, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

The following committee amendments were read:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the words "steel or wood."

In line 6, page 1, strike out the word "such."

Lines 7 and 8, page 1, strike out the words "as may be determined by the said board of county commissioners and approved by the Secretary of War," and insert in lieu thereof the words "suitable to the interests of navigation."

Add at the end a new section, "SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or appeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER, OMAHA, NEBR.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25282) to authorize the Union Pacific Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Union Pacific Railroad Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Utah, and its assigns, be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near the city of Omaha, in the county of Douglas, in the State of Nebraska, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I observe by the report of the Chief of Engineers, Gen. Bixby, that he does not give his approval for the enactment of this legislation.

Mr. ADAMSON. He does, conditionally. He wants to know the reason it is necessary to build another bridge there.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that, and he says he does not see the necessity for an additional structure. Of course a bridge like this proposed and the other that is located there are obstructions to navigation. I have read the statement of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK] and also the statement of the general solicitor of the railroad and others at Omaha, Nebr.; but I observed these matters stated in this report, and, so far as I know, it is all right; but the question of navigation at that particular point ought to be taken into consideration. I do not know whether the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS], who is on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, has looked into the matter or not.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, we realized that it was a matter for consideration, and we gave it mature consideration.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, I have no doubt of that.

Mr. ADAMSON. And we also realized that there ought to be as few bridges as possible over navigable rivers. The Chief of Engineers raised that question, as to why it was necessary for vessels on a navigable stream to be compelled to contend with additional bridges. We therefore investigated the question and had it answered to our satisfaction. One answer is that the old bridge has to be repaired and must give place to a new bridge before long. There is a dangerous curve at one end of the bridge, and when the bridge is rebuilt it is desirable to rebuild it along straight lines, and as they complete the new one they will begin to disuse the old one. Another is that the traffic is so much congested at that point that the old bridge for the next few years will be insufficient to accommodate the traffic. It is a high bridge, where the banks of the river are very high. It is too high to interfere with passing boats.

Mr. SPARKMAN. What was the nature of Gen. Bixby's report?

Mr. ADAMSON. The only question that he raised was why it was necessary to put an additional bridge over the stream. If the same statement had been made to Gen. Bixby that was made to the committee, he would not have asked that question.

I now yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK].

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, I only desire to state that the first bridge for the Union Pacific Railroad was constructed in 1869—a single-track bridge. A double-track bridge in its place was constructed in 1887. The depot arrangements had to be changed in 1896 or 1897 on account of the increased traffic. All of the eastern and western lines cross at this point except the Illinois Central, which crosses at a bridge 2 miles farther north. A train crosses this present bridge now every five minutes. More trains cross this bridge daily than cross the Eads Bridge in St. Louis. There is an immense amount of travel, and the city of Omaha is growing very rapidly and traffic increasing daily.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOBECK. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I see by the report in this case, accompanying the bill, that it is stated there are over 300 trains a day pass over this bridge.

Mr. LOBECK. Yes; over the present bridge.

Mr. MANN. And that as a result trains are frequently delayed for half an hour.

Mr. LOBECK. Yes; and sometimes last winter for two and three and four hours.

Mr. MANN. And that is the reason they desire a new bridge.

Mr. LOBECK. They wish to build a four-track bridge to accommodate the travel.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOBECK. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it not true that it is the experience of those who frequently cross the river at this point that trains are very frequently delayed?

Mr. LOBECK. Yes, sir.

Mr. MONDELL. There is very often a very considerable delay in crossing this present bridge with the transcontinental trains. I know that personally I have had that experience many times, due to the congestion of traffic across this single-track bridge.

Mr. LOBECK. When this bridge that is now located there was constructed there was a station, called the old Union Pacific shed, about a block south of the present Union Station. It was necessary to get more room, and so the new Union Station was so located that it compels a curve to get to the station; trains must move slowly, and it is necessary to have a bridge in a direct line from station across the river to promote safety in travel. It is necessary to accommodate travel to have a four-track bridge. It will be a high bridge, and therefore no obstruction to navigation. There should be no objection to this measure.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Georgia a question?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The gentleman from Georgia says that Gen. Bixby's objections were finally overcome.

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes. We met his objection fully; otherwise we never would have reported the bill.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The committee considered fully the question of navigation?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Whether the bridge in any shape would be an obstruction?

Mr. ADAMSON. We found it was not only an absolute necessity, but that it would not add to the difficulties of navigation, being very high above the water; that it would in a few years after completion cause the removal of the old bridge; and that the old bridge at the present time is dangerous on account of its method of construction—because of those curves at the approaches.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EFFICIENCY IN GOVERNMENT SERVICE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25634) to promote efficiency in the Government service.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no officer, agent, clerk, or other employee of the United States Government who holds his or her position by virtue of appointment shall, during the term of such appointment or employment, be or become an accredited delegate of any political party to any national convention held or to be held by such political party for the purpose of nominating a candidate or candidates for the offices of President and Vice President of the United States or President or Vice President of the United States.

SEC. 2. That no officer, agent, clerk, or other employee of the United States Government who holds his or her position by virtue of appointment shall, during the term of such appointment or employment, hold or occupy any official position in any national branch of any political organization organized or constituted for the purpose of influencing, or attempting to influence, in two or more States the nomination or selection of such candidates or candidate.

SEC. 3. That every such officer, agent, clerk, or employee offending against either of the provisions of the two foregoing sections shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined not exceeding $500, and also shall be summarily discharged from the service of the United States Government.

SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect from and after the date of its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and I would like to have the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I do not see the chairman of the committee [Mr. GODWIN] on the floor. If I can give any information, I should be very glad to do so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In section 2 the bill provides that no officer, agent, clerk, or other employee of the Government who holds his or her position by virtue of appointment shall, during the term of such appointment or employment, hold or occupy any official position in any national branch of any political organization, and so forth. I notice it refers to one who holds office by appointment. I have had some small concern with regard to some gentlemen upon the other side, notably the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE], who happen to be chairman and secretary of a very aggressive national organization. I am wondering whether the gentleman feels that those two gentlemen in their official capacity would in any way be liable to the punishments that are imposed by this bill?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is serious in propounding that inquiry or not; but assuming that he is, I will say that this is simply a proposition to extend the civil service to a certain extent, and it is not contemplated by this or in the original civil-service law that an elective officer or elective officials, who deal directly with the people and are amenable to the people, would come within the provisions of the civil-service law of 1883 or any amendment thereto.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The bill refers to officers of the Government of the United States, and I would assume that Members of Congress were officers of the Government of the United States.

Mr. HULL. Appointive officers, the bill specifies.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then it is the opinion of the gentleman that the officers of a national political organization to which I referred are not amenable to the punishment imposed by this act.

Mr. HULL. Unquestionably. This bill does not attempt and no part of the civil-service law now attempts to govern or limit the conduct of any official who may be elected by the people—only those appointed to the service of the Government.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That question having been answered, I should like to put another concerning the merits of the bill: Whether the gentleman thinks that an employee of the Government of the United States should be disqualified from taking an interest in politics simply because he is a servant of the Government?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I will say, in reply to the last question of the gentleman, that this bill does not restrict the political activities of any appointive official to whom it would apply nearly to the extent that the present civil-service law restricts the political activities of those who come within the range of that law. This only goes to the extent of prohibiting those who are appointed to official position from becoming candidates for delegate to a national convention and from becoming delegates to such convention or from becoming members of the national branch of any national political organization. I recall that in 1904 about 187 marshals, district attorneys, internal-revenue collectors, postmasters, and other appointive officials from one small tier of States became active candidates for delegates to a national convention. The result was that their subordinate force, comprised largely of officials under the civil service, were stirred to more or less political activity in a quiet way and the service in many instances was largely demoralized and impaired. These gentlemen not only became candidates, but they were successful and became delegates. Four years later I remember that this number jumped to 220. Now, we realize the fact that it brings about trade and traffic among individuals and minor officials with respect to appointments; it brings about an utter demoralization in the service, and it affects——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. Announcing myself in sympathy with the purposes of the gentleman's bill, would the gentleman be willing to have it amended so as to have it say that Government employees or officers shall not participate in any convention of a political party of any kind whatever, as those in the classified service are now prohibited?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was going to ask the gentleman whether the civil-service laws were not now sufficient to meet the point he makes?

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman believe that the bill, if enacted into law, would be a construction by Congress that the present rules of the Civil Service Commission forbidding activity on the part of employees established by Congress would be construed as forbidding political activity only as relating to national conventions?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois I would say this: That from my viewpoint this bill would not antagonize the present civil-service regulations nor modify the present civil-service laws. It only adds to them. Now, under existing regulations and laws, appointive officials whose conduct has brought about the necessity, as I conceive it, for the enactment of this bill, were in the habit, without interfering with the regulations of the Civil Service Commission or the present civil-service laws, of becoming candidates and going to national conventions as delegates.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is seeking to apply the law to those not in the classified service, but the bill contemplates both those in and out of the classified service. Now, if in the classified service to-day there is a prohibition against it, and thereupon Congress proceeds to enact a law forbidding one of these things by positive enactment, it is practically to give notice that the other is permitted unless in the classified service. I am willing to go with the gentleman to any extent he wishes to go forbidding Government employees taking part in politics. I think the gentleman's bill would have the other effect.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman allow me one question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HULL. Would it not, in the judgment of the gentleman, meet his objection by inserting a slight amendment to this effect, "except those appointive officials or employees not already prohibited from becoming delegates to a national convention or members of a national committee"?

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that when the bill comes up before the House I have nine different amendments to offer to it, and I am afraid it would take too long to consider it on unanimous-consent day, although I am willing to take it up for consideration.

Mr. HULL. I hope the gentleman will allow the matter to come up now.

Mr. MANN. I think it would mean debate for half a day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman finally expresses himself upon the matter, I wish to say, in view of the lateness of the session and of the importance of this bill—I held it up until after the conventions were held so that I would not be in the attitude of seeming to appear to take any interest in the candidacy of any gentleman—I wish to appeal to the wisdom and the statesmanship and the patriotism and, if necessary, to the generosity of the gentleman from Illinois to withhold his objection and allow us to have the present consideration of the bill, and these amendments can be offered in their order.

Mr. MANN. It is very certain it will take considerable time. The Committee on Rules can bring in a rule making this bill in order at any time. It only applies to national conventions. They have all been held, and there will be plenty of time to consider it before any other national convention is held, though I hope it will be made to apply to State conventions, and county conventions, and municipal conventions, so that the employees may be entirely dissociated from political government.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman go further and prohibit their voting?

Mr. HULL. This bill does not remotely contemplate anything of that kind.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there is a broader question here than the right of the officeholder to vote. He ought to vote, and if an officeholder does not vote he is unworthy of the office he holds. If he does not vote he ought to be put out of office.

Mr. HULL. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will go further than the gentleman and say that I believe the majority placed in power by the people should rule, and it makes no difference whether it is President Taft or Gov. Wilson who is elected President of the United States—although I expect Mr. Taft will be—those who serve under Taft or Wilson should be loyal to the policy of their chief.

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I have no purpose of cutting off officeholders from voting in the coming election or in any other election if that is the cause of his objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In my judgment those who should display the largest intelligence in political matters are those who hold political places. I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I withhold the objection.

Mr. ADAMSON. I would like to ask him in connection with his statement that Mr. Taft will be elected, if it does not remind him of the Scripture:

I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel.

[Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There seems to be less faith on the other side of the House than on this.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] insist on his objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DENVER, COLO.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, even in view of what is likely to happen I ask unanimous consent to refer back at this time to the bill S. 3974, an act to increase the limit of cost of the United States public building at Denver, Colo., in which bill my two colleagues are directly interested, and which now falls upon me by reason of the fact they are necessarily absent and that I am the only Member of the delegation present. It was reached and passed over before I arrived this morning——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] asks unanimous consent to go back to the bill S. 3974, which has already been reported. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I have no objection to going back on the same status.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Certainly. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will make just as brief a statement as possible consistent with an outline of the facts as I may, and I wish to say that I am not as familiar with this bill as my two colleagues, both of whom have similar bills now pending in the Senate. I want to say, in the first place, that this does not present any partisan question, while a rather large sum of money is involved, owing to the fact that the bill has already been introduced and passed through the Senate by our Republican Senator, Mr. GUGGENHEIM, and the same measure has been introduced into the House by Mr. RUCKER, who represents the district in which lies the city of Denver, and by Mr. TAYLOR, our Representative at Large.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to returning to this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] does not object to returning to the bill, but reserves the right to object to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not put the other question yet. Does the gentleman reserve his right to going back to it?

Mr. MANN. I have no objection if it is subject to objection after going back to it.

The SPEAKER. Of course it is.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I will say that while I am not as familiar with the facts involved in the Denver public building as my colleague, I have taken sufficient interest in the question to go to the trouble of carefully reading and marking the hearings before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. And the facts appear to be these, briefly: The Denver public building was originally estimated to cost $2,000,000.

It was authorized at a limit of cost of $1,600,000. Thereafter a controversy arose with reference to the character of the material to be used in that building. I believe it was originally proposed to construct the building of Indiana limestone, but later on there was a strong demand to change the material to Colorado marble, which is a very beautiful and an entirely suitable character of material. I think I can safely say that anyone who will have the pleasure of seeing the Denver public building will say that it is a thing of beauty as well as of substance and that no mistake was made in changing the material from Indiana limestone to Colorado marble.

It appears to be claimed—and there has been some confusion in regard to that in the hearings—that the new material will prove to be more expensive. The pending bill is to increase the limit of cost by $400,000, so that it will cost $2,000,000, as first estimated. It is claimed that this increase of cost is necessitated by the change of material from Indiana limestone to Colorado marble. But the hearings do not bear out that claim, for this reason: It appears that it was ascertained, after the plans were drawn, that the building would have to be considerably enlarged. For instance, there was a circuit court of appeals established in Denver after the plans were originally drawn, which necessitated the making of provision for additional quarters. It was also apparent, through the rapid growth of Federal functions and activities in relation to the public domain and its natural resources, and so forth, that other quarters were necessary, so that the cubical content of the building was increased from 3,100,000 cubic feet, as originally estimated, to 3,900,000, an increase of 800,000 cubic feet in the size of the building, or an increase of between 20 and 25 per cent.

Now, the cost of this building per cubic foot is about 50 cents, so that both the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department and the architect of the building say that the increase in size alone of the Denver public building necessitated an increase of $400,000 in the cost of construction. In other words, the entire additional cost asked for, to wit, $400,000, would be absorbed by virtue of the increase of the cubical content or size of the building.

Now, I think that we can agree upon this proposition: That the money heretofore expended has been wisely expended; that the increase in cost is something for which our State can not be held primarily responsible, because it was necessitated by the enlarged and changed conditions which confronted the Supervising Architect of the Treasury when he began to construct this building. But, Mr. Speaker, the point that I wish to emphasize to gentlemen is the present condition of this building and the consequences that will result if this extension of the limit of cost is not now allowed.

In the first place, if the architect were to be compelled to proceed under the present appropriation, what will happen? I am going to quote, not from the architect of the building, but from the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, or his representative, Mr. Oscar Wenderoth, who was asked this question:

Mr. BURNETT. Now, let me hear a little more about your interior finish. What kind of interior finish can you make with $300,000?

Mr. WENDEROTH. It won't be very gorgeous.

Mr. BARNHART. Will it be substantial—fireproofed?

Mr. WENDEROTH. I think so, but I don't think it can be fireproofed properly. There will be considerable very cheap wood.

Mr. Wenderoth also says, in a written statement that is incorporated in the hearing:

That the necessity of an increased appropriation is wholly due to the size of the building and is not caused by an architectural elaboration is shown by the following comparison based on the cost per cubic foot. We would call to your attention that the cubage of the competition drawings was 3,106,504 cubic feet, and that the cube of the building as being built, taken from the working drawings, approved by the Government, is 3,700,000 cubic feet, exclusive of approaches.

He then goes on to point out the results that I have already mentioned.

Let me put this proposition before you, gentlemen, that the Supervising Architect of the Treasury says that the building can not be fireproofed properly, and that there will be considerable very cheap wood in it unless the limit of cost is enlarged. In addition, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds reported as follows:

The bill was considered by a subcommittee of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the United States Senate, which interviewed the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department and ascertained that the Denver public building could not be finished, except in the most ordinary way, within the limit of cost fixed by law; that to finish the building without increasing the limit of cost would cause the interior work and finish to be so out of harmony with the exterior of the superstructure as to render the interior incongruous, unsightly, and less useful in some respects.

The contracting architect stated to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House of Representatives that the increased appropriation was necessitated partly by reason of the fact that the United States court of appeals had been located there since the formal authorization for the building, which necessitated quite an enlargement of the building, and, in addition to that, it became apparent that the building should be considerably enlarged over what was originally contemplated on account of the tremendous increase in the various branches of the Government business being conducted there.

Now, the question is whether Congress wants its money expended in the way the hearings and report indicate, and a great, beautiful public building in one of the large cities of the United States finished in such a defective manner. Mr. Edgerton Swartwout, the architect of the building, says somewhere, and I think very properly, that the interior woodwork will all have to be torn out, and in the very near future this work will have to be done over again if it should be done in the way in which it is now contemplated to be done under the present limit. In other words, it means that if the architect has to proceed under the present limit of cost, the building will not be properly finished, and it will contain cheap work, and it will not harmonize in its interior with the remainder of the building, and the money, therefore, will not be judiciously expended, and the work will have to be done over again.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Colorado yield to the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I do.

Mr. MONDELL. This is clearly an emergency appropriation, as I understand it?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes, sir.

Mr. MONDELL. The building is in that condition now where it will be either inadequately finished or the work of building will be suspended until Congress can act?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes. If the gentleman will permit me to quote from the statement of the architect of the building, it will show the actual situation which confronts us in this case. He says:

The authorization for the increase of this building is now absolutely necessary for the reason that the present contracts on the building are nearly completed, or will be on or about September 1, which would leave the building open to inclement weather for the coming winter, or necessitate an unwarranted expenditure of temporary closing it in, and require the services of a superintendent and watchman in order that the property may be taken care of and protected until such time when the work can proceed.

Mr. MONDELL. It is an emergency matter, then, that can not be delayed without a loss to the Government?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes. We have the statement of the architect that the marblework is now finished, and we have the statement that unless this authorization is made now, the contracts having expired, further work on the building must be suspended and the building left open to the ravages of the weather, or, at a great expense, boarded up and permitted to remain in that condition until such time as Congress sees fit to make this authorization.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the Treasury Department asked for $2,000,000 with which to construct this building. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds decided to recommend $1,600,000. Congress passed a law providing for a limit of cost of $1,600,000, and with utter disregard and with cool contempt for Congress the Treasury Department proceeded to plan a building costing $2,000,000. They commenced the erection of it and have it partly completed, saying we can not complete the building unless you give us the amount we originally asked for, which you then refused. I have discussed this matter with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and, in his absence at least, I shall not consent to its passage.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit me a question? Conceding what he has said to be true—and I am not conceding it—but for the sake of argument——

Mr. MANN. Well, if the gentleman does not concede that——

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Conceding that to be true, for the sake of argument, does that alter the present status and needs of the matter? Would it be wise judgment, would it be economy, would it be good business to permit the building to be improperly finished or construction suspended altogether simply because originally the Treasury Department had made plans larger than the authorization of Congress would warrant?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman concedes the truth of my statement as a matter of argument. Will the gentleman answer me a question?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I will if I can.

Mr. MANN. Did not they ask originally for $2,000,000?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I understand that they did.

Mr. MANN. Did not the committee only recommend $1,600,000?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I think that is true.

Mr. MANN. Did not the House and the Senate pass it in that shape?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I think that is true.

Mr. MANN. Did not they plan a building that would cost more than $1,600,000?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I do not think they did originally, but they had to change the plans and provide for 800,000 more cubic feet of space, because Congress created a new circuit court of appeals division, which was to sit in the city of Denver, and there were other enlargements made to convenience other departments.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Illinois objected, and I demand the regular order.

Mr. BURNETT. If the gentleman will pardon me, I want to say that the original contract was within the authorization.

Mr. MANN. I know it, but they left a lot of things out of the contract which were absolutely essential to the building, and in cool and utter disregard of the limit of cost by Congress.

Mr. BURNETT. They say that the building can be completed within the authorization, but the entire building will not be in harmony. It has been enlarged because it was necessitated by the new court of appeals and on account of the growth of other departments.

Mr. MANN. There was no new court of appeals established there.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I call for the regular order.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. If the bill is to be defeated, I want the distinguished Republican floor leader to have the honor of the objection.

Mr. MANN. I object. I do not do it as Republican floor leader, but I do it as a proper Member of Congress after the extension of courtesy to the gentleman from Colorado that I shall not extend again.

The SPEAKER. Debate is out of order, and the gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I shall attach to my remarks the statement of the architect of the building, showing the necessity for this legislation.

Statement by Mr. Edgerton Swartwout:

REASONS FOR THE NECESSITY OF AN INCREASED APPROPRIATION FOR THE UNITED STATES POST OFFICE AND COURTHOUSE AT DENVER, COLO.

The original competition drawings, as approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, called for a building of approximately 3,100,000 cubic feet, the rear of which was finished in the simplest manner without columns, and the light courts were without architectural elaboration. Subsequent to the award of the competition, which was based on the appropriation of $1,600,000 during and after trips to Denver by one of our firm, certain additional accommodations were demanded which increased the cubage of the building from 3,100,000 to 3,900,000, and a greater elaboration of the Champa Street façade and of the interior courts was demanded.

(a) Five times as much accommodation for the judges and officials of the court of appeals was demanded by the judiciary department over and above the amount allowed for in the competitive drawings.

(b) A law library of large size was added.

(c) Rooms for the use of lawyers engaged in the court were demanded.

(d) The necessity of a mailing platform below the terrace level instead of at the grade level on the Champa Street façade and the terrace itself added materially to the cubic contents.

(e) The increased size of the foundations made necessary by the poor quality of the soil was a great increase, both in the cubic contents and in the cost.

(f) At the time of our visit to Denver there was a great deal of agitation in favor of making the Champa Street façade as important as that on Stout Street. Various meetings of the board of trade and other organizations were held, and the Treasury Department was urged very strongly to see to it that all sides of the building should be of equal importance and beauty, and, furthermore, the citizens of Denver were opposed to the mailing platform being placed on the grade level in view of those passing on Champa Street, claiming their property on Champa Street would be greatly depreciated thereby, which appeared would be the case, due to the teaming and the noise of the mail-delivery wagons. In order to meet these objections the mailing platform was placed under a terrace entirely out of sight of anyone passing on Champa Street. This necessitated not only extra cubage, but a considerable elaboration in the way of terraces, approaches, and grading, and also made necessary various electric lifts and appliances for the handling of mail not before contemplated. Also in order that the Champa Street front should be effective architecturally as the Stout Street façade, a continuous portico of 16 columns, with the necessary elaboration in the entablature, was placed on the Champa Street façade in place of the large openings and plain wall surface shown on the competitive drawings and as originally contemplated. It was also thought advisable to have the interior light courts echo to a certain extent the architecture of the exterior, although these light courts have been finished in limestone instead of marble.

(g) When it became time to let the contract for the exterior strong pressure was brought by the entire State of Colorado to have local materials used in the construction throughout. Estimates were taken in various marbles, granites, and limestones, but we found upon careful examination that there was no local stone in the State of Colorado suitable for the construction of such a monumental building and calling as it did for blocks of large size and great soundness, except the marble obtained from the quarry of the Colorado-Yule Marble Co. By the authorization of the department the contract for the exterior was let in Colorado marble at some increase of cost.

Now, it is apparent that in spite of the elaboration indicated above the necessity for the increase of limited cost is due entirely to the increase of the size of the building. As above noted, this increase is approximately 800,000 cubic feet, which, at 50 cents a cubic foot, the approximate figure allowed in the competition program, amounts to $400,000, the amount asked for.

From the above it is very clearly shown that the present available money to finish the building—$380,000—would supply only a temporary and easily combustible interior finish, as out of this $380,000 the steam heat, electrical and mechanical plants must be supplied, interior doors, windows, post-office screens, and everything to make a habitable interior finish from the money left, which of necessity would be nothing more than an extremely cheap character, necessitating wood partitions and the cheapest kind of doors and windows. In other words, this interior finish would only be temporary and later on would have to be torn out, as shown by the Supervising Architect's statement before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and replaced by the finish necessary and equal to the elaborate exterior of the building, and consequently would necessitate a greater authorization and appropriation than that now asked—$400,000—a part of the $380,000 being absolutely wasted, besides endangering the expensive exterior by a probable fire.

The authorization for the increase of this building is now absolutely necessary, for the reason that the present contracts on the building are nearly completed, or will be on or about September 1, which would leave the building open to inclement weather for the coming winter, or necessitate an unwarranted expenditure of temporary closing it in and require the services of a superintendent and watchman in order that the property may be taken care of and protected until such time when the work can proceed.

TRACEY, SWARTWOUT & LITCHFIELD,
By EDGERTON SWARTWOUT.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 133) appropriating the sum of $20,000 out of money appropriated by Senate joint resolution No. 129 for subsistence of American citizens now in Arizona fleeing from threatened danger in the Republic of Mexico.

The message also announced that the Senate further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 24565) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PERKINS, Mr. LODGE, and Mr. TILLMAN as conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 6722. An act for the relief of Stephen Campbell and Isaac Overdorf; and

H. R. 21708. An act to authorize the lighting of Piney Branch Road from Georgia Avenue to Butternut Street.

The message also announced that the Senate had elected JACOB H. GALLINGER, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, President pro tempore, to hold office till the close of the second session of the Sixty-second Congress; and that the Senate had elected Augustus O. Bacon, a Senator from the State of Georgia, President pro tempore, to hold office from and after the closing day of the second session of the Sixty-second Congress to the 16th day of December, 1912. (S. Res. 383.)

ALIEN SEAMEN AND STOWAWAYS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 21489) to amend the immigration laws relative to alien seamen and stowaways.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that that bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, what is the purpose of passing it without prejudice?

Mr. BURNETT. There are some amendments that will have to be made in order to conform with the involuntary-servitude bill passed a week or two ago, and we desire to confer and see if there is any difficulty in regard to it, and if so, to prepare amendments.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman gives a very plausible reason.

Mr. FOCHT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama if he believes that the bill will be reached again this session?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; I think so. This is not the general immigration bill; this is to check the alien seamen from coming in.

Mr. FOCHT. But the gentleman from Alabama seems to have very little hope of reaching the other bill.

Mr. BURNETT. This bill will be reached on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, no doubt.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL BUILDING AT WINSTON-SALEM, N. C.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25714) to amend an act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the act of Congress (public-building act) approved June 25, 1910 (36 U. S. Stats., p. 693), as authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to begin the construction of a suitable and adequate fireproof addition to the present Federal building at Winston-Salem, N. C., etc., be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize also all necessary changes in and alterations and repairs of said old Federal building, and of the heating, ventilating, and plumbing systems, and elevators therein, which may become necessary by reason of or incident to the extension or enlargement of said building, or which it may be found expedient or advisable to make to such old building, and the heating, ventilating, and plumbing systems and elevators because of and in connection with the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of said old building; and the annual appropriations for the general maintenance of public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department shall be construed to be available for all other repairs to and equipment of said building, grounds, and approaches, and the heating, hoisting, plumbing, and ventilating apparatus thereof.

Mr. STEDMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as an additional section the following:

"That the limit of cost for the erection of the United States post-office building at Sistersville, W. Va., provided for in section 4 of 'An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings; to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings; to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes,' approved June 25, 1910, be increased from the sum of $60,000 to $80,000. For the purposes aforesaid the sum of $80,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not in order on this bill.

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order?

Mr. MANN. This bill relates to a public building at Winston-Salem, N. C., and only relates to that.

The SPEAKER. What does the amendment relate to?

Mr. MANN. To a public building at some other place.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEDMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COPIES OF RECORDS, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill (H. R. 25437) to make uniform charges for furnishing copies of records of the Department of the Interior and of its several bureaus.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to return to the bill H. R. 25437. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what bill is that?

Mr. RAKER. That is the bill which we passed temporarily. I have now here the Senate bill of similar title, which has been passed by the Senate.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent to lay aside the House bill and substitute therefor the bill S. 7157, of similar title.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, the head of any bureau, office, or institution, or any officer of that department, may, when not prejudicial to the interests of the Government, furnish authenticated or unauthenticated copies of any official books, records, papers, documents, maps, plats, or diagrams within his custody, and charge therefor the following fees: For all written copies, at the rate of 15 cents for each hundred words therein; for each photolithographic copy, 25 cents where such copies are authorized by law; for photographic copies, 15 cents for each sheet; and for tracings or blue prints the cost of the production thereof to be determined by the officer furnishing such copies, and in addition to these fees the sum of 25 cents shall be charged for each certificate of verification and the seal attached to authenticated copies: Provided, That there shall be no charge for the making or verification of copies required for official use by the officers of any branch of the Government: Provided further, That only a charge of 25 cents shall be made for furnishing authenticated copies of any rules, regulations, or instructions printed by the Government for gratuitous distribution.

SEC. 2. That nothing in this act shall be construed to limit or restrict in any manner the authority of the Secretary of the Interior to prescribe such rules and regulations as he may deem proper governing the inspection of the records of said department and its various bureaus by the general public, and any person having any particular interest in any of such records may be permitted to take copies of such records under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 3. That all authenticated copies furnished under this act shall be admitted in evidence equally with the originals thereof.

SEC. 4. That all officers who furnish authenticated copies under this act shall attest their authentication by the use of an official seal, which is hereby authorized for that purpose.

SEC. 5. That the act of Congress approved April 19, 1904, chapter 1396, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; but nothing in this act shall be so construed as to repeal the provisions of sections 490 to 493, inclusive, and 4934 of the Revised Statutes, fixing the rates for patent fees; or the act approved March 3, 1891, chapter 541, fixing a rate for certifying printed copies of specifications and drawings of patents; or of section 14 of the act of February 20, 1905, chapter 592, to authorize the registration of trade-marks used in commerce with foreign nations or among the several States or with Indian tribes, and to protect the same; nor shall anything in this act be construed to repeal any of the provisions of section 8 of the act approved April 26, 1906, chapter 1876, authorizing the officer having charge of the custody of any records pertaining to the enrollment of members of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians to furnish certified copies of such records and charge for that service such fees as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe; nor shall anything herein contained prevent the Secretary of the Interior, under his general power of supervision over Indian affairs, from prescribing such charges or fees for furnishing certified copies of the records of any Indian agency or Indian school as he may deem proper; and the said Secretary is hereby authorized to charge a fee of 25 cents for each certified copy issued by him as to the official character of any officer of his department.

SEC. 6. That all sums received under the provisions of this act shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, this bill is on the Union Calendar, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, is this Senate bill exactly the same as the House bill?

Mr. RAKER. Identically the same. It has been referred to the committee, and the committee has reported it back favorably.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The bill H. R. 25437 was laid on the table.

FORT KEOGH MILITARY RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4301) authorizing the Secretary of War to lease to the Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound Railway Co. a tract of land in the Fort Keogh Military Reservation, in the State of Montana, and for a right of way thereto for the removal of gravel and ballast material.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to make and execute a lease to the Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound Railway Co., a corporation of the State of Washington, of a tract of land lying in the Fort Keogh Military Reservation, in the State of Montana, containing an approximate area of 40 acres, lying northerly of the right of way now owned by said railway company, granted by the act approved May 11, 1906, and also a right of way not exceeding 50 feet in width extending from the present right of way of said company at a point near the westerly boundary of said reservation in an easterly and northeasterly direction to said tract, a distance of approximately 3½ miles; and said railway company is authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a spur railroad track upon said right of way and to take and remove earth, gravel, and ballast material from said tract for the improvement of its railroad until the supply thereof shall be exhausted. Said lease shall contain such provisions in respect to the fencing of said right of way and gravel tract, the construction of crossings and cattle guards at highways, and the delivery, free of charge, annually, of such quantity of sand or gravel for use upon the wagon roads and walks at Fort Keogh during the time that material shall be taken from said tract, and such other conditions as the Secretary of War shall deem advisable.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask somebody for some information concerning the bill. There is no information in the report, and there is no report from the War Department attached to the bill.

Mr. PRAY. Mr. Speaker, I will say in reply to the gentleman from Illinois that objection was raised when the bill was being considered by the Committee on Military Affairs. I inquired at the War Department to find out what they had on file there and found that the Secretary of War had requested a report from the officer in charge of the remount station at Fort Keogh shortly after the introduction of the bill, who reported that there would be no objection to the bill and responded to other questions propounded to him. The War Department, relying upon that report, found no objection.

Mr. MANN. Did the War Department give that information to Congress?

Mr. PRAY. Yes; there is a favorable report.

Mr. MANN. It is very carefully concealed from the information of the House. Perhaps I should not say "carefully." It may be very carelessly concealed.

Mr. PRAY. It was printed in the Senate report upon the bill, but it seems to have been omitted from the House report.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman should remember that bills of this character are sometimes more difficult to pass in the House than in the Senate, and it requires fully as much information.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman that in the bill full authority is left to the Secretary of War to provide proper regulations and restrictions.

Mr. MANN. The bill apparently gives a lease for the taking of gravel from what would be a gravel pit, with the provision that among other things the lessors shall furnish such quantity of sand or gravel for use upon the wagon roads and walks at Fort Keogh during the time that material shall be taken from said tracks, and so forth. Just how much that is I do not know, but "such quantity of sand and gravel" would be a rather indefinite amount. It is possible that it means such quantity as the Secretary of War shall deem advisable. Of course nobody would take a lease and pay any rental without knowing something about what he would be required to furnish free. Therefore I thought we were entitled to the information from the War Department as to what they would require. Is th's to be a dummy lease for $1, and other good and valuable consideration, or is it a bona fide lease for something worth something?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it is generally understood that there is no actual value to the gravel other than its use as ballast for the railroad.

Mr. MANN. I know of nothing that is of actual value except for its use. That is all that the land is good for—its use. This gravel is very valuable to somebody.

Mr. ANTHONY. If it were at a market, say, in Chicago.

Mr. MANN. But it is at a market right there, where it is demanded. For what is it to be disposed of? What are the terms? Does anybody know?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think the Government would be defrauded if it gave it away to the railroad company. I think it ought to be glad to encourage the building of a transcontinental railroad by giving it sand and gravel along the right of way.

Mr. MANN. But this is not sand and gravel along the right of way.

Mr. ANTHONY. Practically that.

Mr. MANN. Not at all. This is in the Fort Keogh Military Reservation, into which they have to run a spur line.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does not the main line of the railroad run through the reservation?

Mr. PRAY. The main line of the Milwaukee runs through the reservation. Congress granted a right of way two or three years ago. The reservation consists of 57,000 acres of land. This is a little strip of 40 acres about three miles and a half north of the main right of way. They desire to build a spur to it and take gravel for ballast on the roadbed.

Mr. MONDELL. That is a lease for a 40-acre tract some 3 miles from the post, as I understand it.

Mr. PRAY. It is some distance west of the post. It is quite a long way from the post itself, and it is off about 3 miles north of the right of way. The main line of the road runs through this reservation. This is a large reservation consisting of 57,000 acres of land.

Mr. MONDELL. I suppose this is not the only tract of gravel on the reservation?

Mr. PRAY. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. If there is any such great quantity of gravel, and it is not worth anything, why do they seek to lease this, three and a half miles from the track, and agree to give the Government all the gravel it wants. I am afraid those two statements do not gibe very well.

Mr. PRAY. Perhaps it is the most convenient place to put in a spur. There may be a great many other places, but they undoubtedly found this the most convenient place to locate the spur and procure gravel.

Mr. MANN. The War Department gives no information whatever. It says that this bill has ample provisions to safeguard the interests of the Government. I should think that gentlemen with bills of this sort would have had more information concerning the facts in the case.

Mr. PRAY. I will say to the gentleman, this is a Senate bill, introduced by Senator DIXON, who makes a strong favorable report on the bill and presents a favorable report from the Secretary of War.

Mr. MANN. Yes; and the distinguished Senator from Montana introduced the bill and reported it without giving any information upon it, passed it, sent it over to the House; the committee of the House reports it without giving any information concerning it, and then the gentleman desires that the House pass it because the Senator who introduced it reported it ought to pass the Senate without having any information about it.

Mr. PRAY. Does the gentleman think the rights of the Government are not protected in the bill?

Mr. MANN. I do not know; I do not know what the facts are.

Mr. PRAY. If the gentleman will suggest an amendment, perhaps we can agree upon it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. PRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I just want to ask the gentleman a question. This company has this 40 acres of land on which is located the gravel and dirt which it is proposed to use for the railroad?

Mr. PRAY. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Do they own that 40 acres of land?

Mr. PRAY. The Government?

Mr. FOSTER. No; the railroad.

Mr. PRAY. No; the Government owns it. Two years ago Congress passed an act granting the right of way across the reservation to the Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound Railroad Co. This is a large reservation and covers an immense territory. They need quantities of gravel, and this is one of the most convenient places. They need this gravel for ballast, and they applied for a right of way and authority to lease the tract.

Mr. FOSTER. This 40 acres belongs to the Government?

Mr. PRAY. Yes; this is Government land. It is to be leased to this company, and in turn they agree to furnish all the gravel the Government needs on its reservation.

Mr. FOSTER. This provides they shall have this right as long as there is any gravel or dirt existing there, so I take it the Government has given the railroad a perpetual lease, a right of way and a lease to this gravel and dirt on the 40 acres of ground.

Mr. PRAY. Well, of course I can not tell the gentleman how great a quantity of gravel there is in this tract.

Mr. FOSTER. It says until the dirt and gravel are exhausted.

Mr. PRAY. If it is the sense of the committee that it would operate as a perpetual lease, it might be amended.

Mr. FOSTER. Would not the gentleman be willing to strike out "until the supply shall be exhausted"?

Mr. PRAY. I do not see any objection to that, and yet further down, if the gentleman will notice, in the last paragraph the bill specifically provides that the Secretary of War may impose such conditions as he deems advisable.

Mr. FOSTER. But the bill gives it until all this is exhausted.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Suppose the railroad companies continue to work and are slow and do not exhaust the gravel, will that give them the right until they do?

Mr. PRAY. Well, I think the Secretary of War would guard against contingencies of that sort in his conditions in the lease and would require them probably to use due diligence and act in good faith.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Why not have a stated time to use this burrowing pit?

Mr. PRAY. Well, the Secretary of War would take care of that in the lease. That would be left to his discretion.

Mr. FOSTER. I think this gives them absolute perpetual grant to these 40 acres as long as the world stands.

Mr. PRAY. I do not see any objection, I will say to the gentleman, in amending the bill by striking out that part of it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will allow me. There are 57,000 acres on this reservation, so stated, and this is to put in a spur. Suppose that gravel was 1,000 feet deep on that 40 acres; do you not think the Government is benefited by getting all the sand and gravel from the railroad it needs for all purposes on the reservation; and at this stage of the session does the gentleman think the bill ought to pass amended and have to be sent back to the Senate?

Mr. FOSTER. The only thing I thought of was—I do not know whether this military reservation will remain as a military reservation or not. Possibly it may not.

Mr. PRAY. I will say to the gentleman it is a military reservation, but not a military post. It was abandoned about three years ago. The Government now uses it as a remount station. I will state further to the gentleman that it seems to me that the bill provides that the Secretary of War may name such conditions in the lease as will fully protect all of the rights of the United States.

Mr. FOSTER. If the House wants to let it go—I do not think it is a good thing to give a lease forever.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does not the gentleman from Illinois think we can safely trust the Secretary of War to properly safeguard the matter?

Mr. FOSTER. You are giving the use of these 40 acres as long as the earth rolls.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the gentleman will agree that Mr. Stimson is a very good conservationist and will properly safeguard this matter.

Mr. FOSTER. I know, but he is not making this bill.

Mr. PRAY. He has favorably recommended this bill, and he says it is all right. However, as before stated, I would have no objection to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out, on page 1, line 4, the words "and directed" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "in his discretion."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, strike out the words "and directed" and insert in lieu thereof the words "in his discretion."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out, on page 2, line 10, the words "until the supply thereof shall be exhausted."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 10, strike out the words "until the supply thereof shall be exhausted."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was read a third time and passed.

JUVENILE COURT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA (H. DOC. NO. 913).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the Sixth Annual Report of the Juvenile Court of the District of Columbia, for the year ended June 30, 1912.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 19, 1912.

ACTING CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication, which was read:

AUGUST 19, 1912.

To the Speaker of the House:

Desiring to be absent from my office for a short period of time, I hereby designate the Chief Clerk of the House, J. C. South, Esq., to sign all papers that may require my official signature, and to do all other acts under the rules and practice of the House to be done by the Clerk of the House.

Respectfully submitted.

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House.

INDIAN TRIBAL FUNDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 46) to amend section 2 of an act approved March 2, 1907, entitled "An act providing for the allotment and distribution of Indian tribal funds."

The bill was read in full.

Mr. MANN. Is there anybody here desiring to have this bill passed?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think it is a necessary bill and ought to be passed. The Indians are anxious to obtain their money from the United States Treasury for many purposes; for instance, in cases of old age, decrepitude, imbecility, or disease, and in cases where they are living on a homestead and this money would enable them to improve and cultivate their lands. It is to put funds in the hands of the Indians who are disposed to use them for their own benefit.

Mr. MANN. Let me see if I understand it correctly. Do I understand this bill would permit the Secretary of the Interior to pay to any Indian who has any funds in the United States Treasury the amount of money to his credit, or permit the Secretary to expend for his credit without the wish of the Indian? Is that correct?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is correct. But it must be done under such rules and regulations as the Secretary may prescribe. And some one, let me suggest to the gentleman, must see that this money, when it is withdrawn from the Treasury, is put in the hands of the Indians entitled to receive it and now needing it, and he certainly would put it in the hands of the superintendent or Indian agent where the Indians reside, and he could see that it was properly distributed. In some instances the Indians that own these funds are in hospitals, where they are being taken care of by the States where they live, although they have money in the United States Treasury.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection when an Indian is helpless and has money in the Treasury to have it expended through his guardians for the Indian's benefit, but this bill permits any money to be paid to any Indian without regard to his mental qualifications, although he may be perfectly sound physically, or it permits the Secretary of the Interior to expend it as the Secretary thinks proper and without regard to what the Indian thinks.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me further to suggest that this bill passed the House during the last Congress. The department is anxious that this bill shall become a law. I know of no good reason why these Indians should not have their money out of the Treasury as is provided in this bill.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. AKIN of New York. If it is placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior will any of these shyster lawyers get a crack at it?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Not at all. It is dispensed by the Secretary of the Interior through the Indian agent where the Indian resides.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Will there be any attorney's fees connected with it?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. None whatever. There could not possibly be any.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing to prevent the Indian paying it all to some attorney if he chooses to do so.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] object if, in lines 6 and 7, page 2, we strike out this language:

Or to expend the same for his or her benefit.

Mr. MANN. Yes; I certainly would. Indians who are incompetent—and I believe there are some who are incompetent—I believe ought not to receive their money out of the Treasury, to be grabbed by the first white man that comes along. It will be easy to prepare a bill where the payment ought to be made where they need the money.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I will object if I have to answer now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. MANN. I would like to see the bill passed if it could be passed in the proper shape.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER, YANKTON, S. DAK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5882) to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Yankton, S. Dak., by the Winnipeg, Yankton & Gulf Railroad Co.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the act approved April 5, 1904, authorizing the Winnipeg, Yankton & Gulf Railroad Co. to construct a combined railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Yankton, S. Dak., as amended by the act approved January 26, 1910, be, and the same is hereby, so amended that the time within which the said bridge is required to be commenced shall be within one year and the time within which it is required that the said bridge shall be completed shall be within three years from the date of the approval of this act: Provided, That the construction, maintenance, and operation of the said bridge shall be in all respects subject to and in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WITHDRAWAL OF PUBLIC LANDS IN CERTAIN CASES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5679) to amend section 2 of an act to authorize the President of the United States to make withdrawals of public lands in certain cases, approved June 25, 1910.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act of Congress approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., 847), be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That all lands withdrawn under the provisions of this act shall at all times be open to exploration, discovery, occupation, and purchase under the mining laws of the United States, so far as the same apply to minerals other than coal, oil, gas, phosphates, potash, and nitrates: Provided, That the rights of any person who, at the date of any order of withdrawal heretofore or hereafter made, is a bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas bearing lands and who, at such date, is in the diligent prosecution of work leading to the discovery of oil or gas, shall not be affected or impaired by such order so long as such occupant or claimant shall continue in diligent prosecution of said work.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will read the next bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MONDELL. This is a very important bill. It changes the present law only——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] withdraws his objection, and reserves the right to object.

Mr. MONDELL. The bill changes the present existing law, Mr. Speaker, only by the addition of four words, on line 2, of page 2, and the condition that makes this change necessary is this: The present withdrawal law, while it provides for complete withdrawal of the lands also provides, in section 2, that the lands withdrawn shall be subject to exploration, discovery, occupation, and purchase under the mining laws, so far as the same laws apply to lands other than those classified as coal, oil, or gas lands. Now, the result of that is that while the department has withdrawn recently some lands containing phosphate, potash, and nitrates, the presence of which is discovered by the Government——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] withdraws his objection. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will finish the reading of the bill.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill, as follows:

Provided further, That this act shall not be construed as a recognition, abridgment, or enlargement of any asserted rights or claims initiated upon any oil or gas bearing lands after any withdrawal of such lands made prior to June 25, 1910: And provided further, That there shall be excepted from the force and effect of any withdrawal made under the provisions of this act all lands which are, on the date of such withdrawal, embraced in any lawful homestead or desert-land entry theretofore made, or upon which any valid settlement has been made and is at said date being maintained and perfected pursuant to law; but the terms of this proviso shall not continue to apply to any particular tract of land unless the entryman or settler shall continue to comply with the law under which the entry or settlement was made: And provided further, That hereafter no forest reserve shall be created, nor shall any additions be made to one heretofore created, within the limits of the States ofOregon Washington, Idaho, Montana, Colorado, or Wyoming, except by act of Congress.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] moves that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects. Somebody will have to make a motion to go into Committee of the Whole if that is desired to be done.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of Senate bill 5679.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. That request has already been made and was not granted. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of Senate bill 5679.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ak unanimous consent to extend my remarks on this bill by inserting therein the message of the President showing the necessity of this legislation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

SALE OF OLD POST-OFFICE BUILDING, PROVIDENCE, R. I.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25624) providing for the sale of the old post-office property at Providence, R. I., by public auction.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second paragraph of section 10 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1902 (32 Stat. L., p. 322), be, and it is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"When said building is completed and occupied by the United States authorities the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to sell the present post office, courthouse, and customhouse building and the site thereof, situated at the corner of Weybosset and Custom House Streets, in the city of Providence and State of Rhode Island, at public auction, after proper advertisement, on such terms as he may deem to be to the best interests of the United States; to execute a quitclaim deed to the purchaser thereof, and to deposit the proceeds of said sale in the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. NORRIS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of some one having knowledge of the facts, what is the necessity for the sale of this property?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman may remember that earlier in the session a bill with substantially the same provisions, except that an upset price of $200,000 was placed upon the property, was introduced by me, was passed here and by the Senate, was approved by the President and became a law, and under that law we held a public auction of the post office and old customhouse site. But, as I anticipated, the upset price named in the bill was far too much, and even though the property was extensively advertised and there were a number of people there, it failed to produce the money contemplated.

Mr. NORRIS. This is property on which is located a Government building?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. It is.

Mr. NORRIS. How much did that public building cost?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. It cost $200,000 in 1857.

Mr. NORRIS. Is it not a fact that the property is a great deal more valuable now than it was then? Why does the Government want to get rid of it?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. The land is more valuable in that neighborhood, but the building itself is, in the opinion of real-estate experts, not so valuable.

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman has told us that the Government in the auction of that property at this public sale did not receive a bid that came within the limit of the existing law, but he has not yet answered my question as to why the Government wants to get rid of this property.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I will tell the gentleman. It is simply because the building is unoccupied and has been for several years, and it is a dead weight.

Mr. NORRIS. It does not cost the Government anything?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. It does not bring any revenue to the Government or to the city of Providence.

This is recommended to be sold for this reason: It is old and unfit for any purpose whatsoever. It would cost $100,000 to repair it, and the Government will be in a better position by getting whatever it is worth. The bill provides for the sale of it, and places the limit of cost at $125,000 to give some latitude to the bidding. In my estimation the property is worth $150,000, and I think it will bring that without any question.

Mr. NORRIS. The present law puts the limit of cost at $200,000.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Yes; and we held an auction under that and could not get any bids.

Mr. NORRIS. What is the reason that the Government does not use the property?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. It is not fit for post-office purposes any longer.

Mr. NORRIS. But you have other Government offices.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. The most of the other offices are in the new post-office building, with the exception of one or two.

Mr. NORRIS. If we do sell this, will it not follow that the Government will have to rent quarters for some of the other Government offices?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I can not answer that absolutely; that is all within the possibilities, but if the Government ever builds any other building for Government purposes they will be able to go where land is cheaper and erect a building better adapted for Government purposes than this is.

Mr. NORRIS. Why can not the Government build on this particular property; if the building is worn out, can not it build a new one on the same site?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Because the building is so situated that it is not convenient or well adapted. There is an alley on one side of it.

Mr. NORRIS. That is a good thing.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I know that; but it does not admit of free ingress and egress for wagons; it is too narrow.

Mr. NORRIS. Is not there a street on any side of the building?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Yes; there is a street on one side, and a very broad street in front.

Mr. NORRIS. Then there are streets on two sides of it?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. And an alley on the third side?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. That ought to be a good opportunity to get in and out of the building. If a man can not get out on the street he can get out on the alley.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. The Department of the Treasury having charge of this building, the postmaster at Providence, and all the citizens say that the best interests of the Government will be subserved by selling the property and investing the money in some other way.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I will yield.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Has the Treasury Department made any recommendation in reference to this?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. They recommended that it be disposed of three or four years ago.

Mr. NORRIS. I was formerly several years on the committee that has charge of these bills, and I know that on several occasions there were bills authorizing the sale of property and later on there was some sort of a scandal in reference to them. In looking it up I found that, as a rule, when the Government was disposing of property on which an old Government building existed, it never got what the property was worth. We have all heard about the New York customhouse, and yet at the time we sold that all the members of the New York delegation were anxious to get the sale made. They were anxious to lower the price, and afterwards there was quite a scandal came out of it, when, as a matter of fact, as far as Congress was concerned, every man acted in good faith.

Now, I remember when I was a member of the committee, and I think the gentleman from Alabama was on the committee at the time, we sold the property in one public-building bill out here in Washington, and later on it developed that it was a mistake to include it, that the Government needed it, and that the men who were trying to purchase it were buying it for the purpose of selling it later on to the Government again. Yet the committee in the best of faith could not see any immediate use that the Government could make of the property.

Now, in the city of Providence you have another Government building; one that is up to date, a new building. You propose to sell the old one, and you have tried to sell it at a price fixed and failed to get any bidders. It is a very easy matter for a man to prevent the sale being made of this kind of property. I can see how it is not property that would sell well on the market, but it will not be two years, perhaps, before the city of Providence will be before the committee endeavoring to get additional public buildings constructed in Providence. I am not saying that this bill is wrong, but on general principles I formed the opinion years ago, after going over the ground a good many times in different localities in the United States, that I never would favor the selling of real estate owned by the Government unless it was shown almost beyond a reasonable doubt that it was a good thing for the Government to sell it. Why not allow the Government to retain it? It is not suitable, perhaps, for a post office and never will be, but there are Government officers and other public Government officials that will have to be housed in the city of Providence, and I do not understand why at least we should be in such a hurry to dispose of this property.

Mr. BURNETT. I want to say to the gentleman from Nebraska that we have not been in a hurry because in 1902 the act providing for appropriations for public buildings authorized the sale, and I believe the upset price was $300,000. They made the effort time and time again to sell, and were unable to sell it; and the gentleman came before the committee with a bill without any upset price, but the committee was of the opinion that it ought to be set at $200,000. I remember the gentleman from Nebraska's caution, and wherever it was possible or probable that the Government would want to use the ground for some other purpose within a reasonable time, say 8 or 12 years, we thought the Government should retain it.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to ask if the committee has made any investigation on that line. The present post office is a new one and does not at the present time, as I understand it, house all the Government officials in that city? Is that true?

Mr. BURNETT. I will ask the gentleman from Rhode Island to answer that question.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I believe there are only two minor departments that are not housed in the new Federal building. What they are I do not think I can state at present.

Mr. NORRIS. We have this condition: We have the new building in which the officials have just gone in, and already it is too small to supply the needs of the Government, and with that condition facing us we are asked to sell the old Government building and the land on which it is situated.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I desire to ask the gentleman from Nebraska a question. In view of the statement of the Treasury Department that their advice is to sell this property because of its undesirability for the Government to retain, and that it will be undesirable for the future for a Government building, does the gentleman think it good policy or good business judgment for the Government to retain the property there as an eyesore to the people of the city of Providence, R. I.? Does the gentleman think it good policy to keep property when there is no prospect in the future that it will ever be used for Government purposes?

Mr. NORRIS. Why will it not be used for Government purposes?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. On account of its undesirable location. It will never be used for Government purposes. That, as I understand it, is the report. In addition to that, a number of years have elapsed; and if there were any scheme in any way by which somebody desired bidders prevented from purchasing the property so that some one else might make something out of it, that would have taken place long ago. They have been unable, however, to get $200,000.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman I would like to call his attention to what happened in reference to a public building several years ago in the city of New York, where they undertook to sell the old customhouse. If he will look at the record he will find that this is what happened: The law was changed several times. The Treasury Department recommended the sale of the old customhouse. The Government did everything it could to make a good sale. I have no doubt that they acted in the best of faith. Under several administrations it was advertised in the New York papers, and they tried to get bids.

The law was changed, and the upset price lowered, and they kept at it until they could get it to a figure where it was sold. In less than a year after that time there was a scandal all over the country, which was kept alive for several years, about the iniquity of the sale of the old customhouse in the city of New York. We heard it on the floor of Congress and we heard it through several campaigns. I do not believe that there was anything in it, because in that case I looked up everything I could find in regard to it, and I believe that everyone acted in good faith. Yet the facts were that they eventually sold that property for about one-fourth or one-fifth of its value, notwithstanding the fact that they proclaimed here on the floor of the House, with the Treasury Department backing them up, that the law ought to be changed in order to reduce the price so that somebody would buy it. There is not much of a recommendation here from the Treasury Department.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. It is in the report.

Mr. NORRIS. Here is a letter signed by George W. Gardner, who is the custodian of the building up there, and he says that they had a sale or tried to have one, but that no one came to bid; that there were a good many people there but no one bid, and that the Congressman, the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY], was there and told them that he was going to introduce a bill to cut the price down. Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt but that there were no bids. No one contends to the contrary.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to let me read from a report that may prove more satisfactory to him. This was incorporated in the report accompanying the previous bill:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, January 8, 1912.

CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Referring to your request for a report in connection with H. R. 4650, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to convey to the city of Providence, R. I., the building formerly used as a United States post office, courthouse, and customhouse, and the site thereof, I have the honor to submit the following:

The site was acquired in 1857, at a cost of $40,000. The building erected thereon cost approximately $200,000. Repairs and improvements put on the building since have cost approximately $90,000.

Since the completion of the new building the old building above referred to has remained vacant and is not needed for the purposes of the Government.

Section 10 of the act of Congress (omnibus public-building act), approved June 6, 1902 (32 Stat. U. S., 310), authorizing the construction of a new Federal building at Providence, R. I., contains a further authorization for the sale by the Secretary of the Treasury of the old post office, courthouse, and customhouse, and the site thereof, in said city, at the upset price of $300,000. Under the authority contained in said legislation the property in question has been advertised for sale but no offers were received. It is stated by the collector of customs, who is the custodian of said property, that the upset price fixed by the act of June 6, 1902, is in excess of the market value of said property. In a communication dated December 17, 1909, the custodian states, in part, as follows:

"The building is located in the immediate vicinity of several business blocks which have heretofore been used for wholesale mercantile business. At the present day, three large blocks formerly used for this purpose are entirely vacant and have stood so for more than a year.

"I cite these conditions as having a general bearing on the value of property in that immediate neighborhood.

"There have been two sales of sizeable parcels of real estate within a short distance of the building, both fronting on lower Westminster Street, which is one of the principal business thoroughfares of the city. Both of these parcels of land were sold at a price of $18 per foot.

"Immediately adjoining the old Federal Building on the north is a large 10-story office building occupying land which is taxed for $25 per foot.

"Business men with whom I have talked, and also real estate men, claim that the building is really a detriment to the sale of the land, as it is of such size, construction, and arrangement as to necessitate tearing down altogether, or if changed so as to afford natural light (an element which in its present condition is woefully lacking) would require very great expense.

"My familiarity with the building convinces me that to devote it to any modern business purpose would require a large outlay of money to put the basement in proper shape, as the building is built on made land formerly tideflowed, and water now comes into the cellar so much as to require an automatic cellar drainer to keep it reasonably dry.

"A complete new heating system would be required throughout the building, as well as ventilation, elevators, and plumbing. This last would be a very considerable feature.

"While the structure is of granite, the materials in the walls can not be made of very much use if the building were torn down, and if not torn down the cutting of the walls to afford the necessary light could hardly be achieved without some architectural disfigurement.

"In view of all these considerations and basing my opinion upon the ideas of men familiar in a business and technical way with property of this nature in this part of the city, I am of the opinion that the Government will hardly realize from the property more than a reasonable value for the land itself."

The site of the new building was donated to the United States by the city of Providence, and its value at the time was greatly in excess of the sum which would be likely to be realized from the sale of the old Federal building and the site thereof.

The department does not wish to submit any recommendation with respect to this matter.

With respect to H. R. 13774, which, in effect, amends the authority given by the act of Congress approved June 6, 1902, for the sale of said property so as to authorize the sale of the property at public auction without fixing an upset price, I have to state that if this measure becomes a law the efforts of the department to sell the property would probably be facilitated.

Respectfully, FRANKLIN MACVEAGH, Secretary.

I desire the gentleman to remember that there are 8,000 square feet of land in this particular site, so that he may estimate the value for himself. At $25 a square foot it would make $200,000.

Mr. NORRIS. Is the building on it worth anything?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. It is supposed to be worth nothing.

Mr. NORRIS. As a matter of fact, the Government has put about $300,000 into the building.

Mr. BURNETT. Not the building alone.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. It cost $200,000.

Mr. NORRIS. And $90,000 for improvements.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. That was in 1857.

Mr. NORRIS. When was the $90,000 expended?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. During the half century, and they all say it would take $100,000 to put the building in a tenantable condition. It resolves itself into a business proposition, whether it is best to expend $100,000 or to obtain $150,000.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. And then, as I understand it, the location is not a desirable one.

Mr. NORRIS. It resolves itself into this, whether we will give this away now and next year have the Representatives from Rhode Island asking the Government to expend a half million to buy a new site for a building and a new building in Providence, R. I.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Oh, no.

Mr. NORRIS. But I am afraid that is what we will be up against.

Mr. UTTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. UTTER. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope the gentleman from Nebraska will withdraw any objection he has to this bill. It is a bill that ought to be passed. The building as it stands now is in a section of the city that is undesirable for such a building. If it were undertaken now to repair it, it would cost at least $100,000. The building stands as an eyesore to the public, and it is a detriment to the property upon all sides. If the Government should ever demand more room, it would ask for it in an entirely different location in the city.

Mr. NORRIS. That is just the proposition. The Government could hold court there. The Government could have its customs officials there. Any Government office could be held there, except possibly the post office.

Mr. UTTER. The building itself could never be fixed over so as to make a proper place for the courts. One of the reasons why the new building was erected was to give the courts conveniences that the old building did not possess.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. And the gentleman has just stated that the wholesale houses that occupy usually the most undesirable parts of a city have left that locality on account of its undesirability.

Mr. UTTER. That is true.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. And now the gentleman from Nebraska would like to have the courts held there.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I would just as lief have the courts held where there are empty business blocks as to locate them straight across the street from a $1,000,000 hotel or some residence property. You do not have to have a marble front across the street from a courthouse in order to get justice. It makes no difference particularly where your courts are held, so long as they are in a healthy locality.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. They are located in the new building.

Mr. UTTER. The courts are in the new building. This building is not adequate——

Mr. NORRIS. For what is it adequate?

Mr. UTTER. It is not adequate for anything except to be pulled down.

Mr. NORRIS. There is another point. The Government has spent $300,000 in putting it there and now it is worth nothing because you desire it pulled down. What about the new building?

Mr. UTTER. It is a fine building. It is a fine thing for the community in every way.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, I want to ask the gentleman why there is such a great necessity for the Government to sell this property, because it does not need the money?

Mr. UTTER. Because, for one thing, this building is situated at a place where it has now become an eyesore to everybody who sees it and where it has been a detriment to neighboring property.

Mr. NORRIS. Why a detriment?

Mr. UTTER. Because of its appearance and condition.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, the gentleman or his colleagues have tried to argue we ought to sell this property because the wholesale houses in that vicinity are vacant and therefore we could not expect Government officials to have offices and do business in that vicinity. Now, the gentleman says that we ought to sell it because it is a detriment to business, so that people never come to that vicinity. How can it hurt business if there is no business there?

Mr. UTTER. For the reason that people have left that region. The people who have been doing business in that region have gone away because of the presence of that old building. Now, the best thing we can do for the country and the State is to dispose of the building and turn the money into some practical channel.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 9, insert after the word "advertisement" the words "once a week for four successive weeks in some daily newspaper published in said city."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. My purpose in doing that is in asking unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting some remarks on the work of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries during the present session.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, after the word "receipt" insert "Provided, That no bid for less than $125,000 shall be accepted, and the Secretary of the Treasury reserves the right to reject any bid."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. O'SHAUNESSY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WITHDRAWAL OF PUBLIC LANDS IN CERTAIN CASES.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MONDELL. A moment ago unanimous consent was given for the consideration of S. 5679, an act to authorize the President of the United States to make withdrawals of land, and so forth, and on the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of the bill the Chair declared that the noes had it. I desire to ask what the parliamentary status is with regard to that bill?

The SPEAKER. It was passed without prejudice.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to that bill, and I renew the request that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman puts two motions at once. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to return to the consideration of S. 5679. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman also asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if he would be willing to insert, on page 2, line 1, before the word "minerals" the word "metalliferous" and leave out line 2.

Mr. MONDELL. What is the gentleman's suggestion?

Mr. MANN. Insert before the word "minerals," in line 1, page 2, the word "metalliferous" and leave out line 2, so it would authorize the exploration of land withdrawn so far as the same applies to metalliferous minerals.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, as I understand, the gentleman would insert the word "metalliferous" after the word "to," in line 1, page 2.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. And to strike out all of line 2.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. I have no objection to that, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, I very earnestly contended for the use of the language the gentleman now proposes at the time the bill passed and am glad to agree to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman was right then, and I am glad he is willing to agree to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Is there objection to considering it in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to insert, page 2, line 1, before the word "minerals" the word "metalliferous" and to strike out line 2, all except the colon.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 1, insert before the word "minerals" the word "metalliferous" and strike out all of line 2, page 2, with the exception of the colon at the end of the line.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 2, insert after the words "States of" the word "California."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, when the original of this bill was passed a couple of years ago the Senate succeeded in getting into it a provision that there should be no more forest reserves created in Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, or Wyoming, except by act of Congress. The gentleman from California now has succeeded in having added an amendment to this bill to add to this bunch of States the State of California. I have heard gentlemen on the floor of the House from these States so often speak of the large acreage of forest reserves in their States that I would like to inquire of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] if there is land left in the State that could be created into a forest reserve?

Mr. RAKER. I would state that all the remaining lands of the same kind and character in the State of California could be included in the reserves. There will be no objections at any time to extending these reserves if the President should so request and upon presenting same to the Congress full consideration could and would be given and relief duly granted.

Mr. MANN. Why should we include it?

Mr. RAKER. The timber lands are practically already in the reserves. In addition there is a great quantity of land which is practically not timber, but is reserved for the purpose of protecting watersheds and water-power rights and water-power sites. It is very extensive and covers a great area of country, and I think better results would be obtained to leave it as it stands, and when Congress sees fit to change the boundary on the recommendation of the President and the various departments it could be done.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has been here sufficiently long, I am sure, to know that to create a forest reserve by act of Congress is practically impossible, or even to get the boundaries of a forest reserve corrected by act of Congress. Now, the gentleman's State having a large area of public domain, when it may become extremely desirable to protect the water supply they are fixed so it would be impossible to do so. I take it the gentleman is not fearing that there will be any great number of forest reserves created in California in the near future or that it will be done in the present national forests except for a special emergency. If that should arise the gentleman will have legislation fixed so that it will be possible to meet the emergency.

Mr. RAKER. Under the law as it is now it would be impossible.

Mr. MANN. If this bill passes, you could not do that. If it becomes necessary to set aside a piece of land for forest reserve for the purpose of protecting a water supply of a city, as we practically did in reference to Pikes Peak recently, where we passed a bill to permit the water of a forest reserve to be used, the forest reserve having been created practically for that purpose, with the gentleman's amendment that is practically impossible.

Mr. MONDELL. I think that is hardly true. I think the case the gentleman cites could have been provided for.

Mr. MANN. That is where the forest reserve had been created——

Mr. MONDELL. Because if this amendment passes, the President still has authority under section 1 of the withdrawal act to make temporary withdrawal for such purposes.

Mr. MANN. Except in some special instances. He is permitted to make a temporary withdrawal for the purpose of protecting from pollution the water supply of the city.

Mr. MONDELL. I think he is permitted in section 1 of the act——

Mr. RAKER. I will state that with the word "metalliferous" in there he could reserve them for metalliferous purposes.

Mr. MANN. We have not given him any additional authority. This only prevents the land from being explored for metalliferous ores. That does not affect the quantity of land reserved, because this is only an exploration of land already reserved. It does not give authority to reserve land from metalliferous minerals.

Mr. MONDELL. Section 1 authorizes the President to reserve land for water-power sites and other public purposes. The words "other public purposes" are very broad and construed very broadly by the department, and they withdraw land for public purposes very liberally. They recently withdrew some land in Colorado that a municipality had made application to purchase as coal land, for example.

Mr. MANN. They withdrew them as coal lands under the law provided for the purpose.

Mr. MONDELL. They withdrew them from sale pending legislation.

Mr. MANN. Under the law expressly providing for coal lands.

Mr. MONDELL. They did not so withdraw them, but they withdrew them from sale and disposition. I do not care particularly to discuss the merits of the question of adding California to the list of States in which forest reserves can not be established or enlarged except by act of Congress, as that is a matter that particularly interests the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], and he is entirely competent to handle that question; but I think, if it is added to the list of such States, it would not prevent the President from making temporary withdrawal for forestry purposes. As a matter of fact, in the States named there have been, I think, temporary withdrawals since the provision was made.

Mr. MANN. Temporary withdrawals.

Mr. MONDELL. With a view of possibly increasing the area of forest reserves.

Mr. MANN. My distinguished friend was once Assistant Secretary of the Interior, and may be able to speak by the card, but here is the law that hereafter no forest reserve shall be created or added to any hereafter created within the limit of certain States. If the gentleman assumes that means nothing, what is the use of including California, anyway?

Mr. MONDELL. I just referred the gentleman to the first section of this act, under which the President can make withdrawals. Clearly the President could not enlarge forest reserves in California if this amendment should be adopted, but I am of the opinion he could, under section 1 of the withdrawal act, make temporary withdrawals, wherever necessary, with a view of suggesting legislation or in view of proposed legislation.

Mr. RAKER. I believe it would be very beneficial to California in the large mountain districts.

Mr. MANN. I fear the gentleman only offered that amendment because he, being a member of the committee and his seeing that these other States were included, thought it would be a good thing for California if it was going to be a good thing for them. But the situation is quite different in California from what it is in Wyoming or Montana. I do not know whether it is different from what it is in Oregon or Washington.

Mr. RAKER. How could it be different in Oregon?

Mr. MANN. I say I do not know whether it is different from the situation in Oregon or Washington. I do not know, either, the provisions of the law that was passed in the first place.

Mr. RAKER. I will say to the gentleman that before this bill was introduced in the Senate—the one that is here now—I had prepared and introduced a bill in the House, and it went to the committee, and we had a partial hearing on it, and it was continued. Then, afterwards, when the Senate bill came over, we naturally took the Senate bill and amended it and reported it to the House. I have had some correspondence in regard to nitrates and potash, some in my district and some outside. I think that part of our territory has been covered by reserves, and that should not be changed except by act of Congress, and when the time comes I am satisfied that the House of Representatives will eliminate reserves and add to reserves as the conditions require, and I believe that it will be to the public interest to include California at this time. I ask Members to leave the amendment in, if they can consistently see their way clear to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 9, noes 4.

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the amended bill.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAKER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The report is as follows:

[House Report No. 1057, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

WITHDRAWAL OF PUBLIC LANDS IN CERTAIN CASES.

Mr. RAKER, from the Committee on the Public Lands, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 5679.

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred S. 5679, "An act to amend section 2 of an act to authorize the President of the United States to make withdrawals of public lands in certain cases, approved June 25, 1910," having given the same careful consideration, they agreed to recommend the following amendment:

Line 1, page 3, insert between the word "of" and the word "Oregon" the word "California" and then a comma after the word "California."

As thus amended the committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The addition of the words "potash or nitrates," which is found on line 11, page 1, is the only change the bill proposes to make to section 2 of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., 847), and adding the word "California" on line 1, page 3, making the provisions of the bill under the proviso applicable to the State of California as well as to the States now named in the bill.

The purpose of the bill as amended is to extend the scope of the withdrawal act so as to confer upon the President authority for the protection of the land valuable for potash or nitrates until an adequate law for their disposal shall have been enacted.

The Secretary of the Interior in his last report called attention to the fact that the present withdrawal act grants the President no authority to withdraw from entry and protect lands valuable for potash or nitrates, and we recommend that the legislation giving the President such authority be enacted by Congress.

The committee desires also to call attention to the message of the President of the United States suggesting the enactment of laws for the protection of deposits of potash and nitrates, sent to Congress March 26, 1911. (H. Doc. No. 644, 62d Cong., 2d sess.)

The bill now pending in the Senate was referred to the Department of the Interior, and the following is the report thereon:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 21, 1912.

Hon. REED SMOOT,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate.

SIR: I am in receipt of a copy of Senate bill 5679, accompanied by request from your committee for report.

In reply I beg to state that the only change introduced by the amendment proposed to section 2 of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., 847), is the substitution of the terms "metalliferous minerals" for the words "minerals other than coal, oil, gas, and phosphates" contained in the first sentence of said section.

The form of the bill as introduced follows a proposed draft heretofore prepared by the department. As was suggested in the annual report of the department for the year ending June 30, 1911, said act of June 25, 1910, permits the location, occupation, entry, purchase, and mining upon withdrawn lands of all forms of mineral deposits other than deposits of coal, oil, gas, and phosphates, leaving no adequate protection for withdrawn areas valuable for their mineral deposits of potash or nitrates.

Attempts have been made also to secure title to withdrawn lands for the removal of sand and gravel, and difficulties have arisen in connection with claims presented for alleged stone and gypsum deposits, which opens the way to serious abuse when attempted upon lands withdrawn for important public purposes, such as water-power sites or storage reservoirs.

The form of the bill submitted would in future confine occupation, exploration, purchase, and mining upon lands withdrawn under said act of June 25, 1910, to metalliferous minerals, and while thus affording opportunity for the development of this valuable class of minerals would prevent the disposition or attempted acquisition of these lands under locations and applications advanced under the mining laws for nonmetalliferous deposits.

Attention is called to line 7, page 1, of the bill, as printed, and it is suggested that instead of reading within the quotation "Sec. 1" the designation should be "Sec. 2," for it is section 2 of the act of June 25, 1910, which is amended.

The bill submitted meets with the entire approval of the department, and it is respectfully recommended that the same be enacted.

Very respectfully,

SAMUEL ADAMS,
First Assistant Secretary.

On March 29, 1912, Mr. RAKER introduced in the House bill H. R. 22582, which is in the identical language of Senate bill 5679 as passed by the Senate, with the exception that it adds the word "California" as herein stated. The House bill is as follows:

[H. R. 22582, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

A bill to amend section 2 of an act to authorize the President of the United States to make withdrawals of public lands in certain cases, approved June 25, 1910.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act of Congress approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 847), be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That all lands withdrawn under the provisions of this act shall at all times be open to exploration, discovery, occupation, and purchase under the mining laws of the United States, so far as the same apply to minerals other than coal, oil, gas, phosphates, potash, and nitrates: Provided, That the rights of any person who, at the date of any order of withdrawal heretofore or hereafter made, is a bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas bearing lands and who, at such date, is in diligent prosecution of work leading to the discovery of oil or gas, shall not be affected or impaired by such order so long as such occupant or claimant shall continue in diligent prosecution of said work: And provided further, That this act shall not be construed as a recognition, abridgment, or enlargement of any asserted rights or claims initiated upon any oil or gas bearing lands after any withdrawal of such lands made prior to June 25, 1910: And provided further, That there shall be excepted from the force and effect of any withdrawal made under the provisions of this act all lands which are, on the date of such withdrawal, embraced in any lawful homestead or desert-land entry heretofore made, or upon which any valid settlement has been made and is at said date being maintained and perfected pursuant to law; but the terms of this proviso shall not continue to apply to any particular tract of land unless the entryman or settler shall continue to comply with the law under which the entry or settlement was made: And provided further, That hereafter no forest reserve shall be created, nor shall any additions be made to one heretofore created, within the limits of the States of California, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Colorado, or Wyoming, except by act of Congress."

Bill H. R. 22582 was referred to the Secretary of the Interior, and he made the following report thereon:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 10, 1912.

Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I am in receipt, by reference from the White House, of copy of H. R. 22582, Sixty-second Congress, second session, accompanied by your request to the President of April 1, 1912, for suggestions and recommendations thereon, and also have received your letter of the same date addressed to the department requesting a report on the same bill.

The bill submitted provides for amendment to section 2 of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., 847), by adding to the enumeration of minerals in the first sentence of said section "potash and nitrates." The effect of the amendment will be to preclude exploration, discovery, occupation, or purchase under the mining laws of withdrawn areas containing deposits of potash and nitrates. The department is favorable to such legislation, but would recommend that, in lines 10 and 11, page 1 of the printed bill, the words "minerals other than coal, oil, gas, phosphates, potash, and nitrates" be stricken out and in lieu thereof the words "metalliferous minerals" be inserted.

Attention is called also to line 7, page 1 of the bill as printed, and it is suggested that instead of reading within the quotation marks "Section 1," the designation should be made "Section 2," for the reason that it is section 2 of said act of June 25, 1910, to which the amendment relates.

It is noted that to the list of six States mentioned in the last proviso in the original section, relating to the creation of forest reserves, the State of California is added by the present bill. As the Department of Agriculture is more directly concerned with this feature of the proposed legislation than is this department, and as I am informally advised that the Agricultural Department also has this bill under consideration for report, no further comment upon this change is necessary.

In connection with this bill I would invite your attention to Senate bill 5679, which is similar to the bill here under consideration, save that the terms "metalliferous minerals" are employed in place of the enumeration of the nonmetallic substances—coal, oil, gas, phosphates, potash, and nitrates—and that the State of California is not added to the proviso above mentioned. On March 21, 1912, the department submitted a favorable report upon said Senate bill 5679.

This legislation is in line with suggestions contained in the annual report of the department for the year ended July 30, 1911, in which it was, in substance, stated that the act of June 25, 1910, now permits the location, occupation, entry, purchase, and mining upon withdrawn lands of all forms of mineral deposits other than those of coal, oil, gas, and phosphates, leaving no adequate protection for withdrawn areas valuable for their mineral deposits of potash or nitrates. Furthermore, attempts have been made to secure title to withdrawn lands for the removal of sand and gravel, and difficulties have arisen in connection with claims presented for alleged stone and gypsum deposits, which opens the way to serious abuse when attempted upon lands withdrawn for important public purposes, such as water-power sites or storage reservoirs.

The form of bill, modified as above suggested, would in the future confine occupation, exploration, purchase, and mining upon lands withdrawn under the act of June 25, 1910, to metalliferous deposits, and while thus affording opportunity for the development of this valuable class of minerals would prevent the disposition or attempted acquisition of these lands under locations and applications presented pursuant to the mining laws for nonmetalliferous deposits.

With the changes above suggested incorporated therein, the department respectfully recommends that the bill be enacted.

Very respectfully,

WALTER L. FISHER, Secretary.

House bill 22582 was referred to the Department of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Agriculture made the following report thereon:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, April 12, 1912.

Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. ROBINSON: I am in receipt of your letter of April 1, inclosing a copy of the bill (H. R. 22582), introduced by Mr. RAKER, to amend section 2 of an act to authorize the President of the United States to make withdrawals of public lands in certain cases, approved June 25, 1910.

National forest lands are not subject to appropriation under the timber and stone, desert-land laws, scrip locations, nor the homestead law except under the act of June 11, 1906 (33 Stat., 233). The forest lands are, however, open to location and entry under the various mining laws the same as if they were a part of the unreserved public domain. It is believed that a very small part of the national forest lands have been appropriated under the mining laws, except where the areas were chiefly valuable for the minerals contained therein. Only a very small area of national forest land, therefore, has been withdrawn under the act of June 25, 1910.

Nearly all of the withdrawals under the act of 1910 have been made upon the public lands outside the forest boundaries, since those lands are subject to appropriation under the public-land laws generally and have not the protection applied to areas within national forests. Since most of the withdrawals have been made by the Secretary of the Interior of lands entirely under the jurisdiction of his department, it is suggested that he be asked to report upon this proposed measure.

It is noted that in the proviso of the proposed bill that the State of California is added to the original bill. The effect of this would be that no lands chiefly valuable for forest cover could be withdrawn in that State or made a part of a national forest. At the time that language was first considered in Congress the Representatives of the State of California did not desire to limit the discretion of the President to establish national forests within that State. The bill which carried that amendment and became the act of March 4, 1907 (34 Stat., 56), limited the discretion of the President only as to the other six mentioned. Since that limitation has been imposed large bodies of land supporting merchantable timber have been found to adjoin several of the national forests. These lands are of the character and cover which it was directed that the President should set apart as national forests. Those areas could be administered in connection with the other forest land without material additional cost to the Government, and in many cases the lack of authority to administer them has often seriously hampered the administration of the adjacent national forests. Most of those areas which should be administered still remain unappropriated, because they are of the character which are not suitable for homestead entry, and in their present state they are serving no useful purpose.

I believe, therefore, that the last proviso in the bill should be stricken out.

Very sincerely, yours, JAMES WILSON, Secretary.

The bill being referred to the Department of Justice, it made the following report thereon:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., April 3, 1912.

Hon. J. T. ROBINSON,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of April 1, 1912, inclosing for report a copy of H. R. 22582, Sixty-second Congress, second session, amending section 2 of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., 847), which authorizes the President to make withdrawals of public lands in certain cases.

The changes proposed to be made in the act of 1910 are that lands valuable for potash and nitrates are added to those which, after being withdrawn, are not subject to exploration and purchase under the mining laws, and California is added to the States within which no forest reserves shall be created or any additions made to one heretofore created except by act of Congress. This is a matter of legislative policy to be determined by the Congress, and information respecting the subject is in the possession of the Departments of Agriculture and the Interior. It is not believed that this department can make any recommendation that would be of benefit to the committee further than to suggest that the number of the amended section be changed from 1 to 2.

For the Attorney General:

ERNEST KNAEBEL,
Assistant Attorney General.

House bill 22582 was referred to the President, and his report thereon is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, April 2, 1912.

Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. ROBINSON: The President directs me to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 1st instant, together with a printed copy of H. R. 22582, by Mr. RAKER, of California, upon which the Committee on the Public Lands of the House of Representatives desires a report, suggestions, and recommendations, and to advise you that he has referred it to the Secretary of the Interior.

Sincerely, yours,

CHARLES D. HILLES,
Secretary to the President.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES, NAVY DEPARTMENT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 20193) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to pay a cash reward for suggestions submitted by civilian employees of the Navy Department for improvement or economy in manufacturing processes or plant.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to offer periodically a cash reward for the suggestion, or series of suggestions, for an improvement or economy in manufacturing processes or plant, submitted within the period by one or more of the civilian employees of the Navy Department which shall be deemed the most valuable of those submitted and adopted for use: Provided, That to obtain this reward the winning suggestion must be one that will clearly effect a material economy in production or increase efficiency or enhance the quality of the product in comparison with its cost: Provided further, That the sums awarded to employees in accordance with this act shall be paid them in addition to their usual compensation and shall constitute part of the general or shop expense of the establishment: Provided further, That the total amount paid under the provisions of this section shall not exceed $1,000 in any month: And provided further, That no employee shall be paid a reward under this act until he has properly executed an agreement to the effect that the use by the United States of the suggestion, or series of suggestions, made by him shall not form the basis of a further claim of any nature upon the United States by him, his heirs, or assigns.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this bill as reported follows the form of the bill introduced by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] in relation to the Army, in the main, but it does not include the amendments which were inserted in the Tilson bill as it passed the House or as it became a law.

Mr. PADGETT. I think it is a copy of the Tilson bill as it passed the House. I do not know whether it is the same as the Tilson bill as it became a law.

Mr. MANN. It is a copy of the Tilson bill as reported to the House, not as it was passed.

Mr. PADGETT. This report says, "as it passed the House of Representatives, February 28, 1912."

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has that copy, but undoubtedly he did not follow that copy. Let me ask the gentleman this question first. The rest is perhaps more easily disposed of. In the Army appropriation bill we limit this to the Ordnance Department.

Mr. PADGETT. This applies to the other departments as well as the Ordnance in the Navy?

Mr. MANN. This applies to everything in the Navy. The other bill applies not to everything in the Army.

Mr. PADGETT. It says "economies in manufacturing processes or plant." It does not apply to clerical matters or anything of that kind. It applies only to the manufacturing department.

Mr. MANN. It would apply to economies in manufacturing processes or plant if you had a clerk in the department who made or devised one. I mean it applies all through the Navy to everything. We limited the proposition in the Army to the Ordnance Department. I do not know whether this is desirable or not. The matter was experimental. Does not the gentleman think that just at present, if we add this to the Navy, we ought to limit it in some way?

Mr. PADGETT. Well, sir, I do not know. In the Navy Department we have some other bureaus, but if the gentleman insists upon it, I would not object to his amendment.

Mr. MANN. Knowing, as we do, that this is an experiment—and I think a very wise experiment—and knowing that there is no possibility of doing a thing for the Army that we do not do for the Navy without getting into a controversy right away with the officers, I think this should be limited to the Ordnance. In other words, as soon as we do anything for one of these services that we have not done for the other we are pestered by the other to do the same thing for it, and if we apply this all the way through for the Navy we will have the Army on our shoulders insisting that the same thing be applied there. As long as it is experimental, let us temporarily confine it to the same branch of the service.

Mr. PADGETT. Has the gentleman an amendment there?

Mr. MANN. I have. Add, after the word "periodically," on page 1, line 4, the words "at such establishments of the Ordnance Department as he may select"; and then, over on page 2, line 3, add, after the word "cost," the words "and in the opinion of the Secretary shall be so worthy as to entitle the employee making the same to receive the reward."

Mr. PADGETT. Are those the only ones?

Mr. MANN. Then, on page 2, line 10, where it says "shall not exceed $1,000 in any month," change it so that it will read "for any one month," in order to make the two bills identical.

Mr. PADGETT. Very well, I have marked them here on the Army bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] offers amendments, which the Clerk will read. But first, does the gentleman from Illinois object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I do not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the committee amendment first.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 6, strike out the words "constitutes part of the general or shop expense of the establishment" and insert in lieu thereof the words "be paid out of the appropriation 'Pay, miscellaneous.'"

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 4, by adding, after the word "periodically," the following: "and such of the arms of the Ordnance Department as he may select."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 3, by adding, after the word "cost," the following: "and in the opinion of the Secretary shall be so worded as to entitle the employee making the same to receive the reward."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 10, by striking out the word "in" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "for." And by adding, after the word "any," the word "one."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FLOOD of Virginia). The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MINING EXPERIMENT STATION, SILVERTON, COLO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 22081) to establish a mining experiment station at Silverton, San Juan County, Colo., to aid in the development of the mineral resources of the United States, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to extend some remarks in the RECORD by printing, entitled "The Desired Oleomargarine Legislation," and also a bill prepared by the dairy interests.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman from Illinois gives his reasons for reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether my colleague, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] left any instructions with him in reference to this bill, in the nature of a request to have the bill passed on the calendar?

Mr. FOSTER. I will say that he did not.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask my distinguished colleague from Illinois how many bills there are on the calendar for establishing mining experiment stations in the various parts of the United States?

Mr. FOSTER. I think there is one in Colorado, one in California, one in Utah, one in Montana.

Mr. NORRIS. Is there any member of the committee that has not had a bill of this kind reported for him?

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Then you have not got around yet? [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, no.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I would like to make an observation, suggested by the question of the gentleman from Nebraska, and that is that if there were similar bills for the establishment of experiment stations all over the country, that would not indicate any lack of merit in this bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It would, however, indicate a widespread demand for such plants, and I do not believe that there is a spot on earth better fitted and more suitable for an experimental station than the San Juan region of Colorado.

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman is not a member of that committee, and I doubt very much whether his statement would be concurred in by members of the committee; for instance, the gentleman from California, who has a bill 2 or 3 inches lower down on the calendar to establish a station in California.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to my distinguished friend from Colorado that I rather share his views on the subject. I think probably there is no better place in the country more worthy to have an experimental mining station than Silverton. I have been there, and I was glad to get away as soon as I could. [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I do not think it would have hurt the gentleman to stay up there and let his physical and mental eye gaze and dwell on those magnificent mountain ranges; it might increase his stature.

Mr. MANN. I could get nothing to eat, but that was not the case with the other occupants of the bed. [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The trouble with the gentleman from Illinois was that he was a mere tenderfoot.

Mr. MANN. I went to the best hotel in the town. However, what I was going to say was that the Secretary has recommended that in a bill of this sort instead of the locality being specifically set out where the station is to be established, it would be wiser to leave the question of the specific location to the department. As the gentleman's location is the best in the United States, he would have no reason to fear leaving it to the department. It does not seem to me wise to pass bills locating the stations specifically.

Mr. NORRIS. The department has authority under the general law to locate an experiment station, has it not? I make that inquiry of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. FOSTER. I think not now.

Mr. MANN. I am not sure that under the bill we recently passed, if it has become a law, they have authority to accept lands for an experiment station.

Mr. FOSTER. If they get an appropriation they will have authority, if the bill passes, but it has not passed yet.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. If the gentleman will permit me, I am not at all surprised at the probable objection of the gentleman from Illinois to this bill of my colleague, but I am somewhat surprised that any man that has ever been in the San Juan region, one of the grandest and most sublime mountain countries of the world, a country where they have great big people that live neighbors to the stars, should speak of it in the slighting way that the gentleman from Illinois has just spoken of it.

Mr. MANN. Did I not say that it was the best place in the United States for a mining experiment station? What on earth does the gentleman want me to say about it?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. When the gentleman from Illinois says that, I want him to mean it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I do mean it.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I want him to say it in an entirely different way from what one is required to say certain things in the West. When you say to a man out there that he is a blankety blank, you must smile; but when the gentleman tells me that the San Juan country is the best place on earth for a mining station, I want the gentleman to make that statement in an entirely solemn and grave manner. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. It is impossible for me to look solemn and grave over a funny thing like this.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, this is my colleague's bill. He is necessarily absent. He did not leave me any instructions with reference to it, but I know something about it, because I am familiar with the country myself and have been in correspondence with different interests and persons in Colorado in reference to the matter. I want to say one thing in behalf of it, as indicating the desirability of the San Juan country as a location for a mineralogical experiment station, that while Colorado itself is perhaps the greatest diversified mining area within the boundaries of any State in the Union, and that therefore it might be expected that there would be a great deal of rivalry among the different mining camps scattered all over that State, and while Silverton is perhaps the most remote from the State capital of any of them, being far to the southwest in the heart of the San Juan Mountains, yet there is, so far as I know, no opposition whatever to this bill from any other section of Colorado. Even in Denver the business bodies, the State commissioner of mines, and all the mining interests of the State, so far as I know, wherever located, are a unit in favor of establishing this mining experiment station at Silverton, because it is recognized there that they have in that place the greatest conglomeration of formations and varieties of ores and mining conditions generally necessary to such a station that perhaps can be found in any like area in the United States, if not in the world.

In addition, the following joint memorial No. 46, introduced by Senator Joyce, was, on April 28, 1911, adopted by a unanimous vote of all the members of the Legislature of the State of Colorado:

To the President and Congress of the United States,
Washington, D. C.:

We, your memorialists, the Eighteenth General Assembly of the State of Colorado, do respectfully represent:

That the mining industry of Colorado, including the mining and the reduction of pure metal of the gold, silver, lead, copper, zinc, and tungsten bearing ores, is of vital importance to the welfare of this Commonwealth, and is of very great importance to the prosperity of our Nation at large; and that this industry furnishes employment to thousands of workmen, provides a market for the products of factory and farm, supplies gold and silver for the mints, and produces the industrial metals now indispensable to the progress of the many industries of our country;

That in mining, as in agriculture, from the very nature of the enterprise, there is and can be but very little cooperation in solving the problems of the industry; and that under the existing conditions a very large percentage of the metals contained in the crude ore, especially in the lead, zinc, and copper-bearing ores, is lost in the course of milling, or is sacrificed in attempting to ship the low-grade ore to distant smelters and in smelting that ore containing a big proportion of silica or other refractory and useless material; that the heavy percentage of loss of these metals experienced by the miners under existing methods of milling and ore dressing not only injuriously affects the mining industry itself, but constitutes a substantial and irretrievable loss out of the natural resources of our Nation; and the conservation of the metal wealth of our country must be accomplished, not by preventing the use of that metal, but by preventing its loss and waste;

That the Department of Agriculture of the United States has fully proven the efficiency of local or field experiment stations in solving the many problems of the farming industry, and there is every reason to believe that similar good results may be achieved by the same system of solving the problems of the mining industry;

That the San Juan mining region of Colorado, covering, as it does, a broad expanse of mineral territory, and including almost every known combination of gold, silver, lead, copper, zinc, iron, and tungsten bearing ores, as well as vanadium and uranium and other rare metals, and holding large deposits of low-grade refractory ores, is a most favorable place for the location of a Government experiment station:

Therefore, we, our memorialists, do respectfully and earnestly request and petition that the National Bureau of Mines and Mining may be allowed such funds as may be necessary for that purpose, and may be authorized and empowered to establish and maintain at Silverton, in the center of the San Juan mineral territory, a local mining experiment station, to be conducted under the charge of skilled chemists and metallurgists, and at which all metalliferous ores may be analyzed, and at which all known processes of ore treatment may be applied, tested, and compared, and at which new methods and processes may be developed and perfected—all to the end of improving the methods and conditions of the mining industry, and saving from waste and conserving the metal resources of our country.

Mr. LONGWORTH. How many stations are there?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. We have not any of these stations, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. There are none of them.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. But under the act providing for the Bureau of Mines, as originally passed, the Bureau of Mines has been carrying on coal-mining experiments, and they have established some experiment stations. I am not exactly familiar with the character of these, but what we desire is to carry on this experiment work in the precious-metal mining, as well as in coal mining. I will say further to the gentleman that I do not believe there is any more beneficial line of work possible to be encouraged by the Government at this time than that of precious-metal mining. Every man who lives in the mining regions knows that the mining industry is languishing, and yet it is a necessary industry. It is absolutely essential to the higest prosperity and development of this country that precious-metal mining shall keep pace with all other industries. We must have these metals. It is pathetic to-day to go up into some of the mining camps of the Rocky Mountains. Talk about your deserted villages! Some of them are practically graveyards. Go up there and contrast the mining camps of the Rocky Mountains to-day with our towns down in the mountain valleys—I do not care where you go. Yes; in Colorado to-day, which is considered the mecca of mining, Colorado, which is known the world over because of the bonanza princes it has produced, men who have come even to Washington and put up some of its most magnificent buildings from the products of these mines, you will find a deplorable condition. And it is the same in every mining State. Go to them and see those deserted, languishing camps and compare them with their farming villages. The greatest prosperity of Colorado to-day is in its farms and not in its mines. People out there in the Rocky Mountains talk land and water to you and not mining. I say, therefore, that this industry is languishing and needs all of the Federal encouragement it can get.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Mining Committee, about this particular bill. Can the gentleman inform the House whether it has been passed on by the officials of the Bureau of Mines, or has it been referred to them?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Secretary recommend its passage?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. What action does the department take in regard to these bills? Is there any understanding as to how many of these experiment stations we are going to have?

Mr. MANN. Oh, if the gentleman will permit me to answer, I doubt if it were possible to introduce enough bills to get the department to refuse to send the same recommendation in each case.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I will say they need more than one.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume they do, but I am trying to find out whether the department has made an investigation with a view of ascertaining how many they ought to have and where they ought to be. There is no doubt that if we started out to put an experiment station wherever there are prospects of a mine or the development of some mineral, we will have two or three hundred in each State, and we will have the country covered with these stations. There ought to be some system.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the question of just how many might be profitably established has ever been looked into and determined by the department. The department approves this and thinks that the purpose of the bill is one that is good. They give their approval to the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. What do they say with reference to the location, if anything?

Mr. FOSTER. They say, with reference to the location, that they do not believe it wise to state specifically that it ought to be located at any one particular place, but if it is located in the State of Colorado, to leave it to the department to determine the particular place.

Mr. NORRIS. Why is not that a good suggestion?

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman may be right about that.

Mr. NORRIS. You can take any mining locality in the United States and you could show it would be a good place for a mining experiment station. I presume that would be true of any locality.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to the gentleman from Nebraska that this particular place has the approval of the Legislature of Colorado and seems to be satisfactory to all of the people of Colorado, so far as we are able to determine.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman whether his committee has given the subject sufficient consideration, or if he has made investigation enough so that he can give the House an idea as to what the policy of the bureau is going to be with reference to the location of experiment stations, whether the committee could not report to us a general bill that would cover the subject entirely and give to the department, perhaps under such rules and limitations as might be provided in the law, the right to establish experiment stations.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, now, if the gentleman will call to mind that in the West, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Montana, California, and Nevada and those States which are looked upon as metal-mining States, not only metal mining, but they have a great deal of other minerals, such as coal, oil, gas, and those products which come from the earth, an experiment station possibly could be profitably located in every one of those States.

Mr. NORRIS. Possibly that is true, but you can not maintain an experimental station at every mine; you must limit it.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, you can not take up every mine in any one State or two States; that is absurd.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will permit, under the law is there any power to establish experiment stations?

Mr. FOSTER. No, sir.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then it must be done in every case by act of Congress such as in this case.

Mr. FOSTER. It must be by act of Congress; that is, under the present law. We passed a law through the House which is over in the Senate, which I hope will pass before Congress adjourns, which would, if they had the proper appropriations, enable the department to establish such experiment stations.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman think that a uniform law under these circumstances would be better instead of asking Congress to act on each particular project when it comes up?

Mr. FOSTER. That may be true, and yet we have established experiment stations of various kinds, fish-culture stations, and so forth.

Mr. NORRIS. While that is true, the gentleman must remember in the end when we pursue that course we get into a position that we did in regard to the Pension Office. For instance, the pension agencies were established until finally we abolished all of them, and we did it after a fight of five or six years. You can establish these things, but never without a heavy fight and a good healthy public conscience behind it, which always takes years to bring about, do you manage to do away with them. If you once put them in, you always have them.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to the gentleman from Nebraska this is the first time I remember its coming up in reference to establishing a mining experimental station at Silverton, Colo., and it seems to me, so far as the committee was concerned, to have a great deal of merit.

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I ask the gentleman how many of these projects have been favorably reported upon by the committee?

Mr. FOSTER. Four.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And this is the initiation of that policy?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, sir. It is not expected there will be more than one of these experimental stations in a State.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Where are those?

Mr. FOSTER. One in Utah, one in Montana, and one in California.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And there is no reason suggested to the judgment of the committee why there should not be 10 or 20 in a State?

Mr. FOSTER. It is not likely they would do that.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I would like to make a suggestion here, to pursue the line of argument followed by the gentleman from Nebraska and the gentleman from Ohio. I would like to say first that if it would help this proposition to eliminate Silverton as a specific location and just leave the Bureau of Mines discretion to establish a station anywhere in Colorado it saw fit, I would have no objection so long as an experiment station would be established in Colorado, and I would be glad to assume the responsibility of agreeing to such an amendment. Now, pursuing this line a little further, I believe there are substantial reasons why Colorado ought to be favored, if you wish to use that term, above all other States in the establishment of such a plant. I do not want to take up the time of the House to launch out into such an argument and give these reasons now on unanimous-consent day.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman one question, or two questions. Colorado is the leading State in the Union now in the production of metalliferous minerals?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. I do not remember just where the gentleman states that the State of Colorado had its own experiment station.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Colorado has a State school of mines which is an institution of national repute.

Mr. MANN. I thought the gentleman said the State had a mine experimental station.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. No, sir; they have a State school of mines.

Mr. MANN. It is the leading metalliferous State in the Union. Now, does not the gentleman think that Colorado ought to do something?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I call to the attention of the gentleman from Illinois this fact, that it is not a local industry. The gentleman knows that just one product of that industry in Colorado furnished this country with a paramount political issue for a good many years.

Mr. MANN. It is a great deal more of a local industry than the making of steel rails in my State.

Mr. MONDELL. You have a school of mines in Colorado, one of the best, which I understand ranks with any such institution in the world.

Mr. MANN. But you have not a mining experiment station in connection with that school.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. There are extensive and most valuable mining experiments carried on in connection with the school, which is maintained by the State.

Mr. MANN. That is the place for it instead of the Government providing a lot of experiment stations all over the country, such as the running of agriculture experiment stations in the country.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman will notice that it is not alone the question of metal mining, the precious metals, and so forth, that it furnishes the country and the world, but there is the mining of coal and other products.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, it is not a question of charity; we are no eleemosynary institution.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It is not a question of charity, but a question of national economy. I think gentlemen who are not particularly familiar with the facts know in a general way that the bonanza days are gone, that the days of the prospectors are gone, that mining has become much harder and a more expensive business than it was formerly. It is a matter of deep mining that requires a lot of capital, and it is a question of scientific methods if you want to extract the values from the low-grade ores, and that condition is what has brought about the necessity of a mining experimental station, for the experimental application of every method of treatment which will revive and stimulate this basic industry and enable people to continue in it with profit.

I think gentlemen know generally, notwithstanding its prime importance to the prosperity of the country, that there is not as languishing an industry to-day as that of the mining of precious metals. Colorado, it is true, as has been said, is the leading precious-metal mining State in the Union, but no State in the Union, I wish to say to the gentleman, has suffered so greatly by reason of the action of the Government or by reason of Federal legislation as the State of Colorado. It is only 19 years since her greatest precious-metal industry was absolutely stricken down, her mines closed, filled with water, and turned over to bats and owls, and the greatest silver camps in the world were completely wiped out. This is a consideration that might be pleaded as against the claims of any other State for an experiment station.

Mr. MANN. I love to hear my friend talk, but I believe I shall have to object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FLOOD of Virginia). The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I append to my remarks the following resolutions of the Silverton Commercial Club:

OFFICE OF THE SILVERTON COMMERCIAL CLUB,
Silverton, Colo., May 22, 1911.

Representative JOHN A. MARTIN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Silverton Commercial Club, including in its membership nearly all of the business and mining men of San Juan County, would ask for your personal assistance in the matter of procuring the National Government, through its Bureau of Mining, to establish at once a mining experimental station at Silverton, Colo.

The last General Assembly of the State of Colorado adopted by unanimous vote a joint memorial to the President and Congress asking the establishment of this station. We inclose a copy of that memorial for your consideration and assistance. It is hardly necessary to call your attention to the importance of the mining industry to Colorado and the Nation at large; but we do desire to emphasize the urgent need for Government aid in solving the problems of this industry. Out of every $100,000,000 worth of crude ore extracted from the mines of Colorado it is safe to say that from thirty to forty million dollars worth of the metals are irretrievably lost. In the low-grade mines (which constitute the permanent mining industry) from 30 to 40 per cent of the crude lead, zinc, copper, gold, and silver is lost in the process of ore treatment and reduction. Where the timber of a country is destroyed, it may be regrown in a limited number of years; but the metals lost in the process of reduction, returning as they do to earth and river bottom, are lost to our industries for all time.

These problems can be solved only by actual experimentation in the field, at the place where the problems exist. Silverton is situated in the center of the great San Juan mineral district and is undoubtedly the best place in the West for actual tests and experimentation. All kinds and combinations of ore are to be found in abundant quantities. Electric power is cheap and abundant. The coal fields are near by to the south. The town itself, surrounded as it is by the mines, has every convenience of the modern city; and from this point four railways extend to important mining districts. And this San Juan section, more than any other part of the West, has need of a scientific experimental station. It is a country by itself; broad in extent, capable of great and permanent production of metals, but holding many varieties of refractory ores which try the skill of milliman and metallurgist. This place was selected in the memorial of the Colorado General Assembly not only because it most needs the help of the national bureau, but because here the broadest opportunity for successful field work is presented.

We would ask your earnest and personal assistance in procuring the establishment of this mining experimental station. It will require an appropriation by Congress, which ought to be a fund of at least $100,000 to establish and equip the station and $25,000 per year for maintenance and operation. The plant will naturally demand the services of skilled metallurgists, able to do efficient work, and employed to give their whole time. And the station should not be limited to narrow bounds of experiment, but should be enabled to procure and test any process and every mechanical device that will save the metals.

And if the National Government, by means of such a limited investment, can substantially increase the saving of the precious and industrial metals, it will not only improve the condition of a great national industry but will accomplish a great conservation of the natural wealth of our country.

We would ask you to give every assistance within your power to procure the introduction and passage of a proper appropriation bill at the present session of Congress and to prevail upon the national Mining Bureau to establish the station this year.

Very respectfully, yours,

THE SILVERTON COMMERCIAL CLUB,
By W. N. SEARCY, President.
WARREN C. PROSSER, Secretary.
B. B. ALLEN,
J. A. MCCRIMMON,
JOSIAH WATSON,
A. W. HARRISON,
Directors.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Denver public-building bill and the Silverton bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PATENTS TO PUBLIC LANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 23238) to authorize the issuance of absolute and unqualified patents to public lands in certain cases.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in cases where patents for public lands have been issued to entrymen under the provisions of the acts of Congress approved March 3, 1909, and June 22, 1910, reserving to the United States all coal deposits therein, and lands so patented are subsequently classified as noncoal in character, to issue new or supplemental patents to such entrymen, conveying to them the absolute and unqualified title to the lands so previously entered, patented, and thereafter classified as noncoal.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand this bill, a year or so ago we passed a law authorizing agricultural entries upon land which had been reserved for mineral purposes and gave to homestead entrymen or others patent reserving coal deposits under the surface, and so forth. This bill now proposes if the department at any time takes this land out from under the withdrawal on the assumption that it does not have coal, the patentee shall get a patent with a complete title.

I see no occasion for changing the provisions of the law on that subject, but I would be glad to get some information from my distinguished and genial colleague from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I did not know these bills were on the calendar and that they were coming up for consideration. This bill, like the one that has just been objected off the calendar, was drawn and reported to the House from the Committee on the Public Lands by my colleague [Mr. TAYLOR], who is now necessarily in Colorado. I can say in behalf of this bill, and I can say it in behalf of every bill that Mr. TAYLOR has reported to this House from the Public Lands Committee, that I believe he is a man who is thoroughly informed and absolutely trustworthy.

Mr. MANN. We all believe that.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. He would not knowingly report to this House any measure touching the public domain and its resources jeopardizing the rights of the Government or of the people. I believe that he would be a conservationist in the true sense of the word. I have never read his bill or the report upon it. It was shown to me first by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who has it on his desk, where he has all of the bills every day, as I think all gentlemen know who have any interest in legislation. But I am somewhat familiar with the subject matter of this bill.

Now, it has always been the proud boast that an Englishman's home was his castle, and we have inherited that boast from the Briton, but it was a part of that boast that he owned the land under that castle from the center of the earth to the highest heavens. But these conservation doctrines that have been imported from Austria, Germany, Russia, and other ultra-monarchical countries, have changed all that, and now the entryman gets only a surface title to the land. The Government reserves everything beneath the soil in the way of mineral, oil, phosphate, and that sort of thing, and gives a vitiated surface title.

Now, if there is any one thing about which people are naturally hesitant, it is to take title to land which may be at any time entered by others, as has been the case with these coal lands. It is a thing that has hurt the West, for the entrymen frequently can not borrow money on these surface titles. Men do not want to loan money on surface titles. Men want to loan money on a fee simple. And you can explain until you are black in the face that the Government does it merely as a precaution; that it is a good title; but the money loaner asks, "Why have you not a fee-simple title to you land?" There is not a man within the hearing of my voice, and if there is I challenge him to get up on the floor and say so, that would buy one of these surface titles as long as there was any other kind of land that he could get. Would you, or you, or you? Would any gentleman get up on this floor and say he would take a surface title to land when he could get a fee simple? I put a practical question to you, but it is only one of many practical questions involved in this conservation theory, and which accounts for the retardation of the development of the West, and which accounts for the fact that the tide of emigration flows over this land into Canada and is one of the reasons why the House has passed a three-year homestead bill and why it will pass other legislation liberalizing the land laws before you get those lands settled up.

Now, what is this bill? Here is a bill that provides that where lands have been withdrawn as coal lands and the entryman has been required to take a surface title and it has been afterwards finally determined by the Government, through its Geological Survey, that there is no coal beneath this land, then, in that case, a fee-simple title shall issue to the entryman. Great heavens! What more do you want.

The Geological Survey has decided that lands are coal lands in character where it was estimated, where it was guessed at, that 3,000 feet beneath the surface there was a vein of coal 14 inches thick. Now, when they figure a proposition down that fine, when they characterize and classify land as coal land which is guessed to contain a 14-inch coal vein 3,000 feet down, it seems to me you can safely trust the Government in determining what this land is, and therefore there would not be very many settlers in danger of getting a fee-simple title to a rich coal mine.

I regret that I have not the time to-day to branch out on this proposition. There has not been a unanimous-consent day or a Calendar Wednesday this session in which we have not had conservation from breakfast until supper. Every little homestead bill and every little land bill prompts gentlemen to flock in here with ears pricked up, while they would go to sleep on a bill appropriating a hundred million dollars. I have not taken the time of the House on this subject heretofore, by reason of the fact that I have been considered an irreclaimable radical in regard to this matter. There are millions of acres of land that have been withdrawn on mere guesswork—whole counties and sections of the State—in the first flush of this conservation movement. The kind of conservation I have heard here is, nine-tenths of it, nothing but suspicion and speculation. They could not talk concrete facts because they do not know any concrete facts.

I say they have withdrawn whole areas because they allege there is coal under them and then have restored them because they have found there is no coal under them. Now it is provided here that where these lands are restored the entryman shall get a fee simple title to his land. In other words, he gets an American title to his land—the only kind of a title that is worth having and the only kind I would put my money in, even if I was worth millions of dollars. I would say, "Gentlemen, I do not want to buy lawsuits and suits for trespass and a lifetime of legal controversies. I want an indisputable title, and if you can not furnish that, then I will go where I can get it." That is what the West is up against in reference to all this legislation.

But, Mr. Speaker, this would be a fairer proposition. The gentleman from Illinois has reserved the right to object to this bill. I would thank the gentleman from Illinois for his attention now. This would be a fairer proposition—that, instead of my consuming the time of this House arguing why this bill ought to pass, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] ought to consume the time in convincing the House why it should not pass.

Mr. MANN. It would not take me so long.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The presumption of good faith is with this legislation, and the burden should be on the gentleman to show why this land should not be liberated in the manner we have asked that it be liberated. Nearly 10,000,000 acres of public lands was reserved in Colorado alone as coal lands. Just think of it! That is more than the area of some of the New England States. But there is coal only under small portions of that land. They have withdrawn areas in one tract as big as one of these little New England States. At the time that we passed the bill permitting agricultural entries on coal land, just two years ago, at which time the coal conservation policy had been in effect four or five years, I sent down to the Commissioner of the General Land Office for a statement of all lands which had been withdrawn, classified, sold, and otherwise dealt with in reference to coal. He sent me back a statement showing that out of nine and a quarter million acres withdrawn in the State of Colorado for a period of four or five years he had actually sold only 90 acres of that withdrawn land.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to interrupt the gentleman in the midst of an interesting speech, but this is the last day for the consideration of the Unanimous Consent Calendar. I do not want to object to the gentleman's bill, because I am not opposed to it; but I want to say that unless the gentleman will limit his remarks I shall be compelled to object.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is not fair to me. I yielded him five minutes, and, after he has been talking longer, he turns around and abuses me. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I am astonished. [Laughter.] That is the first time I have heard the gentleman from Illinois object to a unanimous consent since I have been in Congress. That shows how ungenerous the gentleman can be.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman did not know that the bill was pending until I called his attention to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PUBLIC BUILDING, RICHFORD, VT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 6899) increasing the limit of cost for the erection and completion of a public building in the city of Richford, State of Vermont.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limit of cost for a public building in the city of Richford, State of Vermont, authorized under section 4 of the act of May 30, 1908, be, and the same hereby is, increased from $60,000 to $74,000, and that the sum of $14,000 to provide for such increased cost be, and the same hereby is, appropriated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have a statement in reference to this bill, as to what is the necessity for increasing the limit of cost of the public building at Richford, Vt., from $60,000 to $74,000, and appropriating $14,000.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What number is that on the calendar?

Mr. MANN. I do not know what number it is on the calendar. Does the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] desire to make a statement in regard to it?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill is not present.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman from Vermont familiar with the situation there?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I live near the town.

Mr. MANN. What is the situation there?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The situation, briefly, is this: When the bill was passed and the appropriation made, the work of excavation was begun, and they struck a rock. Now, the proposition is, if they can not go any farther down, they must have the approach to the building 15 steps, which is higher than was intended. If they can excavate the rock, it will be put at the normal and proper height. It was the physical conditions which could not be foreseen when the estimates were made that is the reason for this increase.

Mr. MANN. The reason for the additional cost is the rock excavation which was not contemplated?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Exactly that.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this increase in the limit of cost of $14,000 does not appear to me to be necessary. What is the reason that the gentleman from Vermont gives for increasing the amount of money?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I will say that this bill arrived at its present legislative stage before I arrived at mine, and I am not so familiar with all the details as I might otherwise be. It is a simple question. When the estimates were made the physical conditions underlying the surface of the earth could not be determined, and when they got down so far they found this rock. I have seen the conditions as they are described in the committee report, and I know the report is true. It undoubtedly is a public nuisance now.

Mr. FOSTER. In excavating for a foundation for the basement, as I understand the gentleman, they came to this rock?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. It looks to me, from what the report says, that they must have got quite a hole in the ground there now by the fact that the people are complaining of the great amount of water that is held in there. I do not myself see a reason why they should go through.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It amounts to a question of the change of level.

Mr. MANN. The excavation has been made, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, but they did not contemplate the cost of the rock excavation.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me that the department, when it found these conditions, in place of coming back for more money should have changed it so that they would not have had to come back and call for an increase in the amount appropriated. It will say that there are many buildings planned where they come back, for one reason and another, and I think when Congress has given the amount or limit of cost of the building the Treasury Department should understand that they are to build the building for that cost and, unless there are some unusual conditions, it will not be increased. I do not think that the bill ought to pass.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I will say to the gentleman that these are unusual conditions. This is a post office, and if we have to change the level they will have to raise it up so that it will take 15 steps to reach it, and it will be daily visited by hundreds of men, women, and children. They can not go down any farther with the work because they have not the money.

Mr. FOSTER. How deep is the basement?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I can not tell the gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. I think, Mr. Speaker, that we ought to have all the information possible, and I will object.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont asks that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TIMBERLANDS OF THE CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIANS IN OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4753) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved April 26, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 137).

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell, upon such terms and conditions, under such regulations, and in such tracts as he shall deem advisable, the land and timber, together or separately, reserved from allotment under the provisions of section 7 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved April 26, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 137).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CARTER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MINING EXPERIMENT STATION, AUBURN, CAL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 22080) to establish a mining experiment station at Auburn, Placer County, Cal., to aid in the development in mineral resources of the United States, and to undertake any investigation or operation for the health and safety of persons employed in mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. RAKER. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Department of the Interior and the Bureau of Mines have reported favorably on this bill. They have suggested that it be not fixed at any particular place. Now, while I would like to see it located in the center of the mining district—California—I see no special objection because of the great benefit it would be to the mining interests of California, as well as in Nevada and southern Oregon, to leave it to be fixed at such a place as the Secretary of the Interior, under the advice of the Bureau of Mines, shall determine, if that would insure the passage of this bill, because I am very anxious to have this bill become a law. One can not help but marvel when he looks over the statistics of the mineral wealth that has been produced in California, Nevada, and southern Oregon, to see how little in the last few years has been done in behalf of the mining interests. We want more attention paid to mining interests of the West. We want to go right into these mining localities and get all out of the earth that can be done. No better investment could be made by the General Government than the work proposed by this bill.

Mr. MANN. Where does the gentleman say the State has its mining experiment station?

Mr. RAKER. The State has no mining experiment station.

Mr. MANN. With its enormous mineral wealth, why does it not have one?

Mr. RAKER. I suppose you might answer the same as in regard to agricultural matters. We are spending this year $60,000,000 for agriculture.

Mr. MANN. Who is expending it?

Mr. RAKER. The Government is expending it, or in the neighborhood of that.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman is way off.

Mr. RAKER. I have the statistics that were filed and put in the RECORD this morning, prepared by a gentleman who has knowledge of the fact.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman who has the knowledge is way off.

Mr. RAKER. I am speaking of the entire matter, over the United States.

Mr. MANN. Out of the General Government?

Mr. RAKER. Not alone.

Mr. MANN. No; it does not amount to twenty million. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend as part of my remarks the resolution passed by the mining congress held at Yreka, Cal., and the report on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[House Report No. 583, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

MINING EXPERIMENT STATION, AUBURN, CAL.

Mr. FOSTER, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 22080:

The Committee on Mines and Mining, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 22080) to establish a mining experiment station at Auburn,

Placer County, Cal., to aid in the development of mineral resources of the United States, and to undertake any investigation or operation for the health and safety of persons employed in mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries, and for other purposes, having had the same under consideration, respectfully recommend that it do pass.

This bill is a substitute for H. R. 17033, which was introduced for identically the same purpose.

The bill is as follows:

"[H. R. 22080, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

"A bill to establish a mining experiment station at Auburn, Placer County, Cal., to aid in the development of the mineral resources of the United States, and for other purposes.

"Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and is hereby, established at Auburn, Placer County, Cal., a mining experiment station which shall be under the supervision, management, and control of the Bureau of Mines.

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint as the superintendent of said mining experiment station one expert mining and metallurgical engineer, at a salary of $4,000 per annum; one chemist, at a salary of $2,500 per annum; and such other employees as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this act; and for the purpose of inaugurating and maintaining the said mining experiment station, including the payment of salaries, purchase of equipment, supplies, expenses of travel, payment of rent, and other expenses of every sort incident thereto the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to expend annually a sum not exceeding $25,000.

"SEC. 3. That it shall be the province and duty of said mining experiment station, under the direction of the Bureau of Mines, to conduct inquiries and scientific investigations concerning the mining, preparation, treatment, and utilization of ores and other mineral substances, with a view to improving health conditions, increasing safety, efficiency, economic development, and the prevention of waste in the mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries, and as will facilitate the proper and efficient development of the resources of the public domain, and to disseminate information concerning these subjects in such manner as will best carry out the purposes of this act.

"SEC. 4. That nothing in this act shall be construed as authorizing the Bureau of Mines, or any employee of said bureau engaged in the work herein provided for, to undertake any investigation or operation in behalf of any private party, except for the health and safety of persons employed in the mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries; nor shall any of the regular employees of said bureau engaged in such investigations have any personal or private interest in any mine or the products of any mine under investigation."

This bill is introduced for the benefit of the mining interests of California and the Government generally, and to look after the health and safety of the miners. The Sacramento Valley Development Association at a meeting held at Sacramento, Cal., on February 17, 1912, memorialized Congress upon this subject as follows:

Whereas House of Representatives bill No. 17033, introduced by Hon. JOHN E. RAKER, entitled "A bill to establish a mining experiment station at Auburn, Placer County, Cal., to aid in the development of the mineral resources of the United States"; and

Whereas California leads all other States in the value of its mineral products, which for the year 1909 amounted to approximately $83,000,000, in 1910 $88,000,000, and in 1911 $90,000,000; and

Whereas the proposed experiment station is in nowise a local matter, but is calculated to develop and improve the mining industry of the entire country and provide a greatly needed and exceedingly important educational opportunity to all persons interested in the mineral industries; and

Whereas Auburn, Placer County, is centrally located with reference to the great mining districts of the Pacific coast and very close to the city there are extensive deposits, including gold (quartz and gravel), ores of copper, iron, manganese, anomite and silver, galena and bismuth, and other minerals, such as granite, limestone, porphyry, marble, steatite, magnesite, borytasper, sciemite, asbestos, talc, kaolin, pottery clay, ocher, and quartz suitable for the manufacture of glass: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Sacramento Valley Development Association, in regular meeting assembled, this 17th day of February, 1912, does indorse said House bill No. 17033 and urges upon Congress the adoption of this bill as a matter of rendering material assistance to one of the greatest of the country's industries.

The above resolution was unanimously adopted at the regular monthly meeting of the Sacramento Valley Development Association held February 17, 1912.

O. H. MILLER, Secretary.

The Nevada City Chamber of Commerce, of Nevada City, Cal., have memorialized Congress upon this subject, as follows:

MARCH 31, 1912.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a recent meeting of this organization it was brought to the notice of the members that through your good offices a large quantity of valuable publications are being received and placed on the shelves of the headquarters. This matter shows a discriminating appreciation of the needs of this locality and your interest in our welfare. We also note with pleasure that the bill introduced by you for the establishment of a mining laboratory at Auburn, in our neighboring county, has been changed to eliminate the possibility of interfering with the business of our assayers, and in its present form has our complete support. In accordance with a motion at to-day's meeting, a vote of thanks was passed to you for your good work, and this letter is to inform you of the said action.

Trusting that you may continue to be successful in your efforts for the people of your district, we remain,

Very sincerely, yours,

NEVADA CITY CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.
W. W. WAGGONER, President.
GEO. B. FINNEGAN, Secretary.

The Auburn Chamber of Commerce have memorialized Congress upon this subject, as follows:

AUBURN CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Auburn, Cal., February 7, 1912.

Whereas a bill entitled "A bill to establish a mining experiment station at Auburn, Placer County, Cal., to aid in the development of the mineral resources of the United States, and for other purposes" (H. R. 10733), has been introduced in the House of Representatives at Washington; and

Whereas the mineral production of California for the year 1909 amounted, in round numbers, to $83,000,000; in 1910, $88,400,000; and to upward of ninety millions in 1911; and

Whereas the mountains and valleys of Placer County contain an immense amount of mineral wealth, including gold both in quartz and gravel, ores of copper, manganese, tungsten, chromium, and silver (in the Ophir mining district, close to Auburn), galena, bismuth, and other minerals, such as granite, limestone, porphyry, marble, steatite, magnesite, baryta, spar, selenite, asbestos, talc, kaolin, pottery clay, ocher, and glass sand; and

Whereas Placer County is lately reported by the Census Bureau as being the second county in the United States in the number of producing gold mines, Siskiyou County, Cal., being first; and

Whereas Auburn is on the main line of the Southern Pacific, 126 miles from San Francisco, 657 miles from Los Angeles, and 868 miles from Seattle, thus being easy of access from east, west, and south and as centrally located with reference to the great mining districts of the country as is practically possible; and

Whereas the project is in no way sectional, but calculated to develop the mining industry of the Whole Pacific slope and of the entire country; and

Whereas such a station would provide an important educational opportunity for the young men of California and be the means of recruiting a trained force of men to develop the wealth of the country: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Auburn Chamber of Commerce cordially indorses the said bill and urges upon Congress its adoption, and we also recommend other chambers of commerce and business organizations of the Pacific slope to take similar action; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to our Representatives in Congress and to kindred organizations on the coast.

Adopted.

JOHN T. BRAMHALL, Secretary.

The San Francisco Call, of California, of date February 19, 1912, speaking editorially upon this subject, says:

"NEED OF A SCHOOL FOR MINING PROSPECTORS.

"A mining experiment station for California would be a useful and valuable help for the promotion of this great industry, and in that view Representative RAKER has introduced a bill in Congress for the establishment in Placer County of an institution or this character.

"The Government has always been neglectful of this industry and was with difficulty persuaded to create a Bureau of Mines. Millions are spent annually on the Government Agricultural Department, and we believe this money is profitably used for the common good, but little or nothing is done by national agency to encourage or assist mining. The production of minerals, gold, oil, copper, and other products is one of California's leading industries, and it is properly the subject of scientific examinations and investigations for the ascertainment of the best and safest methods. It is an extremely hazardous trade and hitherto this aspect of the industry has been little regarded.

"There is besides a wide field for metallurgical and petrological inquiry. The mountains of California have been explored in a hazardous way by gold seekers, and sometimes they have stumbled on other valuable minerals, but usually by accident.

"The fact is that we do not yet know the full metallurgical potentialities of the California mining region, and it is likely that a school for prospectors would bring valuable and unexpected results."

The American Mining Congress, which is composed of the most able and representative mining men of the West, at its recent annual meeting in the city of Chicago unanimously passed the following resolution:

"Whereas the development of processes of ore treatment capable of handling with profit the vast low-grade deposits and mine dumps of our mining districts is of the greatest importance to the mining industry and to all related industries:

"Be it resolved, That it be the sense of the American Mining Congress that the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, memorialized to provide for the establishment, under the direction of the Bureau of Mines, of a metallurgical experiment ore-testing station or stations for the purpose of devising methods for the extraction of metals from low-grade ores and appropriate sufficient funds for such purpose.

"Resolved further, That the officers of the American Mining Congress draft a suitable bill providing for the proper carrying out of this resolution, and that copies of the bill and of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States and each Senator and Representative; and that the officers of the American Mining Congress use all honorable means to the end that such a bill may become a law, in view of the increasing importance and complexity of the mining and metallurgical industries, the deplorable waste in mining under present methods, and the great need of trained men to aid in improving these conditions and in developing greater safety and efficiency.

"Be it resolved, That the American Mining Congress, now in session at Chicago, urges the Congress of the United States at Washington to provide for aid and cooperation in the maintenance of mining schools in the several States in a manner analogous to that which has been done in behalf of agriculture.

"Be it resolved, That the members of the American Mining Congress and the friends of the mining industry throughout the country are hereby urged to cooperate in securing the proper legislation necessary to carry above purpose into effect."

There are many other organizations of business men throughout the West that are and have for some years past been very urgently appealing to Congress for relief in the manner provided by this bill. It should be remembered that while the National Bureau of Mines is doing a splendid work in its limited field and in a limited way, yet its energies are thus far practically entirely devoted to coal-mining industries. There has been no recognition thus far of the metalliferous mining industries of the West, and it is believed that that industry is entitled to consideration by the Government.

This bill was referred to the Department of the Interior for consideration, and the report of the Secretary of the Interior thereon is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 1, 1912.

Hon. MARTIN D. FOSTER,
Chairman Committee on Mines and Mining,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of March 21, asking for my opinion on House bills 22080, 22081, and 22088, relative to the establishment of mining experiment stations in the States of California, Colorado, and Utah:

The purpose of these bills is to provide for "inquiries and scientific investigations concerning the mining, preparation, treatment, and utilization of ores and other mineral substances, with a view to improving health conditions, increasing safety, efficiency, economic development, and the prevention of waste in the mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries, and as will facilitate the proper and efficient development of the resources of the public domain."

This purpose and the main features of these bills meet with my approval.

Such investigations will be helpful in the development of mining on the public lands of each of the States, both within and without the national forest reserves; and the necessary expenditures for conducting these investigations will be justified more than under ordinary conditions, for the reason that in these States the Government is itself largely interested in any and all investigations looking to the proper development of the mining and metallurgical industries.

I believe, however, that in each of these bills, instead of locating specifically in each State just where the experiment station is to be established, it would be wiser to leave the question of specific location to the department, so that the investigations might be conducted from time to time at whatever point there proved to be most need of investigations and where the investigations might be carried on under the most favorable conditions. Indeed, a movable location for each station might enable the department to carry out the purposes of these bills with greater economy and efficiency than could be done under any other plan.

Under the provisions of these bills there can be no possible conflict of interests between the investigations for which they provide and the work of private mining and metallurgical engineers and chemists.

Very respectfully,

WALTER L. FISHER, Secretary.

The report of the Secretary, as will be observed from the above, is favorable. There is a suggestion that it would be wiser to leave the question of the specific location of the station to the Department of the Interior rather than fixing it at any particular place. The reason your committee has not followed that suggestion is because it is believed that in designating the place which is approved by various mining organizations and mining men the judgment and wishes of these should be considered in that respect.

Within a radius of 100 miles from the proposed location there is practically every known combination of gold, silver, lead, copper, zinc, iron, tungsten, and other mineral-bearing ores, and that a great deal of it is what is known as low-grade refractory ores—that is, ore which is difficult to treat. There are very large deposits and a great variety of it there, and the mining interests of the State have felt that there ought to be an experimental mining station in the mining regions, in charge of skilled chemists and metallurgists, for the purpose of not only analyzing and testing those ores but to devise, if possible, new means and processes of treatment—means and methods of aiding the mining industry and saving from waste and conserving the metal resources of the country and making the very valuable mineral substances in this region available for the use and general welfare of the Nation.

On behalf of the mining industry of the Pacific coast it was shown to your committee that the welfare of this Nation is very much dependent upon and affected by the conservation and economical production and treatment of the metals of the Western and Pacific Coast States; that the gold and silver, copper and lead, zinc and iron, vanadium and uranium, and other rare metals that are produced in the Sierra Nevada and other mountain regions are really the lifeblood of the business of this country and the basis of our prosperity; that the metalliferous mining industry is being neglected and has been neglected; and that metalliferous mining at the present time is at comparatively low ebb. It is believed by your committee that if the Government could assist in evolving processes of handling low-grade ores—that is, ores running below $10 per ton—thousands of mines would be opened and the wealth of the world would be added to by many hundreds of millions of dollars.

It was shown that there are a large number of valuable substances that can not under the present process be handled at all, and the problem of the rejuvenation and continued prosperity of the mining industry depends upon the establishment of the metallurgical experiment stations at which scientific and practical work along that line can be done.

The mining men of the Pacific coast and Sierra Nevada and other western mountains feel that the Government should take an interest in and assist in finding means of treatment of the low-grade refractory ores and get them into a merchantable condition. That will require experiments, expenditures, and skilled expert knowledge of the highest class. They prefer to have experts on the ground there to examine the ores and the metal formations as they exist in nature. The place designated in the bill is located in the center of one of the principal mining and metalliferous portions of the State and is advantageously and suitably located for a mining experiment station.

Auburn is on the main line of the Southern Pacific, 126 miles from San Francisco, 657 miles from Los Angeles, and 868 miles from Seattle, thus being easy of access from east, west, north, and south, and is as centrally located with reference to the great mining districts of the country on the Pacific slope as is practically possible.

The project is in no way sectional, but calculated to develop the mining industry of the whole Pacific slope and of the entire country.

The following shows the amount of money obtained from the sale of public mineral lands from 1901 to 1910, inclusive, and a statement of the mining interests and their past want of consideration:

Proportion of reclamation fund arising from receipts of sales of coal and mineral lands for the fiscal years 1901 to 1910, inclusive.

[1] A deduction of 5 per cent on account of grants to all reclamation States, except Colorado, for purposes of education or of making public roads, has been made from the total receipts from sales of coal and mineral lands.

A small fraction of 1 per cent for fees and commissions of registers and receivers has not been deducted in preparing this statement.

The funds arising from the sale of public lands and set aside for the reclamation work in the public-land States, as indicated by the accompanying tabular statement, during the 10 years ending June 30, 1910, have approximated $65,357,000. Of this amount, $4,000,000 has been derived from the sale of coal lands, and about $2,779,000 from the sale of other mineral lands, making a total derived from the sale of mineral lands of $6,793,000.

During these 10 years this entire fund arising from the proceeds of the sale of all such public lands, including the $6,793,000 arising from the sale of coal and other mineral lands, has been devoted to the upbuilding of agriculture in the public-land States, and no part of this fund has gone to help the mining industry in any of these States.

During this time the mining industry in the public-land States has fallen far behind agriculture in progressive development. Many branches of the industry are showing the need of extended investigations.

The question now raised is as follows:

In view of the fact that the great reclamation work of the Federal Government is now under way, that the policies and principles of irrigation in the arid lands are now well established, that private enterprise is now developing numerous smaller irrigation projects in each of the public-land States, and that the reclamation work of the Federal Government has now reached the stage at which the income from the sale of water rights will rapidly add to the funds arising from the sale of public lands and available for irrigation purposes, is it not right and feasible that at this time some considerable portion of the proceeds from the sale of mineral lands should, for a time, be devoted to investigations looking to the upbuilding of the mining industry in the several public-land States?

The principle of equity in this proposition has already been well established, in that the proceeds arising from the administration of the public forest lands in the West have been largely reappropriated for the care and development of the forest lands; and the application of this principle in behalf of the mining industry would have been called for when the reclamation service was established but for the generous desire on the part of all parties in the West that the principle and the policy of irrigation, by both public and private agencies, should be inaugurated and fully established.

Now, however, that this has been accomplished, and that the mining industry in turn is in need of funds for investigations looking to its further development, the principles of right and equity in behalf of the mining industry should receive recognition.

Your committee believes that the welfare of the miner as affects his health and safety and as affects the general welfare of the whole country demands that due recognition and encouragement should be given to the metalliferous-mining industry and the miners of the West and Pacific coast, and recommends the passage of the bill.

THE MINING CONGRESS.

The Southern Oregon and Northern California Mining Congress, held at Yreka July 25 and 26, 1912.

RESOLUTIONS.

I.

Whereas under existing conditions the procedure necessary to the obtaining of patents to mineral lands is complex and often occasions unnecessary delay, which is discouraging to the miner of limited means: Be it therefore

Resolved, That we earnestly recommend a simplified procedure governing the procuring of patents to mineral lands.

II.

Resolved, That we again go on record as commending the splendid work of the American Mining Congress in the legislative creation of the Bureau of Mines and for its assistance and work in placing the mining industry on a better basis, and that we pledge our influence to render any assistance possible.

III.

Whereas it is recognized by the Northern California and Southern Oregon Mining Congress that the topographic and the geologic folios issued from time to time by the United States Geological Survey are of prime importance for the proper study, unfolding, and development of mineral resources; and

Whereas there have been prepared for this territory many such maps and publications, including sheets known as Shasta, Shasta Special, Modoc, Lava Beds, Lassen, Ashland, Crater Lake Special, Grants Pass, Riddles, Roseburg, and there are extensive and important areas remaining to be mapped in this territory: Be it therefore

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this assemblage that encouragement should be lent to the Geological Survey in its labors to supply maps and to carry on additional surveys, and it is urged upon our Representatives in Congress, Messrs. RAKER and HAWLEY, and upon our Senators from Oregon and California that proper and effective measures be taken to the end that this work shall not lag, but that these unmapped sections shall be speedily surveyed and the results published; that the secretary is hereby instructed to forward copies of this resolution to the Director of the Geological Survey and one each to Representatives HAWLEY and RAKER, and to our United States Senators, all at Washington, D. C.

IV.

Whereas under existing conditions the development and operation of the many rich mining properties in this district is greatly retarded owing to the excessive freight rates charged by the railways and other transportation companies in this district for the transportation of the ores from mines to the places where said ores can be successfully and profitably treated; and

Whereas the general good of the whole people of said respective States is inseparably linked with the building up of the great industry of mining in all of its various phases, which general good is also retarded by the handicap placed upon the development of mining properties by the railroads and other transportation companies through excessive freight and transportation rates: Therefore be it

Resolved by this congress, That the legislatures of said respective States and the State railroad commissions of said States and the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and they are, requested and urged to make a thorough investigation into existing freight and transportation rates now in force in this district and to secure such reduction thereof as will enable the miner to better develop the many rich properties now lying dormant for want of such equitable transportation rates.

V.

Whereas the interpretation of the mineral laws of the United States is frequently burdensome as applied by the Interior Department and detrimental to the prospector and mining industry relative to the use of water and timber: Be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of this congress that the Secretary of the Interior be memorialized to the end that such encouragement should be given the prospector and mining people as will tend to upbuild the mining industry, and that because of the importance and far-reaching influence on all other industries such complaints as are laid before any of the governmental departments should be considered with a view of liberality to the end that it will encourage and stimulate the efforts of those who are the forerunners in locating and developing our mineral resources.

VI.

Whereas the State mining bureau has long been recognized as one of the most valuable and helpful to the miner of all the various departments and bureaus of the State, and as an institution when adequately provided with money is capable of still doing a vast amount of good in aiding and fostering the mineral industry of the State: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the members of this convention earnestly request the Legislature of California at its next regular session to make an appropriation for the support of the State mining bureau in such an amount as shall enable the State mineralogist to take up and carry forward the work of his department in a proper and in a more comprehensive manner than has been possible during the past 15 years.

VII.

Whereas the State Bureau of Mines of Oregon has been organized to do similar work to that of the Mining Bureau of California, and has shown itself during the year, with the limited means available, to be very valuable in aiding and fostering the mineral industry of Oregon: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the members of this congress do all in their power to induce the Legislature of Oregon, at the next session, to make an appropriation for the State Bureau of Mines in such an amount as shall enable the director thereof to carry forward the work of the department in proper and efficient manner, according to the provisions of the law creating said bureau.

VIII.

Whereas the investing public is frequently placed at the mercy of unscrupulous mine and other promoters; and

Whereas the field of legitimate investment in this district is large and splendid opportunities exist here for the safe and profitable investment of capital in our mining industries, but that a condition of unrest and suspicion exists in the minds of those seeking legitimate investment because of fake schemes frequently floated by such unscrupulous operators: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this congress is opposed to the floating of worthless stock or mining properties of any kind and will do all within its power to expose any such frauds as may come to our notice to the end that our mining industry may thereby be advanced.

IX.

Whereas the Panama-California Exposition at San Diego, through its commissioner, Mr. Jefferson Davis, has courteously extended to this convention an invitation to hold a session thereof in San Diego in the year 1915, and to make a suitable mineral display at the exposition to be held in that city during said year: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we tender to said exposition commission a vote of thanks for its cordial invitation, and we heartily indorse the suggestion to make such a suitable mineral display, and we also recommend in this connection that a suitable mineral exhibit be displayed by this district at the Panama-Pacific Exposition to held at San Francisco in the year 1915.

X.

Whereas the prospector of the various counties and the States of Oregon and California is the the actual pioneer in the mining industry and is subjected to many hardships and struggles: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this congress pledge all reasonable aid and assistance to further the interest of the prospector; and be it

Further resolved, That a sepcial invitation be, and the same is hereby, extended to all prospectors to become members of this congress.

XI.

Whereas it is the opinion of this committee that it will be for the best interests of this congress that the times of the semiannual meetings thereof be changed: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the semiannual meetings of the congress be hereafter held in the months of May and October instead of in the months of January and June.

XII.

Whereas the city of Yreka and county of Siskiyou have gone to great trouble and expense in their efforts to entertain the members of this congress during the session now in progress and in the preparation of the exceedingly rich, beautiful, and altogether splendid exhibit of ores here displayed; and

Whereas every courtesy has been extended by them to our members, making our stay here one of pleasure as well as of vast good, thereby greatly cementing the bonds of friendship existing between the miner and the prospector of the different localities embraced within this district, and also greatly promoting the good cause we champion: Now therefore be it

Resolved by this congress, That a vote of thanks be, and the same is hereby, extended to the loyal, patriotic, progressive, and exceedingly courteous citizens of Yreka and Siskiyou County for this splendid entertainment and their untiring efforts in making this meeting the marvelous success it is, and the lasting good which is sure to come herefrom to the mining and allied interests of the States of Oregon and California; and be it further

Resolved, That a vote of thanks be extended to the people of Shasta for the magnificent display made here from said county and for the great interest manifested by them in the work of this congress; and we heartily recommend that the next meeting of this congress be held at Redding, in said county, as suggested and recommended by the committee on time and place of next meeting.

XIII.

Ever since the prospectors of forty-nine blazed the trails over the Sierras and opened to the world the wealth of our gold mines the policy of the United States, in splendid recognition of their splendid service, has been to keep open to their class the mineral lands. This policy, incorporating as it has the miners' rules, adopted at miners' meetings, into the laws of the land, after half a century trial has proved both its wisdom and its fairness. The prospector is still the greatest individual benefactor to the world's development. The "grub stake" is still the most patriotic investment. Every dollar dug from the earth by the miner is a new dollar added to the wealth of the Nation, and it is a clean dollar. Over 300,000,000 of such dollars have been found by the prospector and miner and milled by the miners from the very mineral belt which this congress represents. Within this same area, hidden in vein and ancient channel, are still immeasurable treasures. Every mine casts its trace. The prospector with pick and pan, pluck and patience, seeks the trace and follows it to the mine. This trace must be left for the prospector to follow. The mine must remain his to find, and with the finding the right to work must be his.

Contravening this policy and denying to the prospector these long-unquestioned rights, the Central Pacific Railway is now claiming practically one-third of the great mineral belt, extending through Jackson and Josephine Counties, Oreg., and Siskiyou, Trinity, and Shasta Counties, Cal. This claim is in defiance of the express terms of its grant and is against the very language of its patents.

Believing this claim to be without right and that its blight upon the mining industry should be removed, not by driving the miner to engage at his own expense in litigation with that powerful corporation but by Government action, without expense to the miner, just as is being done toward the oil lands to-day: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the miners of southern Oregon and northern California, in this congress assembled, do hereby respectfully request the proper Federal and State authorities to take immediate steps within this mineral belt to have the mineral lands therein covered by claims or patents to the Central Pacific Railway Co. or its affiliated corporation or its predecessors in interest exempted and segregated from said claims and patents and restored to public domain and to the right of the miner to prospect for and locate claims thereon: Be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution, properly certified, be sent to the Attorney General of the United States, the Director of the Bureau of Mines, our Congressmen and United States Senators, and the State mineralogists of Oregon and California.

XIV.

Be it resolved, That it is the sense of this congress that the national forest policy and service has proved an efficient agency not only in preserving for the prospector the undiscovered mineral deposits in the district, by preventing their acquisition through nonmineral entries, but in facilitating their location, enjoyment, and patenting by good faith mineral claimants in accordance with laws passed in the interest of miners: Be it further

Resolved, That it is the sense of this congress that the Forest Service employees in the field should be authorized to investigate, in connection with the miners, the lands covered by railroad grants and other nonmineral patents in the mineral belt, preparatory to Government action in having such lands as are mineral exempted and segregated from lands properly held under such grants as nonmineral patents.

CORVALLIS AND YAQUINA BAY MILITARY WAGON ROAD.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8151) providing for the adjustment of the grant of lands in aid of the construction of the Corvallis and Yaquina Bay military wagon road and of conflicting claims to lands within the limits of said grant.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill is rather long. I do not know whether there is anyone here representing it. I will ask to have it passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DELTA DIVISION, NORTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF MISSISSIPPI.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25342) to amend section 90 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 90 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 90. The State of Mississippi is divided into two judicial districts, to be known as the northern and southern districts of Mississippi. The northern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Alcorn, Attala, Chickasaw, Choctaw, Clay, Itawamba, Lee, Lowndes, Monroe, Oktibbeha, Pontotoc, Prentiss, Tishomingo, and Winston, which shall constitute the eastern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Benton, Calhoun, Carroll, De Soto, Grenada, Lafayette, Marshall, Montgomery, Panola, Tate, Tippah, Union, Webster, and Yalobusha, which shall constitute the western division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Bolivar, Coahoma, Leflore, Quitman, Sunflower, Tallahatchie, and Tunica, which shall constitute the Delta division of said district. Terms of the district court for the eastern division shall be held at Aberdeen on the first Mondays in April and October; for the western division, at Oxford on the first Mondays in June and December; and for the Delta division, at Clarksdale on the fourth Mondays in January and July: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Clarksdale are furnished free of expense to the United States. The Southern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Adams, Amite, Copiah, Covington, Franklin, Hinds, Holmes, Jefferson, Jefferson Davis, Lawrence, Lincoln, Madison, Pike, Rankin, Simpson, Smith, Scott, Wilkinson, and Yazoo, which shall constitute the Jackson division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Claiborne, Issaquena, Sharkey, Warren, and Washington, which shall constitute the western division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Clarke, Jones, Jasper, Kemper, Lauderdale, Leake, Neshoba, Newton, Noxubee, and Wayne, which shall constitute the eastern division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Forrest, George, Greene, Hancock, Harrison, Jackson, Lamar, Marion, Perry, and Pearl River, which shall constitute the southern divisison of said district. Terms of the district court for the Jackson division shall be held at Jackson on the first Mondays in May and November; for the western division, at Vicksburg on the first Mondays in January and July; for the eastern division, at Meridian on the second Mondays in March and September; and for the southern division, at Biloxi on the third Mondays in February and August. The clerk of the court for each district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at each place in his district at which court is now required to be held at which he shall not himself reside, which shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of the court. The marshal for each of said districts shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at each place of holding court in his district."

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, the only change that this bill effects in the present law is to insert the county of George into the southern division of the southern judicial district of Mississippi. It was placed there by act of Congress February 5, 1912. This same section was amended by an act passed May 27, 1912, and this county was omitted. It is only to make a correction to that extent.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

OTTER AND BEAM TRAWLING.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House joint resolution 173, providing for an investigation by the Commissioner of Fisheries as to the destructiveness of the method of fishing known as beam trawling.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Commissioner of Fisheries be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to make an investigation into the method of fishing known as otter and beam trawling and to report to Congress whether or not this method of fishing is destructive to the fish species or is otherwise harmful or undesirable.

SEC. 2. That in the event that the Commissioner of Fisheries finds this method of fishing to be destructive, harmful, or undesirable he shall recommend to Congress such legislation as he may deem necessary.

SEC. 3. That an appropriation is hereby authorized for carrying into effect the provisions of this resolution.

The SPEAKER. This resolution is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I suggest to the gentleman that there is an item dealing with this same matter in the sundry civil appropriation bill. There does not seem to be any present necessity for the consideration of this resolution, and I suggest that the gentleman have it go over without prejudice.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Very well.

Mr. MANN. I suggest that section 3—which carries the appropriation—of the resolution be stricken out.

Mr. SHERLEY. Very well. Perhaps the matter could be better adjusted by striking out the third section. I am familiar with the bill and have talked with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], its author, who is very much interested in it and who has taken a great deal of trouble in promoting it. He desires that the bill be passed. I suggest that it be passed with that section stricken out.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "as," insert the words "otter and."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, if I may, to very briefly tell us what beam trawling is as distinguished from otter trawling. I know what otter trawling is.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I do not know the difference between the two. We had the bill first for beam trawling, and it was suggested to add otter trawling. I am not familiar with the fishing business, but the gentleman from Massachusetts, my colleague, Mr. GARDNER, is, and I suppose could fully explain it if he were present.

Mr. MANN. He is out of the House at present upon other business. He was here a moment ago.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I could not explain it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out section 3.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the House joint resolution as amended.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read: "A joint resolution providing for an investigation by the Commissioner of Fisheries as to the destructiveness of the method of fishing known as otter and beam trawling."

On motion of Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

CADETS SASSE, FREELAND, SIMPKINS, AND CHRISTIAN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was S. J. Res. 99, authorizing the President to reassemble the court-martial which on August 16, 1911, tried Ralph I. Sasse, Ellicott H. Freeland, Tattnall D. Simpkins, and James D. Christian, cadets of the corps of cadets of the United States Military Academy, and sentenced them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, some gentleman, I think, stated that he was very anxious to make a brief explanation concerning this resolution. I do not see him present now.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. MANN. I would be very glad to hear what the gentleman from Georgia has to say.

Mr. RODDENBERY. My colleague from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] can perhaps state the matter better than anyone else.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I have no personal interest in this resolution. One of the parties affected by it, however, resides in the district represented by my colleague, Mr. CLARK of Florida, who is absent on account of sickness. I have therefore been requested to look after the measure here in so far as it affects this individual. I think the resolution one that in all fairness should be passed, because it appears that these young men, for some minor offense, were taken before a board, their case investigated, and an order of dismissal from the Military Academy at West Point was made, under a misapprehension as to their duties and powers as fixed by the regulation under which they were proceeding. They seemed to think they were proceeding under a certain rule or order which had been amended, without knowledge at the time of the amendment. They state, in substance, as I understand, that if they had known of the change in order they would not have dismissed these young men from the academy, but would have inflicted some milder punishment. The members of the board are now willing to reassemble, if authority is given as contemplated in this resolution. It is believed that a rehearing would result in their reinstatement.

Now, if all this is true, it seems to me that there can be no reasonable objection to the passage of the resolution. If it is not done now, it is likely that it need not be done at all, as it will probably come too late if it is put off till next session. I therefore hope there will be no objection to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Kansas, I presume, have looked at the report, but perhaps it has not come to their attention——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kansas is heartily in favor of this bill with an amendment.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The Secretary of War gives his assent to this proposed resolution. These young men were tried just a year ago. The regulations existing at that time did not subject them to the extreme punishment and the court-martial was not apprised in law or in fact of the existence of such regulations——

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman permit a question? This is the first offense of these young men?

Mr. RODDENBERY. The record disclosed it is the first offense of any of these young men. The evidence in the trial, as appears in the record of the trial, is that none of the young men were boisterous; that there was no disorder created; that there was no complaint on the part of the public. These young men were not at the Military Academy, but off at a summer camp on vacation. They met the boys in the road, and they disclaimed any such conduct on the part of the other boys, and when the question was propounded whether the boys had been drunk, they made the statement they were not. They merely admitted having gone into a little place and bought some domestic wine of some kind and had drank that. They all plead guilty to the court-martial, but the impression seemed to be that there was a charge of drunkenness against them. Not at all.

Mr. FOSTER. It is under that regulation which prohibits the use of liquor.

Mr. RODDENBERY. "Cadets who shall drink or be found under the influence of intoxicating liquor." They plead guilty and were convicted of the charge of having drunk intoxicating liquors contrary to the regulations.

Mr. FOSTER. Their record in the academy was good.

Mr. RODDENBERY. It was good. Members will note that if these young men are to be reinstated and to return to the academy they should go now. The longer it is deferred the older they are and the longer separated from their previous training. I call attention to the fact that this does not require the reinstatement of these young men. It does not force a hearing. There is nothing in the resolution obligating the reinstatement of them, but it merely gives jurisdiction for that purpose, and I hope that the gentleman, unless there is some objection other than we have heard, will not insist upon denying consideration at this time. I desire to state that the interest I have in the matter personally is that one of the cadets was from my district. He was not appointed by me, but by my predecessor, who usually and invariably appointed the very best young man he could get in the district.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object to the bill in its present form, I want to say I have investigated this case. I have been to the academy as a member of the Board of Visitors and have devoted considerable time to looking into this case, and I have no hesitancy in saying to the House that I consider it a cruel and unusual punishment for these cadets for the very trivial offense of taking a drink. The former superintendent of the academy, who insisted upon this, has been ordered elsewhere and a new superintendent is there. I think that there was general complaint of his severe administration there, and I think these boys are entitled to be reinstated. It would be an act of justice for this House to pass this bill. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill has not been read yet.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I appreciate the fact that these young men have been partially punished, but if they should go into the Army the first thing that is necessary to learn is to obey orders and not think that they can escape a violation of orders through political influence. We are met with enough propositions coming from Army officers now, either on the active or retired list, to have special legislation in their favor, but to start young men in the Military Academy because they have succeeded in lobbying a bill through Congress will be contrary to maintaining their efficiency as Army officers, and, therefore, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects, and the resolution is stricken from the calendar.

REFUND OF DUTIES ON LACE-MAKING AND OTHER MACHINES, ETC.

The next business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12813) to refund duties collected on parts and accessories of lace-making and other machines imported prior to January 1, 1911.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand under the law passed in 1909 lace-making machines were exempt from duty. I would like some information about whether this bill provides for a remission of duty on parts and accessories of lace-making machines which were imported and paid the duty, and whether or not this bill was intended to cover parts and accessories of lace-making machines. If it does, I think this bill ought to pass; and if it does not, I think that the Treasury officials, the collectors of customs, must have decided at the time that they were not exempt.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, allow me to answer the question. The present rate on lace-making machines is 45 per cent. In order to stimulate embroidery and lace making in this country there was a provision put in the Payne Act that machines for that purpose might enter free of duty up to the 1st of January of last year. They were imported machines and parts of machines. Now, certain customhouses did not assess any duty on parts of these machines; other customhouses did. It was subsequently decided that all parts of these machines should come in free, and for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the law uniformly in all customhouses this bill was introduced. There was a mistake made by the collectors, and it was too late to rectify it except by special act.

Mr. FOSTER. As I understand this paragraph 197, the proviso saying that these machines should come in free of duty did not say anything about the parts, did it?

Mr. PETERS. If the whole machine is going to come in, it is intended that the parts should come in if they can be used for nothing else.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] that really these machines came in in parts in one shipment and the parts had to be adjusted. In some of the customhouses they treated the disconnected parts as one machine and admitted them all free of duty, but in other customhouses they let in the machines and the parts that went along with them were all taxed. It was all one machine, really, only some of the parts were not assembled, and it was a mistake of the customhouse, because when it came up the board of appraisers decided against the collector.

Mr. PETERS. These parts could only be used for an embroidery machine.

Mr. MOORE of Pennnsylvania. This bill is general in its application? It will cover all cases where duties have been paid?

Mr. PETERS. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And there can be no more claims of this kind?

Mr. PETERS. There can be no more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12813) to refund duties collected on parts and accessories of lace-making and other machines imported prior to January 1, 1911.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to refund all duties collected upon parts or accessories of all embroidery machines and Lever and Gothrough lace-making machines, machines used only for the weaving of linen cloth from flax and flax fiber, and tar and oil spreading machines used in the construction and maintenance of roads and improving them by the use of road preservatives shall, if imported prior to January 1, 1911, be admitted free of duty.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out after the enacting clause on page 1, and lines 1 and 2 on page 2, and substitute the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, all duties collected and not refunded upon all embroidery machines, Lever and Gothrough lace-making machines, machines used only for the weaving of linen cloth from flax and flax fiber (including preparatory machines), and also all parts or accessories of any of said machines, if imported subsequently to August 5, 1909, and prior to January 1, 1911."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I notice that in this bill they spell the words as though it was "Lever and Gothrough." The Clerk reads that, I think, properly, as "Lever and Gothrough." The lever and go-through name should not be spelled with a capital "L" and a capital "G." I would like to ask the gentleman whether this is a machine made by persons who invented it, or whether that is the name by reason of the operation of the machine, which operates with a lever and goes through?

Mr. PETERS. "Lever" and "Gothrough" are spelled with capital letters because these are trade names.

Mr. CURLEY. I will state that in comparison of the tariff bills of 1897 and 1909 it is set forth as the maker of the machine.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman examined the tariff act of 1909 himself?

Mr. CURLEY. I will say I have not. This is a report showing a classification of the others. Possibly the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] can inform us.

Mr. HILL. My understanding of the situation is that the name of "Lever and Gothrough" represents the character of the construction of the machine, but it is so peculiar in its character and construction that it is printed with capital letters both in the sales market and I think also in the law. It does not represent the name of any individual. It is simply a "lever and go-through machine," and stands about 12 feet upright, and is operated by a lever.

Mr. MANN. With my own slight knowledge of lace making I concluded that was the case, although I was informed by the gentleman who introduced the bill that it was the name of the maker of the machine according to the report he had. I know

I have seen it both ways, and I am inclined to think it ought to be spelled with capital letters. I do not know as I particularly care, if the department understands it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to refund duties collected on lace-making and other machines and parts or accessories thereof imported subsequently to August 5, 1909, and prior to January 1, 1911."

BRIDGE ACROSS THE DELAWARE RIVER SOUTH OF TRENTON, N. J.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5458) to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across the Delaware River south of Trenton, N. J., by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Pennsylvania & Newark Railroad Co., or their successors.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, this bill proposes to extend the time for the construction of a bridge by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. or some other railroad company under an old act of Congress that was passed prior to the passage of the general bridge law. If the gentleman in charge of the bill desires to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a new amendment which would give the authority to build this bridge in conformity with the provisions of the general bridge act, I shall have no objections. I am not in favor of extending the time for the building of bridges under acts passed before the passage of the general bridge act, and which probably contained none of the precautionary provisions that are contained in that law.

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that that is absolutely what is now intended to be done. At the time that this bill was originally brought from the Senate and reported to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce I, as the Member in charge of the bill, advised the railroad officials that they ought not, after the passage of the general bridge act, have an extension of time for any special bridge bill passed before that act, and they agreed to accept an amendment to the act striking out all after the words "A bill" and inserting in lieu of the act as it passed the Senate a bill which is an ordinary bridge bill, subject to all the restrictions and limitations of the existing general bridge act. I shall offer that amendment at the proper time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the act approved March 16, 1906, authorizing the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Pennsylvania & Newark Railroad Co. or their successors to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Delaware River between a point south of and within 1 mile of the southern boundary line of the city of Trenton, in the State of New Jersey, and a point south of and within 1 mile of the southern boundary line of the borough of Morrisville, in the county of Bucks and State of Pennsylvania, be, and the same is hereby, so amended that the time within which the said bridge shall be required to be completed shall be within five years from the date of the approval of this act: Provided, That the said bridge shall be built and completed in accordance with such plans as the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers may hereafter approve, and until such approval has been given no further work of construction shall be done by the said companies.

SEC. 2. That said act as thus amended be, and the same is hereby, revived and reenacted.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will send up his proposed amendment and have it read.

Mr. COVINGTON. I will send it up right now.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COVINGTON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the words "An act" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"To authorize the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Pennsylvania & Newark Railroad Co., or their successors, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Delaware River.

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, and the Pennsylvania & Newark Railroad Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of New Jersey, or their successors, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge, with as many tracks as they shall deem necessary for railroad traffic, across the Delaware River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between a point ½ of a mile south of and a point 1½ miles south of the southern boundary line of the city of Trenton, in the State of New Jersey, and a point south of and within 2½ miles of the southern boundary line of the borough of Morrisville, in the county of Bucks and State of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable water,' approved March 23, 1906.

"SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman if there has been any agreement or understanding between the people of Trenton—the authorities of Trenton—and the railroad people as to the location of this bridge?

Mr. COVINGTON. I will state to the gentleman from Florida that this bill was on the Unanimous Consent Calendar during the month of June, it being a bill that had passed the Senate without opposition. It was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, recommended favorably to that committee by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, duly reported to this House, and, being apparently without opposition, was called up for passage. On the date when it was reached on the Unanimous Consent Calendar it was objected to by one of the Representatives from the State of New Jersey.

In response to that objection I sought the precise reason for it, and found that the mayor of Trenton and other substantial citizens, representing the business interests of that locality, objected to the then location of the bridge. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce reopened the matter and authorized a subcommittee to hold hearings upon that, although the unusual situation was presented of hearings had on a bill that had been reported. As the result of those hearings it developed that there was a locality about half a mile below the location prescribed in the original bill which is absolutely satisfactory to all the business people interested in increasing the water facilities of Trenton and to the railroad officials and to the Chief of Engineers.

The present bill, I will state to the gentleman from Florida, has changed the location to meet the approval of all those interests and to meet the requirements of the general bridge act. I have upon my desk now—I presume the gentleman will not require me to take the time of the House to read them—letters from the Chief of Engineers and from the mayor of Trenton, stating that the new location is satisfactory to all the commercial interests of Trenton and to all interests of navigation.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I know that the original bill was objectionable to the authorities in Trenton and that a new bill had been agreed to.

Mr. COVINGTON. The gentleman is entirely correct, and the bill in its amended form satisfies all the interests concerned.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COVINGTON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COVINGTON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SALE OF CERTAIN LOTS IN HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25611) to authorize the sale of certain lots in the Hot Springs Reservation for church and hospital purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress approved June 21, 1894 (28 Stat. L., p. 95), entitled "An act granting the use of certain lands in the Hot Springs Reservation in the State of Arkansas to the Barry Hospital," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell and dispose of, at a price to be fixed by him after an examination of the premises, to the trustees of the Third Street Methodist Church of the city of Hot Springs, in the State of Arkansas, lots 4, 5, and 6, in block 115, in said city and State, and to the Barry Hospital, of the city of Hot Springs, in the State of Arkansas, a charity hospital organized and chartered under the laws of the State of Arkansas, lots 9 and 10 in block 114 in said city and State: Provided, That the grantees herein named shall make application to purchase within one year from and after the date of the passage of this act and make full payment of the purchase price fixed by the Secretary of the Interior within one year from and after notice thereof.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the bill in line 10, page 1, by inserting before the word "price" the words "fair market."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 10, by inserting before the word "price" the words "fair market."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PENSIONS FOR WIDOWS AND MINOR CHILDREN OF SOLDIERS IN THE WAR WITH SPAIN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 17470) to pension widows and minor children of any officer or enlisted man who served in the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that this bill is on the calendar for Calendar Wednesday as unfinished business.

Mr. MANN. It may be passed by unanimous consent.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO], who has charge of this bill, has been required to leave on account of illness in his family. In his absence I hope the bill may receive the consideration to-day that it can have under unanimous-consent requests.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to object, but I reserve the right to object. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts expect that this will consume much time?

Mr. MURRAY. No; the bill and the report accompanying it are very clear. It is the same bill that has been under discussion during the two last Calendar Wednesdays and, as the Speaker of the House suggests, it is unfinished business.

Mr. ADAMSON. There are a large number of bills yet on the calendar, and this is the last opportunity that we shall have for their passage.

Mr. MURRAY. As far as we are concerned, we will consume very little time.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Oh, I ask the gentleman from Georgia not to object.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I will reserve the objection.

Mr. MURRAY. May I ask the gentleman whether or not his objections to the bill are of such a fundamental character that the proponents of the legislation can not or might not be able to convince him that it is a meritorious bill?

Mr. RODDENBERY. This bill is the regular order for Calendar Wednesday and has been considered one day. I merely desire to let it enjoy the sacred precincts and privileges of Calendar Wednesday, and after it has had the full time that the rule for Calendar Wednesday allows, if it does not pass it may perish; but I do not think it should get in the way of Members now who have important measures, when this has already been considered one day.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that this bill will be the regular order on Calendar Wednesday until it is disposed of. Would not the gentleman prefer to have it disposed of here, so that we might reach the immigration bill next Wednesday?

Mr. RODDENBERY. I well know, as the other gentlemen do, that the immigration bill will not be reached next Wednesday.

Mr. MANN. It is very close.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The sooner we finish these bills the sooner will Calendar No. 386 be reached, and I hope the gentleman will not object to the consideration of the immigration bill then. I hope no other gentleman will object.

Mr. MANN. But the immigration bill is too important a bill to be considered to-day.

Mr. RODDENBERY. We will reach the immigration bill to-day.

Mr. MANN. But we will not consider it to-day after the gentleman objects to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. CARLIN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that time is saved to let the debate run on a little. The Chair will take the privilege of suggesting to the gentleman from Georgia that while this bill was technically considered one day, the Members took up most of the time in political speeches.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I think we can compose this matter and obtain unanimous consent that this bill be taken up without objection and that immediately after its consideration the immigration bill be made a special order by unanimous consent and a continuing order until finally disposed of. If that agreement can be reached I shall withdraw my objection.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Georgia is in exactly the same position I was six years ago. I was fighting my own party then, and he is fighting his party now, in order to get consideration for the immigration bill. I say to him that if he gets this bill off the calendar he lets the immigration bill come along; and, moreover, the gentleman from Georgia does not want to take the responsibility of destroying this opportunity of the Spanish War veterans to get what they want.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia demands the regular order, which is that the Chair shall put the question whether anybody objects.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, upon the grounds I have stated——

The SPEAKER. It makes no difference what the grounds are.

Mr. RODDENBERY. On the grounds I have stated, I object.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be stricken from the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

FISH-HATCHING AND FISH-CULTURE STATIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25832) to establish fish-hatching and fish-culture stations in various States of the United State.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same are hereby, authorized to be appropriated for the establishment of fish hatcheries and fish-culture stations in the States hereafter named, at suitable points indicated hereafter, to be selected in the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, including purchase of site, construction of buildings, and equipment:

State of Alabama, at or near the city of Mobile, where the city has donated the site, $25,000.

State of Georgia, at or near the seacoast, $25,000.

State of Washington, on the Quiniault River, or its tributaries, or on Lake Quiniault, $25,000.

State of Illinois, in the sixteenth congressional district, $25,000.

State of North Carolina, in the mountains of western North Carolina, $25,000.

State of Oklahoma, $25,000.

State of Texas, on or near the Gulf coast, $25,000.

State of Nebraska, in the first congressional district, $25,000.

State of Oregon, $50,000 (for two stations).

State of Indiana, in the northern part of the State, $25,000.

State of Arkansas, at or near as possible to Hot Springs, $25,000.

State of Tennessee, $25,000.

Provided, That before any final steps shall have been taken for the construction of a fish hatching and cultural station in accordance with this act the States herein named, through appropriate legislative action, shall accord to the United States Commissioner of Fisheries and his duly authorized agents the right to conduct fish hatching and culture and all operations connected therewith, in any manner and at any time that may by them be considered necessary and proper, any fishery laws of the State to the contrary notwithstanding: And provided further, That the operations of said hatchery shall be discontinued whenever the State ceases to accord the right referred to in the preceding proviso, and may be suspended by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor whenever, in his judgment, the laws and regulations affecting the fishes cultivated are allowed to remain so inadequate as to impair the efficiency of said hatchery.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I do not know that I would object if I could get unanimous consent at the same time for the insertion in the bill of an amendment like this:

State of Illinois, at or near the city of Chicago, $35,000.

Not being a member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, I did not have an opportunity to get it into the original bill. [Laughter.] Unless I can get it in the bill, as I am a Member of the House——

Mr. SHERLEY. Is the gentleman from Illinois making a trading proposition?

Mr. MANN. I am offering a trading proposition.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I have another proposition which provides that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is hereby authorized and directed to establish and equip a biological station for the propagation of fresh-water mussels in the twenty-third congressional district of Illinois, at some point along the Wabash River, to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, the cost of establishing the same, including the purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment, not to exceed $25,000.

Mr. MANN. I may say that the amendment I desire to offer, if the bill is considered, is upon the ground that practically there are no fish hatcheries on the Great Lakes, and if there is need to establish them anywhere they ought to be established where they can furnish fish to the greatest body of fresh water in the country.

Mr. CANNON. I think one ought to be established in the Danville district. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSTER. I may state that this bill was favorably reported in the Sixty-first Congress. I take it that every man in this House is thoroughly familiar with the great industry of digging mussels and the procurement of pearls in the Wabash River. It affords the greatest number of pearls and the greatest wealth of any river in the United States.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, fresh-water mussels are found in numerous quantities in mud rivers that are worthless for any other purpose. I agree with the gentleman that his mussel hatchery ought to be provided for.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries has had these matters under consideration in all of these bills, and after considering them fully has reported about 13 fish hatcheries in the different States. The committee sets forth in its report that it has reported as many as the Government can provide experts to carry on each year, and says further that it can provide for this number, and they have been located at such points where they are most needed. Gentlemen who are interested in fish hatcheries ought to be willing to let this bill go through, and let them be established at points where they are most needed, and then the way is opened next year for the ones in which they are interested.

Mr. FOSTER. How many fish hatcheries are there now in the State of Tennessee?

Mr. HOUSTON. There is one in East Tennessee.

Mr. FOSTER. And there is another one to be established now.

Mr. HOUSTON. The surest way to get one in Illinois is to listen to the report of this committee that has fully investigated the subject, and reports that they have placed these hatcheries at the points most needed.

Mr. CANNON. How many are there in the United States?

Mr. HOUSTON. I am not able to answer that question.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman says they are located where they are most needed, I am surprised that the committee has overlooked the bill which proposed to establish one at Ittabena, in the third congressional district of Mississippi. There is certainly no place in the United States where a fish hatchery is more needed than in that particular part of the country.

Mr. HOUSTON. But the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries did not agree with the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi as to that point.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That does not reflect any great credit upon the combined wisdom of the committee when they differed with the gentleman from Mississippi, because the committee is not as fully advised as is the gentleman from Mississippi on that particular point, and I hope, if this bill is to be considered, the gentlemen will not object to having an amendment added which will provide for the fish hatchery in that part of the country. There is no fish hatchery in all the great delta of the lower Mississippi.

Mr. PADGETT. I would suggest to the gentleman there is a very famous one at Tupelo.

Mr. HOUSTON. There is one in Mississippi.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. But it is up in the northeastern part, only a very few miles from the State of Tennessee, where there is already one and where it is proposed to place another. The fish hatchery now in Mississippi is more a Tennessee project than it is a Mississippi project. We need a fish hatchery in the delta of the Mississippi much more than in the mountains of Tennessee, and I hope the gentleman will agree to let this amendment go on providing for a fish hatchery at Ittabena.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I withhold the objection for a moment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee stated that the fish hatcheries provided for in this bill were located in the places in the United States where they are most needed, but I notice one of them is located in the district represented by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], who is on the committee which reported the bill; one of them is located in the district represented by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. STONE], who is on the committee which reported the bill; one of them is reported in the State represented by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FAISON], who is on the committee which reported the bill; one of them is in the State represented by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], on the committee that reported the bill; one of them is located in the State of Texas, represented by the gentlemen from Texas, Mr. HARDY and Mr. YOUNG, on the committee that reported the bill; one of them is located in the State of Indiana, represented by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART], on the committee that reported the bill; and one of them in the State of Arkansas, represented by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], on the committee which reported the bill. It is a strange thing that the only places they are needed are in the districts represented by gentlemen who are on the committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, there is no member of the committee from the State of Tennessee, I would say to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I will withhold my objection.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, the largest item in this bill is for $50,000 for two hatcheries in the State of Oregon. No Member from that State is on the committee, and I just merely wish to say that the Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce and Labor has investigated the question, and, so far as Oregon is concerned, has reported that if an act be passed by Congress giving to the National Bureau of Fisheries authority to control not only the young fish hatched in the Federal hatcheries but also the fish hatched in the hatcheries of the State of Oregon, they can double the output of salmon in the Columbia River Basin inside of five years.

Mr. MANN. Why does not the State of Oregon do it? Why does not that State establish a fish hatchery? If it can do that it would be worth millions of dollars to Oregon.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Yes; and that is exactly what I was going to say—that the State of Oregon and the State of Washington in the past four years have appropriated $327,000 for fish hatcheries. They are in full operation now, and the Federal experts who are out there say they would very much like to have the following amendment tacked onto this bill:

Provided, That before any final steps shall have been taken for the construction of a fish hatching and cultural station in accordance with this act the States herein named, through appropriate legislative action, shall accord to the United States Commissioner of Fisheries and his duly authorized agents the right to conduct fish hatching and culture and all operations connected therewith, in any manner and at any time that may by them be considered necessary and proper, any fishery laws of the State to the contrary notwithstanding: And provided further, That the operations of said hatchery shall be discontinued whenever the State ceases to accord the right referred to in the preceding proviso, and may be suspended by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor whenever, in his judgment, the laws and regulations affecting the fishes cultivated are allowed to remain so inadequate as to impair the efficiency of said hatchery.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman claim that the United States may not establish fish hatcheries in all of the navigable waters of the United States?

Mr. LAFFERTY. The United States has a perfect right to establish fish-cultural stations, as I understand it, but by this law proposed by the Department of Commerce and Labor they also seek to acquire the right to protect the young fish hatched in the State hatcheries.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are there any navigable waters in the first district of Nebraska which is proposed to be given a fish hatchery in this bill

Mr. LAFFERTY. I presume there are, but I am not in position to present the claims of any district except my own in the State of Oregon. The salmon output there amounts to $2,500,000 a year.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman think that that amount of money could be used to better advantage in hatching some young men to go out on the farms of this country?

Mr. LAFFERTY. I have no doubt that the course the gentleman suggests would be a very good system of conservation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be stricken from the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

RESTRICTION OF ADMISSION OF ALIENS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 22527) to further restrict the admission of aliens into the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be stricken from the calendar.

HOMESTEAD ALLOTMENTS TO CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIANS IN OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25507) to authorize certain changes in homestead allotments of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians in Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am under the impression that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] asked me to have this bill passed without prejudice. I ask unanimous consent that it may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the bill may be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LIBRARIES, UNITED STATES COURTS, NORTHERN DISTRICT OF OHIO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 4718) to authorize the use of certain unclaimed moneys now in the registries of the United States Circuit Court for the Northern District of Ohio for the improvement of the libraries of the United States courts for said district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That authority be, and the same is hereby, granted to the judges of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Ohio to expend, for the enlargement of the libraries of the courts of the United States in the cities of Toledo and Cleveland, the certain unclaimed moneys now in the registries of the circuit court of the United States in said cities, in the amount of $395.61 at Toledo and of $665.66 at Cleveland, being interest accumulations received by the clerk of said court on deposits prior to August, 1907, it being ascertained to be impossible to apportion said moneys to the numerous accounts upon whose aggregation the said interest accrued.

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Speaker, the bill was reported from the Judiciary Committee with amendments. The bill which has now been read by the Clerk is the original bill, and not the bill as reported with amendments. I ask that the Clerk report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 4, page 1, strike out the word "circuit" and insert in lieu thereof the word "district." Line 8, page 1, strike out the word "circuit" and insert in lieu thereof the word "district." Line 4, page 2, strike out the word "said" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the former circuit." Strike out all after the word "seven," in line 5, page 2, and insert a period.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McCOY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to print in the RECORD the letter of Judge Killitts and the letter of Judge Day to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary in explanation of this bill, also the report on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letters and report are as follows:

CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS OF UNITED STATES,
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF OHIO, JUDGE'S CHAMBERS,
Cleveland, Ohio, December 20, 1911.

Hon. H. D. CLAYTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I am interested in the passage of House bill 4718, which provides for the disposition and use of certain unclaimed funds for court libraries for the Federal courts in the northern Ohio jurisdiction. The matter is of no great magnitude, but it is of considerable importance to the bench and bar of this jurisdiction, as we are very much crippled indeed for available funds with which to furnish our libraries.

Respectfully.

WILLIAM L. DAY,
United States District Judge.

CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES, NORTHERN DISTRICT OF OHIO,
JUDGE'S CHAMBERS,
Toledo, Ohio, June 1, 1911.

Hon. H. D. CLAYTON,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg to call your attention to the bill H. R. 4718, introduced by Mr. ANSBERRY and referred to your committee, and to ask that as soon as the committee's work will permit the bill be taken up.

It is greatly to be desired that the library facilities of the court be increased, and with the limited means at our command for that purpose, coming mostly from voluntary contributions of the bar, this money, if we may have it, is very much desired at the earliest possible moment.

I think Mr. ANSBERRY has a full explanation of the situation in communications from me, if, indeed, he has not already filed them with the committee.

Sincerely, yours,

JOHN M. KILLITTS,
District Judge.

[House Report No. 1131, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

LIBRARIES, UNITED STATES COURTS, NORTHERN DISTRICT OF OHIO.

Mr. McCOY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 4718):

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4718) to authorize the use of certain unclaimed moneys now in the registry of the United States Circuit Court for the Northern District of Ohio for the improvement of the libraries of the United States courts for said district, report the same back with the recommendation that it be amended as follows, and that as amended the bill do pass.

The object of this bill is to authorize the application of certain unclaimed moneys now in the registries of the United States courts in the cities of Toledo and Cleveland, Ohio, to the enlargement of the libraries of said courts in those cities.

Prior to August, 1907, it was the custom of the clerk of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Ohio, as moneys were deposited with him to secure costs and for other purposes, including his own fees, to place them in a bank in a checking account, and as these deposits accumulated in such account beyond the current necessities of the office, from time to time to take out the surplus and deposit it on interest-bearing certificates. In August, 1907, the clerk was advised that the practice followed by him was improper and that it should be discontinued. The clerk, however, is not deserving of any opprobrium, as he was induced by a consideration of economy to follow this course. As a result of this system the interest accumulations from such funds amounted to the sum of $395.61, for the court at Toledo, Ohio, and $665.66 for the court at Cleveland, Ohio. As has already been stated, there was commingled in the funds from which these interest accumulations were derived, moneys belonging to litigants, fees of the clerk himself, and other court funds. It has taken the aggregation of these court deposits, fees, etc., to earn these interest accumulations. The small aggregate amount of the funds, and the large number of items, make it impracticable, if not impossible, to ascertain what amount of interest would belong to any particular person, so that it might be paid to any such person.

It appears, then, that the aggregate amount of these interest accumulations—$1,061.27—is funds unclaimed and unappropriated to any specific purpose. The object of the bill, to apply these moneys to the enlargement of the libraries of the courts of the United States in the cities of Toledo and Cleveland, respectively, seems to your committee, therefore, to possess such merit as to warrant its passage.

HOURS-OF-SERVICE ACT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 26023) to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon," approved March 4, 1907.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for five minutes?

Mr. MANN. I will be very glad to withhold for five minutes if the gentleman will be satisfied, and my only reason for objecting is because of the length of the calendar.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I have defended at considerable length three bills this afternoon which have been objected off the Unanimous Consent Calendar by the gentleman from Illinois, bills which were not mine. This is my bill; a bill in which I am very much interested; a bill in which 60,000 men are very much interested; a bill in which every man, woman, and child who risks life and limb by traveling upon the trains of the United States is very much interested, and if the gentleman wants to object this bill off the Unanimous Consent Calendar, he may do so. I do not know that I need explain or defend it——

Mr. MANN. Well, do not do it.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I will say this, however, that the Fifty-ninth Congress, recognizing the necessity for legislation for regulating the hours of labor on railroads of certain classes of railroad employees, particularly of engine and train men, train dispatchers, and operators, the employees, particularly to whose clear heads and firm nerves are intrusted the safety of millions of people traveling upon the railways, passed a bill limiting the hours of telegraph operators to 9 hours in case of an office operated continuously, night and day, and 13 hours in offices operating only in the daytime. The intention of that legislation, I believe, was good, and the men who drafted the provisions were honest, but it has developed in practice to be exceedingly faulty and so defective as to be practically worthless. The 9-hour day may be made into the 13-hour day 3 days in the week, and the 13-hour day may be made into a 17-hour day 3 days in the week, but in addition to that the legislation does not provide that the hours of labor shall be continuous, so that the railroad companies have done something that I defy any Member to say was ever contemplated or dreamed of by the framers of that legislation, to wit, that the 9-hour and the 13-hour period may be divided into different shifts, so that a man can be worked 3 hours and laid off 3 hours and worked 3 hours and laid off 3 hours and so on until he consumed the 9 hours; and the Supreme Court of the United States has sustained that construction. There are other grievances which I have not time to go into now.

The telegraphers ask, and I think the conditions attached to that service demand, for the public welfare, that they be placed upon an eight-hour day, so I introduced a bill into this House, H. R. 25040, providing a straight eight-hour day for telegraphers, whether they work in the daytime or the nighttime or any other time. Hearings were had on that bill, and I want to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that three days were spent by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in listening to the representatives of 30 of the great railways and 10 electric railways of this country. I drafted the bill and I conducted the examination. I am a practical railroad man myself. I am proud of the fact that I am the first member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen who has had the honor of being elected to Congress [applause], so I know, from their standpoint, what I am talking about and I know something from the roads' standpoint; and being something of a lawyer, I know somewhat from a legal standpoint, and I want to say to gentlemen that, being actuated by a desire to be entirely fair, I amended that bill, reintroduced it, it was again unanimously reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which I have the honor to be a member, and, I think, I cured every objection raised to the original bill by the railway representatives, save one.

Every objection was cured, save the objection to the eight-hour day, and, gentlemen, that objection is fundamental and it is one that we do not undertake to meet; and it is one, so far as I am concerned, that I never propose to meet on any other basis than an eight-hour day. I am for the eight-hour day for every wage earner who eats bread in the sweat of his face, I do not care what his employment may be. I know from the experience of long years at hard manual labor that in eight hours a man can give all and the best that is in him; and I hope that in the progress of our civilization the time will soon come that no man who has to work for a living, I do not care what it may be, will have to work more than eight hours a day.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I promised the gentleman from Illinois not to take any more time, and unless the gentleman volunteers to give me two or three minutes more, I shall not ask for it. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I love to hear the gentleman talk. I have had more or less to do with legislation concerning the hours of labor on railroads and on railroad safety-appliance legislation. The bill that was passed in reference to telegraphers, included in another hours-labor bill, was one that was prepared by the gentleman from Missouri, then a Member of the House, Mr. Murphy. He had been a telegrapher, he had had experience as a legislator, he was a lawyer, and filling all of the distinguished positions filled by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN]. He prepared a bill at the time that I did not know what was meant. He, like the gentleman from Colorado, insisted I was standing in the way of laboring men.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It will not take me long to tell what my bill means.

Mr. MANN. No one can tell what the gentleman means.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Point out something in it and see if I do not know what it means.

Mr. MANN. Before I approve of the bill I will consult with some of the gentlemen to whom the bill will apply.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Has not some of the gentleman's legislation run up against the Supreme Court before it was known how it would apply?

Mr. MANN. I will say that I have had the distinguished honor of being in this House 14 years, and have reported in as many bills as any other gentleman, and had charge of them, and up to date—I do not know how long it will last—no bill that I have introduced has met the scrutiny of the Supreme Court without approval. This is more than can be said about these half-baked propositions. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It is too bad that Capt. Coghlan is not alive to revise Hoch der Kaiser and bring "Meinself und Gott" down to date and make it the gentleman from Illinois. "Mr. MANN und Gott." [Laughter.]

Under leave granted I insert the report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on this bill:

[House Report No. 1141, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

HOURS-OF-SERVICE ACT.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 26023:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 26023) to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon," approved March 4, 1907, having considered the same, report it with the recommendation that it do pass.

This bill is reported in lieu of H. R. 18969 and H. R. 24040, both by Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Hearings were had upon H. R. 25040 of the representatives of the steam and the interurban electric railways and of the railway telegraphers, as the result of which certain amendments were recommended by the subcommittee having the bill in charge and are embodied in H. R. 26023, which reads as follows:

[H. R. 26023, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

A bill to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon," approved March 4, 1907.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon," approved March 4, 1907, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier, its officers or agents, subject to this act to require or permit any employee subject to this act to be or remain on duty for a longer period than 16 consecutive hours, and whenever any such employee of such common carrier shall have been continuously on duty for 16 hours he shall be relieved and not required or permitted again to go on duty until he has had at least 10 consecutive hours off duty, and no such employee who has been on duty 16 hours in the aggregate in any 24-hour period shall be required or permitted to continue or again go on duty without having had at least 8 consecutive hours off duty: Provided, That no employee who, by the use of the telegraph or telephone or other electrical device dispatches, reports, transmits, receives, or delivers orders, or who from towers, offices, places, and stations operates signals or switches or similar mechanical devices controlling, pertaining to, or affecting the movement of trains of more than two cars shall be required or permitted to be or remain on duty in any 24-hour period for a longer period than 8 hours, which period of 8 hours shall be wholly within the limits of a continuous shift, and upon the completion of which period such employee shall not be required or permitted to again go on duty until the expiration of 16 hours. This proviso shall not apply to employees who in case of emergency use the telephone to obtain orders or information governing the movement of trains."

Nothing in this act shall be held to affect or abate any violation of the act hereby amended or any suit or action pending because of such violatioin at the time of the approval of this act.

THE HOURS-OF-SERVICE ACT—ITS DEFECTS.

The hours-of-service act, as it is popularly called, applies to two classes of railway employees:

Employees who move trains, such as engine and train men, etc., and employees who direct the movement of trains, such as train dispatchers, operators, tower men, interlocking switchmen, etc.

Provision is made for both classes of employees in section 2 of the act, the provision relating to train dispatchers and operators, etc., being found in a proviso inserted therein during the course of the passage of the act through the Fifty-ninth Congress. As that part of the section relating to engine and train men is unamended by the pending bill, reference will be made only to the proviso.

Under the proviso as it now stands, operators in day offices may be worked a period of 13 hours in each 24 hours and in day and night offices a period of 9 hours in 24 hours. Either of these classes may be worked four additional hours per day on not exceeding three days per week. Owing to the failure of Congress to make consecutive the hours on and off duty of these employees, as in the case of engine and train men, many railways have divided the daily period of labor into two shifts, so that, for instance, an operator may be on duty six hours, then off three hours, then on again three hours. Examples might be multiplied indefinitely. This practice was upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the United States v. The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. (220 U. S., 37). As the opinion in that case is brief, it is herewith submitted:

"This is an action to recover penalties for violation of the 'act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon' March 4, 1907 (ch. 2939, secs. 2, 3, 34 Stat., 1415, 1416). The Government had a verdict in the district court, subject to exceptions, and the judgment was reversed by the circuit court of appeals (177 Fed. Rep., 114; 100 C. C. A., 534).

"The case is this: By section 2 it is made unlawful for common carriers subject to the act to permit any employee subject to the act to be on duty 'for a longer period than 16 consecutive hours,' or after that period to go on duty again until he has had at least 10 consecutive hours off duty or 8 hours after 16 hours' work in the aggregate: Provided, That no telegraph operator and the like shall be permitted to be 'on duty for a longer period than 9 hours in any 24-hour period in all towers, offices, places, and stations continuously operated night and day, nor for a longer period than 13 hours in all towers, offices, places, and stations operated only during the daytime,' with immaterial exceptions. By section 3 there is a penalty of not exceeding $500 for each violation of section 2. The defendant was subject to the act. It had a station and telegraph office at Corwith, in the outer limits of Chicago, which was shut from 12 to 3 by day and by night but open the rest of the time. The Government contends that this was a place 'continuously operated night and day.' At this station the same telegraph operator was employed from half past 6 o'clock in the morning until 12, and again from 3 p. m. to half past 6, or 9 hours in all of actual work. The Government contends that when 9 hours have passed from the moment of beginning work the statute allows no more labor within 24 hours from the same time, even though the 9 hours have not all of them been spent in work. According to the Government's argument the operator's nine hours expired at half past 3 in the afternoon. These questions on the construction of the statute are the only ones that we have to decide.

"We are of opinion that the Government's argument can not be sustained, even if it be conceded that Corwith was a place continuously operated night and day, as there are strong reasons for admitting. The antithesis is between places continuously operated night and day and places operated only during the daytime. We think that the Government is right in saying that the proviso is meant to deal with all offices, and if so, we should go further than otherwise we might in holding offices not operated only during the daytime as falling under the other head. A trifling interruption would not be considered, and it is possible that even three hours by night and three hours by day would not exclude the office from all operation of the law, and to that extent defeat what we believe was its intent.

"But if we concede the Government's first proposition it is impossible to extract the requirement of 15 hours' continuous leisure from the words of the statute by grammatical construction alone. The proviso does not say 9 'consecutive' hours, as was said in the earlier part of the section, and if it had said so, or even 'for a longer period than a period of 9 consecutive hours,' still the defendant's conduct would not have contravened the literal meaning of the words. A man employed for 6 hours and then, after an interval, for 3 in the same 24 is not employed for a longer period than 9 consecutive hours. Indeed, the word 'consecutive' was struck out when the bill was under discussion on the suggestion that otherwise a man might be worked for a second 9 hours after an interval of half an hour. In order to bring about the effect contended for, it would have been necessary to add, as the section does add in the earlier part, a provision for the required number of consecutive hours off duty. The presence of such a provision in the one part and its absence in the other is an argument against reading it as implied. The Government suggests that if it is not implied a man might be set to work for 2 hours on and 2 hours off alternately. This hardly is a practical suggestion. We see no reason to suppose that Congress meant more than it said. On the contrary, the reason for striking out the word 'consecutive' in the proviso given, as we have mentioned, when the bill was under discussion and the alternative reference in section 2 to '16 hours in the aggregate' show that the obvious possibility of two periods of service in the same 24 hours was before the mind of Congress, and that there was no oversight in the choice of words.

"Judgment of circuit court of appeals affirmed."

The committee believes that it was not the intent of Congress that the 9 and 13 hour days, with privilege of making these 13 and 17 hour days on three days in each week, were to be still further extended in the manner above shown, but all doubt is removed by the proposed amendment, which provides that the hours, both on and off duty, shall be continuous. While it is true that Congress, by the omission of the word "consecutive" in the telegraphers' proviso, when it is to be found in the provision relating to train and engine men, gives color to the contention of the Supreme Court that Congress intended that the operator's period of employment should be divided in the manner mentioned in the above case, room for argument to the contrary is to be found in the fact that the words "in the aggregate," inserted by the Senate in the telegraphers' proviso, were afterwards striken from the bill and do not appear in the act as it now stands. Such action would indicate that the omission of the word "consecutive" was an oversight, and that when Congress struck out the words which were intended to permit of a division of the daily period of labor, it at least negatively expressed the intent that the working period should be continuous. However, the practice complained of, and which has been a source of friction, will not be permissible under the proposed amendment.

STRAIGHT 8-HOUR DAY PROPOSED.

The proposed law abolishes the present statutory classification of offices, with their 9 and 13 hour days, respectively, and provides a straight 8-hour day for all employees embraced by the proviso. Between fifty and sixty thousand employees are affected by the proviso, approximately one-half of whom are already, by the regulations of the railway companies or by agreement between the companies and their employees, on the 8-hour basis, and it is not disputed that the great majority of the remaining employees enjoy shorter hours of labor than are provided by law; so that the enactment of the 8-hour day is only applying the standard to all employees performing substantially the same highly important and responsible duty.

To clearly indicate the changes proposed to be made by the pending bill, H. R. 26023, there are here set out:

THE EXISTING PROVISO.

Provided, That no operator, train dispatcher, or other employee who, by the use of the telegraph or telephone, dispatches, reports, transmits, receives, or delivers orders pertaining to or affecting train movements shall be required or permitted to be or remain on duty for a longer period than 9 hours in any 24-hour period in all towers, offices, places, and stations continuously operated night and day, nor for a longer period than 13 hours in all towers, offices, places, and stations operated only during the daytime, except in case of emergency, when the employees named in this proviso may be permitted to be and remain on duty for 4 additional hours in a 24-hour period on not exceeding three days in any week.

THE PENDING PROVISO.

Provided, That no employee who, by the use of the telegraph or telephone or other electrical device, dispatches, reports, transmits, receives, or delivers orders, or who from towers, offices, places, and stations operates signals or switches or similar mechanical devices controlling, pertaining to, or affecting the movement of trains of more than two cars shall be required or permitted to be or remain on duty in any 24-hour period for a longer period than 8 hours, which period of 8 hours shall be wholly within the limits of a continuous shift, and upon the completion of which period such employees shall not be required or permitted to again go on duty until the expiration of 16 hours. This proviso shall not apply to employees who in case of emergency use the telephone to obtain orders or information governing the movement of trains.

The first material difference between the existing and the proposed law is to be found in the phrase on page 2, lines 15, 16, and 17, "or who from towers, offices, places, and stations, operates signals, switches, or similar mechanical devices." Inventions and improvements in train control and operation multiply so rapidly that much of this work is done by means of devices which are not used in connection with the telegraph or the telephone, and one road may be using devices to direct and control train movements which are not known to or used by other roads. Men in towers operate the levers for 12 hours under oral orders from other men at the telephone, etc. All employees performing such highly responsible duty by whatever method human ingenuity may devise, should be clearly placed upon the 8-hour basis. Train accidents due to the errors of dispatchers, operators, and signalmen, whose brains were drowsy, or nerves unstrung, or who were otherwise derelict because of long hours on duty and lack of sleep, caused Congress to undertake the regulation of the hours of these employees in the first place. Experience has shown that there are numbers of employees who are but arms and fingers, as it were, of the dispatcher, the operator, and the signalman, whose inclusion in the law is a matter of dispute, but who, for the same reasons moving the regulation of the hours of train dispatchers and operators, ought to be included.

This situation may be illustrated by the case of The United States v. The Cleveland, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railway Co. in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio, Eastern Division, in which the court, in an oral decision rendered December 12, 1911, decided that certain switchmen who threw switches upon telephonic information received at a telephone station in the yards, were within the law. The railway company excepted to the ruling of the court, and the case is now probably pending on appeal. Such instances might be multiplied. Why these employees, though they were merely throwing switches, are and should be within the hours-of-service act, is very clearly and succinctly stated by the Hon. Howard R. Hollister, the judge of said court, in the following paragraph:

"If you consider the purpose of the statute, which was to secure, so far as practicable, alertness and activity of mind and wakefulness upon the part of the employees on the railroad engaged in such service, it would seem that, if there was any doubt about the language of the statute, yet if, in the operation of trains at this point, an accident could happen by reason of the exhausted or tired condition of the switchmen in charge, in mind or body, or both, it was just such a case as the Congress had in mind."

Some roads now have a system of signal boards operated wholly by sight. There is no telegraphic or telephonic communication. The man in charge of a board ascertains from the position of the next board which is in sight whether the block over which he has control is open or closed, and operates his board accordingly, holding trains and letting them in and out of the block. One leading railway operates largely by means of electric bells. To meet this latter condition, the words "or other electrical device" have been inserted on page 2, line 14, after the words "telegraph or telephone"; but to cover the entire situation, the phrase "or who from towers, offices, places, and stations operates signals or switches or similar mechanical devices" has been added to the law.

USE OF TELEPHONE BY CONDUCTORS.

The next material change and one which, as the provisions stood at the time of the hearings, was strongly objected to by the railway companies was its application to conductors out on the road who found it necessary to make use of the telephone at passing tracks or blind sidings where there is no operator. It was testified by the railway representatives that this use of the telephone by the conductor was emergency in character and that it was not practical, or at least it was not the practice, to regularly order the movement of trains by direct communication between the dispatcher and the conductor. On many roads the telephone has replaced the telegraph in whole or in part, but the train orders are received by telephone operators, reduced to writing, and delivered to the conductor as in the case of telegrams. On many roads there is a small per cent of sidings where trains may meet and pass at which a telephone is installed without an operator. Trains may find themselves at such places and may be unable to proceed by reason of the failure of opposing trains or other difficulty somewhere along the line. In such case the conductor goes to the telephone booth, calls up the dispatcher, and gets orders enabling the train to proceed.

It is complained by the telegraphers that the hours-of-service act led to the abolition of many small telegraph stations and the installation thereat of the telephone without an operator, and this complaint appears to be well founded. Also many telegraph stations were closed and abolished altogether.

It is not desirable to merge the duties of conductor and operator. Scientific and expeditious train movement and the maximum of safety will be attained by maintaining separate and distinct classes of employees to direct the movement of trains and to move trains, even though the means of communication should become so perfected as to make it practicable to equip the train with apparatus for direct communication between the dispatcher and the train. One railway representative hazarded the suggestion that to so frame an hours-of-service regulation as to subject conductors who receive train orders to the hours governing dispatchers and operators would be considered by the courts such a burdensome restriction upon the hours of service of employees whose duties would enable them without hardship or danger to work the longer hours as to cause the act to be declared invalid. On the contrary, it may be said that the receiving and correct transcribing and understanding of orders affecting train movements involve such enormous responsibilities and call for such clearness and singleness of mind as to brook no such division of attention and multiplication of duties as is sought to be attained by some of the carriers; and it may be suggested that when terrible accidents result, as they assuredly will in cases where one employee has too many irons in the fire, the courts will rather be constrained to the view that even shorter hours might be wisely prescribed for the employee who has to both move and direct the movement of his train.

The present practice is, however, as stated, almost purely an emergency aid in the movement of trains, and it is not desired, where the use of the telephone is of this character, to apply the eight-hour day to trainmen, and accordingly, when H. R. 25040 was recast into the pending bill, H. R. 26023, the following provision was added:

"This proviso shall not apply to employees who in case of emergency use the telephone to obtain orders or information governing the movement of trains."

It was stated by the railway representatives at the hearings that the trainmen themselves would object to having the shorter hours of the operators apply because of this use of the telephone, but it may be noted that in May of this year a hearing was had by the Interstate Commerce Commission, decision not yet rendered, at which the representatives of all of the railway labor organizations and of some 60 railway companies appeared, the former contending and the latter denying that the present nine-hour period in the hours-of-service act applies to conductors who receive train orders by telephone. (Hearing on H. R. 25040, pp. 106–107.)

Also, the practice of railroad companies directing the movement of trains by telephonic communication between the dispatcher and conductor has been condemned by the general organizations of railroad engineers, conductors, and telegraphers. (Hearings on H. R. 25040, pp. 104–107.)

THE TEST—WHETHER EMERGENCY OR SUPPLEMENTAL.

It is believed that the bill permits the use of the telephone as far as it can be properly and safely done under present conditions. The true test should be whether the practice in question is emergency or whether it is supplemental. As a practical question, it is difficult to see how the practice can be denominated emergency in cases where trains are directed to meet, pass, or wait for other trains at these blind sidings. In such cases the practice would appear to be supplemental and not emergency. If the carriers are to be permitted to recognize these blind sidings on their time-table schedules and train orders, and, in fact, treat them in every respect as regular meeting points except for the absence of an operator at the telephone, it will be seen that the present so-called emergency use of the telephone may continue to grow and displace telegraph and telephone operators and impose this responsible duty to such an extent upon trainmen as to force Congress to still further legislate upon the subject. It is to be hoped that in cases where the practice appears to be supplemental rather than emergency the eight-hour law will be enforced. Its enforcement will not, as claimed by the railway representatives, result in placing the trainmen under the eight-hour day, but will result in placing operators in these telephone booths where needed, and the restriction of its use by the conductor to cases of unusual delay, unforeseen failure, and similar causes. While both the carriers and the public are to be considered, as well as the employees, the action of the latter, both by resolutions adopted by their organizations and by their appearance before the Interstate Commerce Commission, as already noted, is significant of their belief that much of the practice complained of is supplemental and not emergency, and Congress may as well take notice that future consideration of this subject will be required.

OBJECTION TO THE 8-HOUR DAY.

Substantially all other objections to the original bill (H. R. 25040), upon which the hearings were had, have been met in the pending bill (H. R. 26023), except the objection that the 8-hour day will necessitate an increase in the number of employees by reason of the fact that two men will have to be put on at many of the day offices where now only one man is employed, and that three-man shifts will also have to replace the two-man shifts now in effect at many of the night and day offices. The committee has made no attempt to met this objection, but rests upon the proposition that 8 hours per day is sufficient for any employee charged with the duty of dispatching and operating trains, including the various clases of tower and signal men. No general law can be devised to nicely fit all conditions. The growing complexity of the means of directing and controlling train movements renders it difficult to frame a law to specifically take in every employee who ought to go in without taking in some who might equitably stay out, or to specifically exempt every condition that might equitably go out without exempting conditions that ought to stay in. As already stated, one-half of all such railway employees in the United States are already on the 8-hour basis, and they are there for reasons which point the duty of Congress to place all such employees upon that basis.

8-HOUR SHIFTS PRACTICABLE.

The railroad representatives argued before the committee that it would be impossible to effect the change of shifts between train dispatchers under the 8-hour day; that certain transfer work is necessary at each change of shifts which would cause the employee coming on duty to appear ahead of time or the employee going off duty to remain overtime, or both, and that this necessary transfer work would be in violation of law. Their attention was called to the fact that the State of New Yorw has an 8-hour law governing train dispatchers, operators, etc., which law was declared constitutional by the court of appeals and was in operation for several years prior to decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States whereby the Federal hours-of-service law is held to supersede all State laws, a number of which have the 8-hour day for telegraphers, thus rendering it all the more imperative that Congress shall not stand in the way of this beneficent reform. The committee do not believe there is anything practical in the objection that changes and transfers of shifts can not be made under the proposed law and submit that this is a feature that will be readily adjusted.

In this connection it may be added that the minority members of the Interstate Commerce Committee, at the time of the passage of the present hours-of-service act (and including the present chairman and ranking majority member of the committee), thus criticized the telegraphers' provision:

"That provision should have been further improved by fixing the hours at 8 and 12 instead of 9 and 13, respectively." (Rept. No. 7641, 59th Cong., 2d sess., p. 10.)

THE INTERSTATE INTERURBAN ELECTRICAL LINES.

The interstate interurban electrical railway is a fairly new institution, having grown up since the enactment of the great body of interstate-commerce law. While these laws clearly attach to these interstate electrical roads, the issue appears not to have been raised in its entirety as yet before Congress, the Interstate Commerce Commission, or the courts. With the continued and rapid growth of these lines, the issue will no doubt soon fully present itself. It is not the desire of your committee to encumber the proposed amendment to the hours-of-service act by including these electric lines, nor to impose any undue burden upon them, and to avoid these results as far as practicable the act is limited to trains of more than two cars.

The electric-road representatives all testified that their lines usually operate one and two car trains, and that the communication of train orders is directly effected between the dispatcher and the employees on the car or train. There are no operators or other employees intervening between the dispatcher and motorman or conductor. Telephone stations are between 2 and 3 miles apart on most of these lines, and some of them have in addition, at intervals of only 2,000 feet, what are known as jack boxes, which are telephone boxes attached to posts right alongside the track. The electric-road representatives claim that the cost of installing operators at all telephones, or where such telephones must be maintained, would be prohibitive, and that such operators are not a practical necessity for the safe and expeditious operation of their cars. The claims in behalf of the electric roads are somewhat discounted by the statistics in the Twenty-fifth Annual Report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, at page 77, showing that for the year ending June 30, 1911, there were killed in steam-road accidents 142 passengers and in electric-road accidents 75 passengers; that is to say, with only one-twentieth the mileage of the steam roads the electric roads killed more than one-half as many passengers.

An express exemption of the electric roads being of doubtful validity, the committee favored in lieu thereof the limitation above suggested, which, of course, is applicable to all roads, and yet, by reasons of the size of trains on steam roads, will not let out any employees who ought to be included. If, as stated at the hearings by electric-road representatives, these lines are now beginning to operate trains of three or more cars and carrying sleeping cars and doing a freight traffic, they ought to be made to comply with all the safeguards thrown by the law about travel upon steam roads.

EXEMPTIONS.

The remaining change meriting mention is the omission from the proviso as it now stands in the law of the words "except in case of emergency." This provision is omitted for the reason that it is believed that the general exceptions applying to the entire act, and which are to be found in section 3, are sufficient. These exceptions follow:

"Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply in case of casualty or unavoidable accident or the act of God."

To permit such a broad, indefinite exemption as is afforded by the use of the term "emergency," is to court abuses and violations of the act. "Casualty" is a term of fairly fixed legal meaning and definition, at least sufficiently so to enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to enumerate among the many causes assigned by the carriers as justifying excess service, but which the commission says do not appear to it to be within the category of "casualty or unavoidable accident or the act of God," the following: "Hot boxes," "couplers pulled out," "leaky flues," "no steam," "poor coal," "air-pump failures," etc. But little hardship should flow from the elimination of a term which harmonizes the application of the law to both general classes of employees embraced within it. There has been sufficient dissatisfaction over the presence of this special exception in the telegraphers' proviso to cause their representatives in the measure drafted by them, and which is embodied in H. R. 18969, to limit the exceptions to "grave emergencies." As this, too, is a term of uncertain meaning, it is thought the better practice to eliminate this special exception altogether.

SUPPLEMENTAL STATEMENT OF MR. MARTIN—GENERAL EIGHT-HOUR DAY.

The foregoing report endeavors to fairly set forth the views of the committee upon the proper hours of service of the class of employees affected, but does not undertake to express the views of the committee or its individual members upon the subject of the proper hours of service of other classes of railway employees. In other words, it must not be inferred that because care has been taken to limit the application of the proposed amendment to employees engaged in directing the movement of trains, therefore, by negative inference, the committee or its individual members would not favor shorter hours or the 8-hour day for any or all other classes of railway employees. The pending bill simply proposes to amend an existing law governing the hours of service of this particular class of railway employees, and neither the author of the bill nor the committee wished to complicate it by enlarging the scope of its application.

The author of the bill and writer of the report is avowedly in favor of the 8-hour day for every wage earner, without exception. He learned by actual experience, through long years at hard labor, that the human body can give all and the best that is in it in not to exceed 8 hours. He learned that 10 hours of unremitting toil is too long, even at ordinary manual occupations. He knows that as a factor in the joy of living the short workday ranks with the good day's pay. These are twin blessings that put a song in the heart of labor and that rob daily toil of the dread aspect of the treadmill, looking only for the night and forgetfulness. He would put not only a maximum to the hours of labor, but a minimum to the rate of pay. And in the rapid progress of labor toward industrial freedom he ventures the prediction that these and other helps to human happiness will soon be something more than the substance of things hoped for.

CORVALLIS AND YAQUINA BAY MILITARY ROAD.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to recur to the bill H. R. 8151, a bill providing for the adjustment of the grant of lands in aid of the construction of the Corvallis and Yaquina Bay military wagon road, and of conflicting claims to lands within limits of said grant.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8151) providing for the adjustment of the grant of lands in aid of the construction of the Corvallis and Yaquina Bay military wagon road, and of conflicting claims to lands within the limits of said grant.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be reported in lieu of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause patents to be issued conveying to the administrator of the estate of T. Egenton Hogg 1,848.84 acres, as near as may be, of unreserved, unoccupied, nonmineral, surveyed lands of the United States subject to homestead entry.

"SEC. 2. The said administrator of the estate of T. Egenton Hogg shall have a period of one year after the passage of this act within which to file with the Secretary of the Interior a list of the lands selected by him in accordance with the provisions of this act. And if any of the lands so selected should be rejected by the Secretary of the Interior as not being of the character of lands described in this act, said administrator shall have six months after said adverse decision or decisions within which to make another selection. And that such patents shall issue only upon satisfactory proof to the Secretary of the Interior that the Corvallis and Yaquina Bay Wagon Road Co., prior to the death of the said T. Egenton Hogg, conveyed to him its right and interest in and to all lands earned by the company under the act of Congress approved July 4, 1866, entitled 'An act granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military road from Corvallis to Yaquina Bay': Provided, That lands within national reclamation projects, though they may be subject to homestead entry, shall be considered as reserved, and not subject to the terms of this act."

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. Was not that an amendment that was just read?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is this an amendment to that amendment?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; to come in at the end of the section just read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, at the end of section 2, page 5, the following:

"Provided further, That said 1,848.84 acres of land when so patented shall be in lieu of all amounts of land now due under said act of Congress of July 4, 1866, and shall be accepted in full settlement of all claims under said act."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he has any objection to an amendment after the word "States," in page 5, line 2, by the insertion of the words "State of Oregon"?

Mr. BURNETT. In what line?

Mr. MONDELL. Line 2, page 5.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Wyoming talking about the original bill or about the amendment in the nature of a substitute?

Mr. MONDELL. I am speaking of the substitute. After the words "United States," line 2, page 5, insert the words "State of Oregon."

Mr. BURNETT. I would much prefer that should not be limited.

Mr. MONDELL. I will state to the gentleman that unless he accepts it, it will be my duty to object. I think it was the intention of the committee in reporting the bill that these lands should be confined to the State of Oregon. I think that is the universal practice in bills of this character, to confine the exchange to lands within the State.

Mr. BURNETT. Very well; I will accept that. I see it was in the original bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HAWLEY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill, whether, under this bill, the people to be benefited by its provisions would be authorized to institute contests against entrymen on the public lands in any case?

Mr. BURNETT. It says they are unreserved, unoccupied, and nonmineral lands.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman thinks it will not authorize the making of contests?

Mr. BURNETT. It is in accordance with a letter I had at one time and with the recommendation of the Land Office.

Mr. HAWLEY. This land lies in the county in which I was born, in the State of Oregon, and I am acquainted with the facts, and I think it is a very meritorious bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment to the substitute. Does the gentleman from Wyoming insist upon that amendment which he offered?

Mr. MONDELL. I do.

Mr. BURNETT. And I agreed to it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 5, line 2, by inserting after the words "United States" the words "in the State of Oregon."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] to the substitute amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment offered by Mr. BURNETT was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the substitute as amended.

The question was taken, and the substitute as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BURNETT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

CAST OF HEAD OF STATUE OF JOHN HANCOCK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (H. Con. Res. 58) authorizing Herman Walthauser to make a cast of the head of statue of John Hancock, now located in Senate wing of the Capitol.

The Clerk read the House concurrent resolution, as follows:

House concurrent resolution 58.

Whereas the Society of the Sons of the Revolution of Massachusetts desire to present to that State a bust of John Hancock, and in order to do so it is necessary to obtain a cast from the head of the statue now in the Senate wing of the Capitol, which is the only known statue of Hancock: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That Herman Walthauser, of Boston, Mass., be, and hereby is, authorized to make a cast from the head of the statue of John Hancock now located in the Senate wing of the Capitol.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] whether it would not be practicable to procure a copy of the bust or head of John Hancock at the Hancock Restaurant down here on the Avenue?

Mr. MCCALL. This bill was introduced by my colleague [Mr. WEEKS], and I presume he has consulted all supposed busts of John Hancock, and, inasmuch as he is a very good authority, I have no doubt he has located the proper bust.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether you could get a proper bust of John Hancock at the Hancock Restaurant, but I know that people go there for a bust. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the House concurrent resolution.

The question was taken, and the House concurrent resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

APPOINTMENT BY THE PRESIDENT OF A MEMBER OF THE NEW JERSEY AND NEW YORK JOINT HARBOR LINE COMMISSION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (H. J. Res. 210) authorizing the President to appoint a member of the New Jersey and New York Joint Harbor Line Commission.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 210) authorizing the President to appoint a member of the New Jersey and New York Joint Harbor Line Commission.

Whereas the governor of the State of New Jersey, under legislative authority, has appointed three citizens of New Jersey as members of the New Jersey and New York Joint Harbor Line Commission, and the governor of the State of New York, under legislative authority, has appointed three citizens of New York as members of the same joint harbor line commission; and

Whereas the Legislature of the State of New Jersey indicated its wish that the President of the United States should appoint a seventh member of said New Jersey and New York Joint Harbor Line Commission: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to designate an Army engineer whose present assignment of duty relates to harbor work in, or in the neighborhood of, New York Harbor to act as a member of the said New Jersey and New York Joint Harbor Line Commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I observe that the President is requested to appoint a seventh commissioner to fix these lines.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; and to aid the commission in all other ways.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The governor of New Jersey has appointed three?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes. The commission as at present constituted consists of six members, three appointed by Gov. Wilson of New Jersey and three by Gov. Dix of New York. The commission was created by resolutions passed by the Legislatures of New York and of New Jersey. The resolution of the New Jersey Legislature, in part creating the commission, requested the President to appoint a member of the Engineer Corps on this commission. Gov. Wilson wrote to the President, asking him to do so, and the President replied that he thought he should have the authority of Congress, and I therefore introduced this resolution on that understanding.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is a general arrangement between the President and the governors?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes. I may add that the War Department approves of it highly. The object of this joint commission is to make a study of these harbor lines and the economic administration of the two harbors. Of course the Army engineer having to do with the harbor work in that vicinity would be an admirable adviser and doubtless a most competent member of the commission.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I fully agree with the purposes of the bill. If the bill should go through, would the gentleman rather have the seventh commissioner appointed this year or wait until another President is elected?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I would be content to have him appointed by the present occupant of the White House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. AKIN of New York. I object.

INTERNATIONAL INQUIRY INTO THE HIGH COST OF LIVING.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 21479) appropriating money to enable the President to propose and invite foreign Governments to participate in an international conference to promote an international inquiry into the causes of the high cost of living throughout the world and to enable the United States to participate in said conference.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of enabling the President to propose and to invite foreign Governments to participate in an international conference for the purpose of considering plans to be submitted to the various Governments for an international inquiry into the high cost of living, its extent, causes, effects, and possible remedies, and to defray the expenses of preparation for and participation in such conference by the United States, the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended for such purpose under the direction of the President of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to give the gentleman from New York a chance to make some remarks, if he has anything to say.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE], let me say that this bill, introduced by me, "for an international inquiry into the causes of the high cost of living throughout the world," is a matter of much moment, a meritorious measure, and has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The bill is substantially backed by the public opinion of America. It should be promptly enacted into law. The world-wide advance in prices of the necessaries of life in recent years, increasing the cost of living, is believed to be the cause of much of the social discontent now prevailing in many of the leading countries of the world, and presents a problem calling for scientific investigation of facts by a body of trained experts.

The leading political economists, business men, commercial bodies, and economic societies of Europe have already placed themselves on record in favor of an international commission to investigate the high cost of living, and a great many of them have expressed the opinion that the United States should take the lead in calling together such a commission.

There is no doubt but that such a commission should be appointed of unprejudiced and impartial persons—experts in fact—to investigate these economic conditions. The increasing cost of living is a matter of much public concern, and the facts in connection with the same should be carefully collated by the best experts in the world as a basis for future intelligent legislative action. There should be no objection to this important legislation from any representative of the people—because it is in the interest of the people. They want this bill to pass, and I indulge the hope that ere long it will be a law.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, in the light of information that we have from the commission appointed in recent years to investigate various and sundry subjects, feeling sure that if the high cost of living is not reduced until we get it by this method, I feel constrained to object.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be stricken from the calendar.

THE IMMIGRATION ACT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 19544) to amend section 9 of the immigration act, approved February 20, 1907.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered, the committee amendments agreed to, the bill considered as engrossed, read a third time and passed, and the motion to reconsider be entered and laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill may be considered, the committee amendments agreed to, the bill considered as engrossed and read a third time and passed, and the motion to reconsider entered and laid on the table. Is there objection?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Reserving the right to object, I want to say that if the gentleman will include in his request unanimous consent that House bill 22527, being a bill to further restrict undesirable immigrants, with the illiteracy test and other important amendments, I shall be glad not to interpose any objection to this request, but if this unanimous consent is to railroad the bill through the House, to help out New York in its penitentiaries and asylums, now overcrowded with aliens, to the neglect of the people of the whole country, so that its vast domain can not be protected against the flood of criminal and diseased immigrants, I shall object.

Mr. MANN. I did not make the request which I did for the purpose of shutting out consideration of the immigration bill, but because it is perfectly patent to anyone with brains—and the gentleman from Georgia has plenty—that the bill will not be considered in the House at this time except under some such arrangement as I suggest, and no one objects to this bill. Now, anyone can object to the consideration of this because they want some other bill to come up which they know will not come up. It is immaterial to me. I was simply trying to get the bill passed with no one objecting to it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. If the gentleman will agree——

Mr. MANN. I make the unanimous request, and the gentleman can do as he pleases.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia objects to the request for unanimous consent by the gentleman from Illinois. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that this is a highly meritorious measure and ought to pass this House, but unless I can get an agreement that no amendment will be offered, such an agreement as has been proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, I shall be constrained to object. I ask unanimous consent that no amendment be offered to this bill.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad, indeed, if no objection was offered in this case. It is not only New York that is suffering from the influx of aliens, but a number of other States in the North, and it will not be long before the States in the South will begin to suffer in the same way. I should like to have the amendment suggested by my friend from Georgia incorporated in the bill. I have done my best to secure the passage of that bill, but I do not believe that we would do right in undertaking to put through an amendment that would result in defeating a meritorious proposition as this is. I hope that the gentleman from Missouri will not insist on his objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Was the request I made for unanimous consent objected to?

The SPEAKER. It was, by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MANN. Then I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, by incorporating a letter from a member of the New York State board of alienists, in reply to criticisms made by the gentleman from Illinois, Judge SABATH.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NEW JERSEY AND NEW YORK JOINT HARBOR LINE COMMISSION.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to recur to joint resolution 210, authorizing the President to appoint a member of the New Jersey and New York Harbor Line Commission. The objection was made under a misapprehension.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to recur to House joint resolution 210. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 210, authorizing the President to appoint a member of the New Jersey and New York Joint Harbor Line Commission.

Whereas the governor of the State of New Jersey, under legislative authority, has appointed three citizens of New Jersey as members of the New Jersey and New York Joint Harbor Line Commission, and the governor of the State of New York, under legislative authority, has appointed three citizens of New York as members of the same Joint Harbor Line Commission; and

Whereas the Legislature of the State of New Jersey indicated its wish that the President of the United States should appoint a seventh member of said New Jersey and New York Joint Harbor Line Commission: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to designate an Army engineer whose present assignment of duty relates to harbor work in, or in the neighborhood of, New York Harbor to act as a member of the said New Jersey and New York Joint Harbor Line Commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 1, strike out the words "Army engineer" and insert in lieu thereof the words "officer of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army."

Page 2, line 2, strike out the word "present."

"Provided, That no expense shall accrue to the United States by reason of such appointment, and the officer designated may receive such compensation for his services on said commission as may be provided by the States aforesaid."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the House joint resolution as amended.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ALLEGATION AND PROOF OF LOYALTY IN CERTAIN CASES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, was the bill (H. R. 16314) to amend section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, be amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 162. The Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the claims of those whose property was taken subsequent to June 1, 1865, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 12, 1863, entitled 'An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and for the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States,' and acts amendatory thereof where the property so taken was sold and the net proceeds thereof were placed in the Treasury of the United States; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall return said net proceeds to the owners thereof, on the judgment of said court, and full jurisdiction is given to said court to adjudge said claims, any statutes of limitations to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, That no allegation or proof of loyalty shall be required in the presentation or adjudication of such claims."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection until I can make a statement?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will reserve the objection for a statement, although I shall object at the end of the statement. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, during my seven years of service in this House I have never yet made an objection to the consideration of any matter presented in the House, and in this particular instance if I could get the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I am sure that I can satisfy him that he should not make an objection here and now to this bill. I am talking particularly for the benefit of the gentleman who anticipates making an objection, and who has stated that he will.

During the last session of the Sixty-first Congress, when the Republican side of the House was in the majority, there was an amendment offered to the judicial code bill, the codification of the laws, and it was passed, with that side in the majority. After the passage of this section 162, providing that the people from whom there had been taken cotton, entirely after the cessation of hostilities, after the war was closed, should be reimbursed, it was anticipated there would be no obstacle in the way of those people collecting the amount which has lain dormant in the Treasury for the last 45 years. This is the particular thing to which I direct the gentleman's attention. After that section had been embedded in this codification of the laws bill, the bill was passed. It went through the House and went to the Senate. It went through the Senate with the same condition existing, namely, a Republican majority there. This was considered an act of justice to the people from whom the cotton had been taken. After it had passed both the Republican House and the Republican Senate it went to conference, and in that conference it would have been impossible for the conferees to have agreed if it had not been for the understanding on the part of the Democratic members of that conference that this section 162 would be effective.

The minority ranking member of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON], said while this bill was up for consideration before the committee that it would be the rankest injustice if the bill should not be favorably reported and passed by this House. He said that it would be wrong to the Members who had been led to believe when that conference agreed upon the final passage of the bill—that it would be a betrayal of confidence and an injustice—if that particular section should not be carried to a successful conclusion and be incorporated in that measure. because of the fact that the Democratic conferees had agreed with the understanding that section 162 would be operative and effective.

Why is it not so? It can not be carried into effect because of the objection of the United States attorney, who has raised a technical objection, because a preceding section—section 159—says that in all cases which are presented before the Court of Claims there must be both an allegation and proof of loyalty. That is purely and simply a technicality. It was understood and contemplated by no one at the time that that objection would be made to the passage of these claims. No one ever thought for a moment that an objection of that kind would be raised. The result of this objection on the part of the United States attorney is to allow those people who came from other sections of the country into the South just after the Civil War to reap the benefits of this section 162, while the widows and the orphans and the poor people who had taken from them all of the cotton that they had in their possession after 1865, whose husbands and parents had been in the war, would be deprived of receiving the benefits of this act, and the speculators, hordes of them, who went down to that section of the country after the war would have the benefit of the proceeds arising from this property which was wrongfully and illegally, as the Supreme Court of the United States says in the Klein case, taken from the people of that section of the country.

In that case the Supreme Court of the United States, in passing upon the question, says that the question of loyalty cuts no figure at all. The question of loyalty is not involved in these cases, because the act of 1863, which was passed allowing this property to be taken, constituted a trust fund on the part of the Government, and the question of loyalty was not involved. But it is said that it becomes involved now because of the fact that the act passed on the 3d of March, 1911, has in it section 159, and that that stands as an obstacle in the way of the allowance of these claims for the benefit of those people whose fathers, whose husbands, and who themselves happened to be upon the side of the South during the war. I hope that the gentleman at this late day, 45 years after the cessation of hostilities, will not raise an objection in the case where it is sought to obviate the necessity of proving loyalty in those claims which arose entirely after the war was over.

I can not conceive that after this lapse of time, I can not conceive that after the passage of the Sherwood bill by a Democratic House, after the name of Jefferson Davis has been restored upon Cabin John Bridge, after the sword of Lee has been sheathed forever and the immortal spirit of Jefferson Davis has taken its eternal flight, after all we have done on the part of the South to try to show that our feelings have at least been mollified, our animosities buried, that the gentleman will now raise an objection to the consideration of a measure simply because it refers to the question of loyalty of those people who had at one time engaged in a conflict, but which relates to a time when the conflict was ended, when the war was over and hostilities had ceased. To do so, it seems to me, would look not only like antagonism in a spirit of partisanship, but of bitterness. I trust that the gentleman will see proper to withdraw his objection in this instance.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if this bill is passed it will probably take eight or ten millions of dollars out of the Treasury that ought not to be taken out of the Treasury, and it is too important a matter for consideration without discussion, which we can not give it to-day, and I therefore object.

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman withhold for a moment?

Mr. MANN. No; I withheld my objection for a moment and it turned out to be for about 20 minutes. My friend from Mississippi has already made one speech on this subject and I listened to him very attentively, and every moment that we use now means that somebody has to sit here at night, and I am sure it will not be my friend from Mississippi.

Mr. CANDLER. I will stay at night, and I sincerely hope the gentleman will not object. The record will show I am generally here when the House is in session, whether night or day.

Mr. MANN. Well, we will see whether the gentleman will stay. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 26321), the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, in order that we may expedite action upon the matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 26321, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (H. R. 26321) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask for information. I understand the Senate has stricken out all after the enacting clause of this bill, which is the legislative appropriation bill, and inserted the language the conferees reported in the legislative bill which was vetoed by the President with the exception of the tenure of office provision.

Mr. BURLESON. Section 5.

Mr. MANN. Section 5 which was left out and a new section 5 inserted. There may be some other changes. I think there was one change in reference to the Commerce Court, inserting a provision inserted by a concurrent resolution.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman states the facts correctly. I will state the amendment as it is now in the Clerk's hands sets forth the bill as agreed on in conference with this exception—it strikes out section 5; that is, the seven-year tenure section; adds a penalty to section 4, which was agreed upon in the bill in conference; conforms to the provision abolishing the Commerce Court in accordance with the directions of a concurrent resolution which passed after the conference——

Mr. MANN. Did that concurrent resolution pass?

Mr. BURLESON. It passed the Senate and was messaged to the House.

Mr. MANN. But it did not pass the House.

Mr. BURLESON. It did not pass the House; it passed the Senate and was messaged to the House.

Mr. MANN. I am not going to object on that account, although I notified them they could not pass that resolution in the House by unanimous consent.

Mr. BURLESON. Those are the only two exceptions.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What about the provision in reference to the State Department?

Mr. BURLESON. It was retained in the bill just as it was originally agreed upon in conference.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As I understand it this is exactly the bill as agreed upon in conference except the seven-year tenure clause was stricken out.

Mr. BURLESON. The seven-year clause was stricken out of section 5 and a penalty added to section 4 and a provision relating to the abolition of the Commerce Court is modified in accordance with the concurrent resolution which passed the Senate but did not pass the House.

Mr. NORRIS. What is the difference between the bill now as it came from the Senate regarding the Commerce Court and the bill as vetoed by the President?

Mr. BURLESON. This is added, and this only is added:

All cases pending and undisposed of in said Commerce Court are hereby transferred to and shall be deemed pending in the district court of any of the judicial districts within which the original cause of action brought before the Interstate Commerce Commission arose, such district to be designated by the complainant; and the venue of all suits and proceedings hereafter brought to enforce, set aside, annul, or modify any order of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be in any of the judicial districts within which the original cause of action brought before the commission arose.

Mr. MANN. I shall not object to the request for two reasons: One is, I think it is extremely desirable to have the bill go to the President as soon as possible in order that we may expedite the close of the session, and the other reason is we will soon have another bill before us covering the same subject matter, to which anyone can have the right to object, discuss, or amend.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

PURE FOOD AND DRUGS ACT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11877) to amend section 8 of the food and drugs act, approved June 30, 1906.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] reserves the right to object.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky who introduced this bill, which is a very important measure and one that ought to be passed in corrected form, whether he will agree to an amendment which would cover the printed matter inside the packages or the label? The bill seems to be defective in that respect. I am sorry I did not have opportunity to bring it to the attention of the gentleman, but the papers have just been forwarded to me from my office. It appears that there are cases where the defendant might, under the decision of the Supreme Court and in spite of the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee, avoid the penalty provided the false statements are not on the outside cover of the package. It is known that in cases of nostrums and patent medicines the statement in regard to the ingredients or therapeutic properties of the article is frequently on the inside of the cover of the package or bottle. I would suggest to the gentleman that it might be well to substitute the words "the label of which shall bear, or the package of which shall bear or contain." The addition of the words "or contain" would be sufficient.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no objection to the amendment outlined by the gentleman, although I think I can suggest a more concise form for it. The matter that the gentleman brings to the attention of the House had been also spoken of to me by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and while I think a proper construction of the act would perhaps cover the matter, still I see no reason why we should not make the assurance doubly sure. I would have no objection to such amendments.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I offer the amendment, then?

Mr. SHERLEY. Let us get the unanimous consent, and then it will be in order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11877) to amend section 8 of the food and drugs act approved June 30, 1906.

Be it enacted, etc., That that part of section 8 of the food and drugs act of June 30, 1906, defining what shall be misbranding in the case of drugs, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto a third paragraph to read as follows:

"If its package or label shall bear any statement, design, or device regarding the curative or therapeutic effect of such article which is false and fraudulent."

So that the said part of said section 8 shall read as follows:

"SEC. 8. That the term 'misbranded,' as used herein, shall apply to all drugs or articles of food or articles which enter into the composition of food, the package or label of which shall bear any statement, design, or device regarding such article, or the ingredients or substances contained therein which shall be false or misleading in any particular, and to any food or drug product which is falsely branded as to the State, Territory, or country in which it is manufactured or produced.

"That for the purposes of this act an article shall also be deemed to be misbranded. In case of drugs:

"First. If it be an imitation of or offered for sale under the name of another article.

"Second. If the contents of the package as originally put up shall have been removed, in whole or in part, and other contents shall have been placed in such package, or if the package fail to bear a statement on the label of the quantity or proportion of any alcohol, morphine, opium, cocaine, heroin, alpha or beta eucaine, chloroform, cannabis indica, chloral hydrate, or acetanilide, or any derivative or preparation of any such substances contained therein.

"Third. If its package or label shall bear any statement, design, or device regarding the curative or therapeutic effect of such article which is false and fraudulent."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer as an amendment, on line 8, page 1, after the word "bear," the words "or contain." Also on line 22, page 2, after the word "bear," the words "or contain."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, the bill is of so much importance, it seems to me the House is entitled to a brief statement of its purport.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to insert, after the word "article," in line 10, page 1, and after the word "article," in line 24, page 2, the following words:

Or any of the ingredients or substances contained therein.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, something over a year ago the Supreme Court rendered a decision in what is known as the Johnson case, in which they held that the sections of the pure-food law relating to misbranding did not embrace statements as to the curative or therapeutic properties of drugs. There was a very strong dissent handed down by Justice Hughes, and concurred in by Justice Day and Justice Harlan, holding that a proper construction of the act would embrace such cases. The majority of the court seem to have gone on the idea that it was not the intention of Congress to enter into the domain of matters in issue between rival schools of medicine, but, as is very clearly set out by the minority in their dissenting opinion, there were a great many cases that did not belong in this twilight zone, but represented plain cases of fraud and deceit. In the opinion of the minority of the court, it was the intention of the law to reach such cases, and believing it certainly ought to be the intention of the law to reach them, I introduced the bill now before the House. Just after its introduction the President called attention to the importance of the decision and the need of a remedy by a special message to Congress. This act has been drawn with some care, and as perfected by the amendments offered will certainly reach those cases of fraud without undertaking to have the Government enter into the disputed domain that lies outside of proper legislation.

The use of the words "and fraudulent" qualifies the language of the act so as to make it apply only to those cases of deceit and of fraud that ought to be embraced, and that ought not to be permitted in commerce at all. I have made this much of a statement not so much for the benefit of the Members of the House, who are familiar with the law, as that the country at large may know the importance of the amendment.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. I observe in line 12, page 2, that an article shall be deemed to be misbranded, in the case of drugs, if it be an imitation of, or offered for sale under the name of, another article. Now, suppose you take an article——

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit me just a moment there, I think I can anticipate his question by saying that that is in the existing law. The only change I propose here is found in the third paragraph, which is in this language:

If its package or label shall bear any statement, design, or device regarding the curative or therapeutic effect of such article which is false and fraudulent.

That has been modified by the amendment offered by myself and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. COOPER. That is a good suggestion, but there is one other question that I would like to ask of the gentleman from Kentucky. Recurring to lines 12 and 13, page 2, referring to things misbranded, if it be offered for sale under the name of another article; now suppose it were offered falsely under a name that is not the name of another article, but a manufactured name, or a name conjured up; suppose it is simply water, with some bitters in it that makes it taste like medicine, and it is not sold under the name of another article. It would none the less be a fraud.

Mr. SHERLEY. There are other provisions of the act which cover a false statement as to the ingredients, but under the decision of the Supreme Court it is held that there is no provision in the act which made it unlawful to make a false statement as to the curative or therapeutic qualities of medicine, and it was only as to that phase of it that this bill undertakes to deal.

Mr. COOPER. I should think it would be termed "misbranded" if it were offered for sale in the name of another article or under a false name.

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. Certainly.

Mr. COVINGTON. I will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that another section of the pure-food law provides a punishment for misbranding when it implies any false statement in regard to any ingredient or false substance contained therein.

Mr. COOPER. Exactly. But these two paragraphs are entirely different. Section 8, defining the term "misbranded," says it shall apply to all drugs or articles of food or articles which enter into the construction of food or the ingredients or substances contained therein which are false or misleading in any particular, and in line 12 there is a specific provision to the effect that the article shall be adjudged misbranded if it be offered in imitation of or under the name of another article. It may be another matter entirely from the mere name, and it may deceive the purchaser as to what the ingredients are.

Mr. MANN. That provision in the existing pure-food law is not changed by this at all, and the purpose of that provision there is simply to prevent people from selling one thing under the name of another thing. It was not intended to prevent people manufacturing a name of their own. The law specifically provides that people may use a conjured-up name for something, but they can not use deleterious substances in food or drugs or in the making of the article. If a name is established, they can not use something else and sell it under that name.

Mr. COOPER. Yes; but still they could sell one article under the name of another article. For example, if you take flour and sell it under a purely invented name, you would not violate the act.

Mr. MANN. No. You can take flour and sell it now under an invented name if you can get anybody to buy it.

Mr. COOPER. Yes. I know of a so-called drug or an alleged cure which is nothing but water with 2 per cent of something to color it. The gentleman knows what it was. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] was not of the company, of course, but the alleged cure I refer to was made in his city, and the fraud was exposed two or three years ago. I believe the people concerned in it made over a hundred thousand dollars on it.

Mr. MANN. That is the effect of the Sherley proposition. If you want to sell flour for medicine and people want to buy it, I do not see any reason why they should not be permitted to buy it; but if you want to sell flour and claim that it will cure disease, the Sherley amendment prevents it.

Mr. COOPER. But should a person be allowed to sell flour under the name of "Molie" or "Culloly," for example? As an extreme illustration, suppose an Italian, unacquainted with the terms used in this country, buys something called "Molie" and afterwards finds out that he has bought only flour. He has not bought it under the name of another article, because there is no such article. He has been deliberately swindled.

Mr. MANN. What difference does it make? He certainly knows flour. They can not lie as to what it can be under the Sherley amendment. If he prefers to buy "Molie," and prefers that to flour, he can buy it.

Mr. COOPER. But it may not be nourishing.

Mr. MANN. Well, flour is a nourishing article of food under any name.

Mr. COOPER. That would not be misbranding if it were called "flour," but this man may buy flour under another name.

Mr. MANN. A trade name must be permitted under the pure-food law if the article does not contain deleterious substances.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not the amendment which was offered by the gentleman a little while ago and accepted by the gentleman from Kentucky cover that entirely?

Mr. MANN. I think it does in regard to medicines.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia). The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES COURT LIBRARY IN NORTHERN DISTRICT OF OHIO.

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to No. 388 on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, the bill (H. R. 4718) to authorize the use of certain unclaimed moneys now in the registry of the United States Circuit Court for the Northern District of Ohio for the improvement of the libraries of the United States courts for said district, for the purpose of amending the title.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to return to the bill H. R. 4718. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCOY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the title be amended in accordance with the text.

The motion was agreed to.

ACT TO ENLARGE HOMESTEADS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 23351) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for enlarged homesteads."

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I will ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AGRICULTURAL ENTRIES ON OIL AND GAS LANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3045) to provide for agricultural entries on oil and gas lands.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act unreserved public lands of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, which have been withdrawn or classified as oil lands, or are valuable for oil, shall be subject to appropriate entry under the homestead laws by actual settlers only, the desert-land law, to selection under section 4 of the act approved August 18, 1894, known as the Carey Act, and to withdrawal under the act approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, whenever such entry, selection, or withdrawal shall be made with a view of obtaining or passing title, with a reservation to the United States of the oil and gas in such lands and of the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same. But no desert entry made under the provisions of this act shall contain more than 160 acres, and all homestead entries made hereunder shall be subject to the conditions, as to cultivation and residence, of entries under the act approved February 19, 1909, entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead": Provided, That those who have initiated non-mineral entries, selections, or locations in good faith, prior to the passage of this act, on lands withdrawn or classified as oil lands, may perfect the same under the provisions of the laws under which said entries were made, but shall receive the limited patent provided for in this act.

SEC. 2. That any person desiring to make entry under the homestead laws or the desert-land law, any State desiring to make selection under section 4 of the act of August 18, 1894, known as the Carey Act, and the Secretary of the Interior in withdrawing under the reclamation act lands classified as oil lands, or valuable for oil, with a view of securing or passing title to the same in accordance with the provisions of said acts, shall state in the application for entry, selection, or notice of withdrawal that the same is made in accordance with and subject to the provisions and reservations of this act.

SEC. 3. That upon satisfactory proof of full compliance with the provisions of the laws under which entry is made and of this act the entryman shall be entitled to a patent to the land entered by him, which patent shall contain a reservation to the United States of all the oil and gas in the lands so patented, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same. The reserved oil and gas deposits in such lands shall be disposed of only as shall be hereafter expressly directed by law: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be held to deny or abridge the right to present and have prompt consideration of applications to locate, enter, or select, under the land laws of the United States, lands which have been classified as oil lands with a view of disproving such classification and securing a patent without reservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KENT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I would like to know whether this bill has been favorably reported by the Department of the Interior?

Mr. MONDELL. It has, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I notice in section 2 what I suppose is a manifest error. It leaves in the words "any State desiring to make selection under section 4 of the act," and then in other parts of the bill they attempt by amendment to confine it to Utah.

Mr. MONDELL. It is the intention to offer three amendments, which will be necessary in order to make section 2 harmonize with section 1 as amended.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman be kind enough to tell me what his amendments are?

Mr. MONDELL. The word "any," in line 23, page 2, should be stricken out and the word "the" inserted.

After the word "State," in line 23 on the same page, the word "Utah" should be inserted.

On page 3, after the word "act," in line 2, the words "or under grants made by Congress" should be inserted. With those amendments section 2 would harmonize with section 1.

Mr. MANN. I should like to ask the gentlemen if they would be willing to strike out the proviso at the bottom of page 3, and be willing to insert wherever oil and gas or oil or gas occurs the word "coal" after the word "oil" so that it will read, "oil, coal, or gas"?

Mr. MONDELL. I scarcely know how that sort of an amendment would be interpreted in connection with the general law applying to coal lands of which this is a copy. There is a general act which applies to Utah, as to all other parts of the public domain, approved June 22, 1910, and in practically the identical words of this act, but applying only to coal, and providing for the entry under certain of the agricultural laws of land withdrawn as coal lands or valuable for coal. That act is in full force and effect in Utah, as it is elsewhere in the country, and covers the question of coal, all reserved coal lands, and lands valuable for coal.

Mr. MANN. That has nothing to do with this.

Mr. MONDELL. It has everything to do with coal land in the State of Utah, and it does not seem to me that it is good legislation, when we have a law applying to the State of Utah providing for the agricultural entry of coal lands, to afterwards legislate on the same subject in another bill and in exactly the same manner. The language of the coal bill is identical with the language of this bill, except that it is general, and that the word "coal" instead of the words "oil and gas" is used.

Mr. MANN. I am familiar with that, but the coal law has no application whatever to the lands referred to in this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly not, unless they contain coal.

Mr. MANN. Then what is the use of talking about that?

Mr. MONDELL. The lands referred to in this bill are lands reserved for oil, or are valuable for oil. The lands that the gentleman desires to bring within the bill are lands reserved for coal or valuable for coal. Those lands are now provided for in a bill identical in language with the bill before us, but applying to coal.

Mr. MURRAY. This bill is a copy of the coal bill?

Mr. MONDELL. It is identical with it, except that it refers to another mineral.

Mr. MANN. I do not like to work at cross purposes with the gentleman, but the gentleman can not mislead me.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Wyoming has not the slightest disposition to mislead the gentleman from Illinois. He does not consider that he would be able to mislead so astute a gentleman in the first instance, and certainly he has no desire to mislead him; but it strikes me as being very extraordinary that when we have legislation providing for lands valuable for coal that it is considered necessary to put in legislation providing for oil and gas lands the same words.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to interrupt the consideration of this bill for the purpose of laying before the House some other matters.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

THE PANAMA CANAL (H. DOC. NO. 914).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Congress has passed a bill for the government of the Panama Canal when it shall have been completed, in section 5 of which it is provided that no tolls shall be levied upon vessels engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States. Under existing law no vessels but those of the United States can engage in the coastwise trade. The same bill provides for the imposition, within the discretion of the President, of tolls not exceeding $1.25 per net registered ton upon all other vessels using the canal.

In the debates in the House and Senate it was contended that this was a discrimination in favor of vessels of the United States in violation of the following provision of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty:

> The canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations observing these rules, on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any such nation, or its citizens or subjects, in respect of the conditions or charges of traffic, or otherwise. Such conditions and charges of traffic shall be just and equitable. (Art. 3, sec. 1, p. 1904.)

After full examination of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty and of the treaty which preceded it, I feel confident that the exemption of the coastwise vessels of the United States from tolls and the imposition of tolls on vessels of all nations engaged in the foreign trade is not a violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. But distinguished lawyers in the House and Senate differ from this construction, and the Secretary of State has received an informal protest from the British Government that the contemplated legislation is a violation of her treaty rights.

The necessity for the enactment of the provisions of the bill looking to the maintenance and government of the canal I have already explained in a special message, and this necessity makes me anxious to sign the bill. On the other hand, the question of the foreign relations of the Government is one in respect of which the Executive has especial responsibility, and such a protest from a friendly Government, supported as it is by the expressed views of distinguished Members of both Houses, invites the greatest care and the closest examination on our part of our rights under our treaties, with a view to preserving national honor and observing our solemn obligations.

I am sure that it is not the intention of Congress to violate the Hay-Pauncefote treaty or to enact anything inconsistent with its provisions, and that it certainly is not its purpose to repeal, by subsequent enactment, the treaty in so far as it represents the law of the land. It is of the highest importance, however, that this attitude should be made clearly known to the nations of the world, and that we should avoid any apparent justification for criticism.

I suggest, therefore, that before the time has elapsed in which I am called upon to express approval or disapproval of this bill Congress consider the wisdom of passing a joint resolution of the following tenor:

> That nothing contained in the act entitled "An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone" shall be deemed to repeal any provision of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, or to affect the judicial construction thereof, or in any wise to impair any rights or privileges which have been or may be acquired by any foreign nation under the treaties of the United States relative to tolls or other charges for the passage of vessels through the Panama Canal, and that when any alien, whether natural person, partnership, company, or corporation, considers that the charging of tolls or the enforcement of any other regulation under and pursuant to the provisions of this act violates in any way any such treaty rights or privileges, such alien shall have the right to bring an action against the United States for a redress of the injury which he considers himself to have suffered, and the district courts of the United States are hereby given jurisdiction to hear and determine such cases and to decree the appropriate relief, and from the decision of such district courts there shall be an appeal by either party to the action to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Or, in the alternative, that Congress recall the bill and insert the foregoing as an amendment to the bill.

Unless some such clause is embodied in the law, it would probably be contended that the legislative construction of the treaty given by Congress in enacting the law is binding upon our courts when the question of the rights of aliens under the treaty comes before them. The foregoing provision would avoid such effect and would leave the matter entirely free to judicial construction, unaffected by the political decision of either the Executive or legislative branch of our Government.

This language negatives absolutely any desire on the part of Congress to repeal the Hay-Pauncefote treaty or to violate its provisions by this legislation and leaves open to any person who deems himself aggrieved by the provisions of the act an opportunity to appeal to our courts.

I think the importance of our standing before the world as anxious to give to the world an oportunity to test this question in the courts is an earnest of our good faith in attempting to keep within our treaty obligations.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 19, 1912.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message be printed and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Alabama will permit, I think it is wiser to let the message lie on the Speaker's table for a little while, and let us have a conference around among ourselves in respect to it.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think it better go to the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the reason he had the message read at this particular juncture was that he was afraid perhaps later on somebody might raise the point of order of no quorum, and we could not have it read, and the Chair thought it important to have the message read.

Mr. MANN. The Chair can refer it without a motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can refer it, but there is no harm in putting the motion.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama that the message be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered printed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Alabama when the House will adjourn to-day?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I hope that we will finish the Unanimous Consent Calendar before adjournment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman about that, but I am not sure whether when we do that we will want to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, there are some matters that outside of conference reports we are anxious to get through with.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will postpone his request. If we do not run too late there will not be any objection to it, but if we should happen to run until 11 o'clock to-night, we might not want to meet so early in the morning.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request for the present.

AGRICULTURAL ENTRIES ON OIL AND GAS LANDS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] had the floor when the Chair interrupted him to lay the message of the President before the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I believe, although I may be mistaken, that usually coal and oil are in some way connected. This bill (S. 3045) provides that where land is withdrawn as oil land title may be granted to the surface with a reservation of oil and gas, which I take it is upon the theory that oil and gas are connected. It does not require a withdrawal of the land on account of gas. It provides that if it be withdrawn or valuable for oil, then the reservation shall be for oil and gas.

Mr. MONDELL. The withdrawal is always for oil and gas.

Mr. MANN. If, as the gentleman says, the withdrawal is always for oil and gas, then this bill is incorrectly drawn, because this bill only applies when land has been withdrawn or classified as oil land, or when it is chiefly valuable for oil, and I think, therefore, probably the gentleman may or may not be correct. Either the gentleman is incorrect or the bill, one of the two. There is just as much relationship between oil and coal as there is between oil and gas. If gentlemen are willing to insert "coal" following "oil" wherever it appears, reserving oil, coal, and gas, I am very well satisfied to let the bill pass.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, what the gentleman wants, as I understand it, is that if land has been withdrawn for oil and the entryman secures the title to it he must secure his title reserving to the United States the oil and the coal, although there may be no coal there.

Mr. MANN. There may be no oil there either and there may be no gas, because it is not like this place—there is not gas everywhere. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. But there is a law on the statute books that applies to the proposition the gentleman has in mind, which applies not only to Utah, but to the entire country, namely, that if land is withdrawn for coal or if land is valuable for coal, whether it be withdrawn or not, it may be entered with a reservation of the coal. I do not think the gentleman believes that because land may be withdrawn for a certain mineral, that, therefore, the entryman who may enter under an agricultural law should be required to take it with a reservation to the Government of all the minerals that might at any time be found in the land, which the land is not known or believed to contain.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to stand here and argue with the gentleman all day long. He will not convince me and probably I shall not convince him. I am perfectly willing to object to the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this is too important legislation and too many people are interested in it for me to take the responsibility of saying that I am willing to have the legislation written in a way that will conflict with legislation already upon the statute books and make it difficult to understand the legislation we already have. There is legislation fully protecting the Government in the matter of coal. I do not know how this legislation as proposed to be amended could be interpreted or how it would be interpreted. If in passing this bill confined to Utah, relative to oil land, we insert language relating to another mineral which is provided for in exactly the same sort of legislation, applicable to all of the country, I do not know how it would be interpreted. I do not think the gentleman ought to insist upon it. If it is the gentleman's intention that because there be a suspicion that land contains one mineral there should be a reservation of another, and then by analogy of all mineral, he is proposing something we have never done and in my opinion ought not to do.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman allow the bill to go over without prejudice?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CANAL BETWEEN LAKE ERIE AND OHIO RIVER.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 6678) authorizing the Secretary of War, under certain conditions, to detail officers of the Corps of Engineers to supervise and direct the construction of a canal between Lake Erie and the Ohio River, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to say in my judgment this is too important a measure to be considered here to-day. It provides for the commencement of a very important piece of work——

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The bill will be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I was going to object to it myself.

INCORPORATION OF CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25106) to incorporate the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to hear from the gentleman, the author of the bill, what its purpose is. I do not see him here.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MURRAY. May I ask the gentleman to withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. MANN. This is rather an unusual case.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object for a moment, but I shall object at the end.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, about the middle of April last, at the suggestion of the President of the United States, a number of representatives of foreign local commercial bodies, chambers of commerce, other commercial bodies, and other various associations of the United States came here to Washington. There were 700 or 800 delegates at the meeting, which was held at the New Willard Hotel, the purpose of the meeting being to effect a national organization of representatives of various bodies representing the local commercial interests, one of their purposes being to raise, if it could, the standard of business ethics in this country, to bring together various commercial interests throughout the country; and not only that, but to provide for giving the people of other countries better information of what was being done here to extend American trade and commerce. The result of the meeting of those gentlemen was the formulation of a bill, and this bill has grown out of that. Now, there is a provision in the bill, near the end of it, "that nothing herein contained shall authorize said corporation to engage in business for its own profit." So that this corporation could not be availed of to anyone's profit. It is simply to extend to other countries the advantages of trade with the people of the United States and to bring closer together the various commercial bodies of the United States. If it were a corporation for profit I would not urge it upon the House, but it can be seen from the conclusion of the provision to which I have referred that it can not possibly be made a vehicle of profit to anyone, and it is absolutely in the interest of a wider commerce for the United and to bring closer together the various commercial interests of the United States. Mr. Speaker, if there are any particular questions, I would be glad to answer them, if I am able to do so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Did not this bill originate in the meeting called by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor?

Mr. GRAHAM. Well, the suggestion for the original meeting came through the President, but he was influenced in the way you speak of in making the suggestion by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, also.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is a result of a good deal of discussion amongst the commercial bodies for a number of years, as I understand it.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And has behind it the desire of commercial bodies to cooperate with the Department of Commerce and Labor so as to make more effective what can be done in the promotion of trade.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is true.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And had a good deal to do with the desire to improve the commercial advantages which would result from the opening of the Panama Canal.

Mr. GRAHAM. Up to this time, while various cities have had their commercial bodies, chambers of commerce, and all that sort of thing, there has been no sort of communion between them and this is an attempt to bring them together for the purpose of mutual assistance in public benefit.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me to answer the inquiry propounded by the gentleman from Pennsylvania by saying that the idea carried in this proposed measure did not originate with the President nor with the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, but it originated with the various boards of trade and commercial bodies of like kind throughout the country, and they are very anxious to have this measure passed, as my associate on the committee, the gentleman from Illinois, has well stated. But I may say, Mr. Speaker, that this measure came from the committee with a unanimous report from the members of that committee, and after having given a hearing on the subject to the advocates or proponents of this legislation, the committee took the view of the matter which has just been so well expressed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. MURRAY. I hope sincerely that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] will not insist in his purpose to object to this legislation, because I happen to know something of the beginning of this movement which results to-day in a unanimous report from the Committee on the Judiciary to permit certain gentlemen to incorporate. Everything they desire to do may well be done by them in a voluntary association without an act of incorporation by Congress, and I have no doubt that the gentleman from Tennessee will agree with the thought which must be apparent and in the mind of every man here—that this work can be best directed and carried on with credentials of incorporation from the Congress of the United States. We ought not to allow anything except the best kind of reason to stand against the passage of this bill. The history of this matter has been referred to. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is the ranking member of the Committee on Insular Affairs, and knows perhaps better than most of us here the tremendous opportunity there is for the American business man and American manufacturer to encourage close business relations with the people of the Philippine Islands.

The report that accompanies this bill refers to the splendid advantages that we are certain to get from this incorporation, and no Member should object to this bill on the grounds that are usually interposed against Federal incorporation. I am one of those who believe we should not be too ready to incorporate hastily under the interstate-commerce power of the Constitution. I should hesitate a long time to permit some of those who have petitioned Congress to have a charter, but where a corporation is for patriotic purposes, where it is for the purpose of sending the products of American trade and industry into every section of the civilized world, I sincerely hope the gentleman will not urge his objection to the passage of this bill, which has been unanimously reported from the Committee on the Judiciary. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, so far as I know, there never has been but one special bill passed by Congress granting a charter which did not make the institution that it incorporated a corporation of the District of Columbia. There is one bill which passed many years ago which made the corporation which was thereby created a general corporation and granted a Federal charter to the same. This bill does not make this particular corporation proposed to be created by it a corporation of the District. It grants it a Federal charter. It will not be subject, if it be sustained, to any sort of State control. It can go into any State and do business without reference to State law or State regulation. The bill was either carefully drawn or else very loosely drawn.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, surely the gentleman will agree that this corporation could not do business for profit, because it is expressly stated in the terms of incorporation that it could not be for profit.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will pardon me, I am not referring particularly to that. It says it shall not do business for profit, but there is a vast legal question involved here in the creation of this corporation or any other corporation that is created by special act of Congress. It ought to have a legal situs. It ought to have a local citizenship somewhere. Frankly, I have always opposed the bills that made it a corporation of the District. I do not think they ought to pass by any special act of Congress. I think there should be a general law under which these institutions should incorporate, and I do not think there should be a special act passed creating a corporation, even in the District of Columbia. But this does not do that. This grants a Federal charter.

Mr. CLAYTON. Does not the gentleman think this is sufficient to meet his ideas, namely, in lines 6, 7, and 8, on page 2:

For these purposes, headquarters in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GARRETT. No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think so. That merely gives them a right to have an office here. You could do that with any corporation anywhere.

Mr. GRAHAM. Will the gentleman suggest such language as he thinks will cover it?

Mr. CLAYTON. It says:

Enjoy the right to establish and maintain headquarters in the District of Columbia.

And then add:

And that for all the purposes of this act the body corporate shall be held to be a body corporate of the District of Columbia.

Now, do you think if language to that effect were inserted it would meet the idea of the gentleman?

Mr. GARRETT. Of course the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] understands I am opposed to special acts in any instance.

Mr. CLAYTON. Of course I can not meet your fundamental objection, but I thought I could meet the objection that you raised as to the proper phraseology of this bill, by making it distinctly a corporation of the District of Columbia. I can meet your objection as to the situs or domicile of this corporation.

Mr. GARRETT. I will say to the gentleman that in line 2, on page 2, after the word "corporation," if there were inserted the words "of the District of Columbia," it would probably be a more felicitous expression than the expression there now. Still, I am opposed to the bill. I do not like to take the personal responsibility of killing a bill like this, however.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will accept the amendment proposed by the gentleman.

Mr. CLAYTON. It is for the purpose of extending our trade relations with foreign countries. It is in no sense for profit except by way of encouraging friendly intercourse, in disseminating useful and valuable information; and the right to amend, alter, or repeal the act or any part thereof is expressly reserved.

Under this act there could grow up no such thing as vested rights. It is in its nature somewhat of a social organization rather than a business corporation.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow a question there?

Mr. CLAYTON. If I may be permitted to do so, I will, with pleasure.

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Speaking of its being a social organization, does not the gentleman think it might be well to add that it shall have an annual meeting some time in January, in Washington?

Mr. CLAYTON. I did not catch the full purport of the gentleman's question.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman was speaking of its being to some extent a social organization, and——

Mr. CLAYTON. I said it was more of that nature than a business corporation.

Mr. CANNON. I think from that standpoint it would be well to provide that it shall hold an annual meeting in January, in Washington.

Mr. CLAYTON. I can assure the gentleman, although I am not a member of the organization, that I have no doubt that the officers of that organization, if it becomes an organization in law, will extend the gentleman an invitation to their meetings in January, and maybe in the springtime when the flowers bloom. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Then I am with the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAYTON. If I may.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I suggest that the gentleman also use the word "advisory." I was interested in this project at the beginning, and was glad to see it launched. It will tend to bring the business men of the country together. The Department of Commerce and Labor was created to foster, promote, and develop business and commerce, but up to this time that department has been run principally for administrative purposes; very little has been done for the promotion of the commercial interests throughout the country. That is true also with respect to the Panama Canal. It was hoped that the construction of the Panama Canal would give a great impetus to our business and commerce, but there has been no great promotion of business thus far as a consequence of the construction of the Panama Canal or in anticipation of its early completion. Why not pass this bill, so that the business men may cooperate with the officials of the Department of Commerce and Labor and Congress may also be advised occasionally of the progress that is made?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a little question that may help out? Is it the intention of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] to object to this bill? I would say to the gentleman that there are 25 bills yet remaining on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent that have not been reached, and the gentlemen interested in those bills are desirous that progress should be made. If it is the intention of the gentleman from Tennessee, after discussing this bill for a while, to object, I will shorten the agony now.

Mr. GARRETT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. MESSAGES OF INTERSTATE TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE COMPANIES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 3010) to fix the requirements for governing the receipt, transmission, delivery, and preservation of messages of interstate telegraph and telephone companies.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no person, firm, copartnership, association, or corporation engaged in the business of transmitting messages and communications by telegraph or telephone, or partly by telegraph and partly by telephone, or partly by telegraph, telephone, and some other device, when used under a common control, management, or arrangement for hire, shall send, transmit, or deliver any message or communication from one State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or from one place in a Territory to another place in the same Territory, or from one place in the District of Columbia to another place in the said District, or from any place in the United States to an adjacent foreign country, or from any place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States, without causing to appear plainly and accurately upon the addresser or sender's copy of every telegram and other message presented and accepted for such transmission the name of the place where such telegram or message originated, the month, day of the month, and the hour and minute of the day on which it was accepted for transmission, and there shall also appear plainly and accurately upon every copy of such telegram or message like notations.

(a) The entries and notations made upon any such telegram or message or copy of such telegram or message received and accepted for transmission, of the month, day of the month, and hour and minute of the day on which any such telegram or message is presented and accepted for transmission shall be made and written upon said telegram or message immediately, and upon the moment of its presentation and acceptance for transmission, and before said telegram or message is placed on file or otherwise used or disposed of for transmission, and said entries and notations upon any such telegram or message shall be made in ink and without extra charge to the sender.

SEC. 2. That very person, firm, copartnership, association, or corporation shall, at the office and place of destination of any such telegram or message, cause to appear plainly and accurately upon the addressee's copy of every such telegram or message, the name of the place where such telegram or message originated, the month, day of the month, and the hour and minute of the day on which it was accepted for transmission, and there shall also appear plainly and accurately upon every copy of such telegram or message the month, day of the month, and hour and minute of the day on which it was received for delivery.

SEC. 3. That every person, firm, copartnership, association, or corporation shall, at the office and place of destination of any such telegram or message, deliver the message to its addressee within one-half hour after its receipt, provided the addressee resides not more than 1 mile from the office of its receipt; and within one hour after its receipt if the addressee lives more than 1 mile, but not more than 2 miles from the office of its receipt.

SEC. 4. That any person found guilty of violating any of the provisions of this act shall be punished by imprisinment for a term not exceeding one year or by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Every violation of this act shall be prosecuted in any court of the United States having jurisdiction of crimes within the district in which such violation was committed, or through which the message or communcation may have been conducted; and whenever the offense is begun in one jurisdiction and completed in another it may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, determined, and punished in either jursdiction in the same manner as if the offense had been actually and wholly committed therein. In construing and enforcing the provisions of this act, the act, omission, or failure of any officer, agent, or other person acting for or employed by any person, firm, copartnership, association, or corporation, acting within the scope of his employment, shall in every case be also deemed to be the act, omission, or failure of such person, firm, copartnership, association, or corporation, as well as that of the officer, agent, or other person. No person, and no agent or officer of any firm, copartnership, association, or corporation within the purview of this act shall be privileged from testifying in relation to anything herein prohibited; and no person having so testified shall be liable to any prosecution or punishment for any offense concerning which he was required to give his testimony or produce any documentary evidence.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker, in order to give the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] another opportunity to "roast" me. [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I did not know that I would have the distinguished honor of having one more bill bumped off the Unanimous Consent Calendar to-day by the "Great Objector" from Illinois, and I want to thank the gentleman for the opportunity he has given me. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the "roast" that the gentleman is going to give me, but I did not know that the gentleman had reported this bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I did not report this bill, but I was chairman of the subcommittee that reported it to the full committee.

This bill simply provides that telegraph companies shall indicate on the original messages received by them from the senders and on the copies of the messages delivered to the recipients the names of the places in which the telegrams originated, and in each case the year and the month and the day and the hour and the minute at which the telegrams were accepted at the sending end and received at the receiving end of the line.

This proposition is provided by law and is conceded to work satisfactorily in two of the States of the Union, namely, Massachusetts and Maryland. In addition to that, I am told that this is the practice, and a satisfactory practice, in every country in Europe save one.

Now, every gentleman here knows that he has often received telegrams that are unduly delayed. Gentlemen within the hearing of my voice have received night lettergrams late in the afternoon. We have all received telegrams that were unduly delayed and as to which we would like to know the sending time and the time in which they were received at this end of the line. There is no hardship intended on the telegraph companies by this legislation.

Mr. SULZER. They put the date on the telegrams now.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes; they put on the date of receipt. Out here in the corridor, outside the Chamber, you will get telegrams with the receiving time on them, but you can not tell whether they were filed to-day or yesterday or the day before.

Mr. SULZER. They put on the time of filing, too.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. You do not get the filing time at the other end. When this legislation was up in a former Congress the companies claimed that it would cause them to send about six additional words, whereas expert and practical testimony now shows that they would not have to send the equivalent of one word in order to express the entire time at which the telegram was accepted at the sending end.

On this point the report reads as follows:

The purpose of the bill, as explained in the title, is to require telegraph companies to send with each message the exact time at which it was filed for transmission, thus enabling the person who receives it to know how long it had been in transit. When a bill of like character was under consideration by this committee in the Sixtieth Congress it was opposed by the officials of the Western Union Telegraph Co. on the ground that adding the filing time to each message would so increase the number of words as to entail a heavy pecuniary loss upon the company transmitting it. It was asserted, for example, that "10.45 a. m." would increase the number of words in the telegram by six, an assertion that the author of the bill showed to be manifestly absurd. "Ten forty-five a. m." represents, as every person connected with telegraphy understands, six units, or one unit more than is contained in the average printed word. On the other hand, "1 p. m." is only three units, or two units less than are contained in the average printed word.

As a matter of fact, it would never be necessary to send the letter "m," whenever "a. m." or "p. m." were used, for the simple reason that this letter could be printed in the proper place on the receiving blank, thus still further reducing the number of units. The contention, therefore, that sending the filing time would cause the telegraph companies a severe pecuniary loss is shown to be unfounded.

Mr. POST. If the sender of the telegram put on the exact day and hour, would not the telegraph company be required to put it on? Under those circumstances, is it not the fault of the sender that these dates are not put on?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I do not think the sender ought to be required to do that.

Mr. MANN. Under this bill, if I were down at the hotel and called a Western Union messenger boy and delivered a message to him and he failed to write on it, at the moment of its presentation to him, the hour and the minute correctly of receiving the message, would he be liable to a fine and imprisonment?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Would the messenger boy be liable?

Mr. MANN. Yes. I will answer the question for the gentleman and say that he would be, and that shows how absolutely ridiculous the bill is. Not only that, but if I had a telegram directed to me at my office and the telegraph company did not deliver it to me at my office in half an hour, although the office might be closed at midnight, the company would be liable to fine and imprisonment.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. No; I think the gentleman from Illinois is straining to find objections——

Mr. MANN. I am not straining at all.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado (continuing). Which would not arise in practical application at all.

Mr. MANN. That is exactly where it would arise. The gentleman ought to examine his bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It is not my bill——

Mr. MANN. The bill proposes to fine the messenger boy because his watch happens to be wrong or because he did not have one, and because there was nobody in the house to receive the message. I think it is the limit, and therefore I object.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I want to say to the gentleman that the bill is not my bill, but it is the bill of a practical telegrapher and Member of Congress, who thoroughly understands the subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

Under leave granted I insert the statements on this bill before the Interstate Commerce Committee of Mr. S. J. Konenkamp, president, and Mr. Herman J. Schulteis, organizer and general counsel, of the Commercial Telegraphers' Union:

STATEMENT OF MR. S. J. KONENKAMP, INTERNATIONAL PRESIDENT COMMERCIAL TELEGRAPHERS' UNION, CHICAGO, ILL.

Mr. KONENKAMP. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, we have advocated such a measure as this, believing it would be advantageous to the general public. There are no persons who are better acquainted with the abuses of the telegraph business than the telegraph operators. I presume they have had all the variety of experience that a person would have in connection wiith the telegraph business, and it is practically the unanimous opinion of all those who are connected with the business that the filing time would save a great many abuses, at least, and would probably give better service throughout.

We have gone into the matter to a considerable extent, and made inquiry of the different countries of Europe as to the customs there, and have found that this is the only nation in the world, so far as we have been able to learn, where the filing time is not carried in the message. In England they use a dial system whereby the objection raised by the telegraph companies is completely obviated, because with a very simple system they use letters for transmitting the filing time. The result is that the total number of letters used at any time does not exceed four.

In speaking of this particular phase of the transmission of messages the secretary of the Postal Clerks' Union in London made the remark that they had no distinction between a. m. and p. m. in England, because it is inconceivable that any message should be delayed in transmission over 12 hours. The Americans, in their experience with the telegraph, believe that it is conceivable that a message should be delayed more than 12 hours.

The CHAIRMAN. The victims find it out.

Mr. KONENKAMP. Undoubtedly. Therefore there could be no better recommendation for the filing time than the statement made by an Englishman, that where it is in use a delay of over 12 hours in a message is something that is inconceivable. If the filing time will bring about such a condition as that, or even if it would reduce the delay to less than 12 hours, I think it highly desirable to have it in this country.

Mr. JOHN A. MARTIN. I have received night lettergrams at 3 or 4 o'clock in the afternoon that I ought to have received in the morning.

Mr. KNOWLAND. How many extra men would this require?

Mr. KONENKAMP. None at all, I should say.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Your union takes the position that it would be for the good of the public?

Mr. KONENKAMP. They take the position that it is for the good of the public.

Mr. JOHN A. MARTIN. In what way would it benefit you?

Mr. KONENKAMP. In what way would it benefit us?

Mr. JOHN A. MARTIN. Yes.

Mr. KONENKAMP. Personally I can not say that it is beneficial to the telegraphers at all, although there are a number of our members who think so.

Mr. HAMLIN. You mean the telegraphers?

Mr. KONENKAMP. The telegraphers. I do not see where it would be of any benefit. Some think it would create a demand for more men, but I can not see it myself. Let us take, for instance, an operator handling three or four hundred messages a day. If he carried the filing time on every one of those, at four letters, and supposing that five letters would make a half a word, the aggregate on 400 different messages would not exceed 80 words in the total number of messages.

Mr. SIMS. How much additional time would that be?

Mr. KONENKAMP. Eighty words would take about three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Where are your headquarters?

Mr. KONENKAMP. Chicago.

The CHAIRMAN. How long are you going to be in the city here?

Mr. KONENKAMP. I am going away to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. I thought probably the committee would like to hear you on Mr. MARTIN'S bill, which is an amendment to the 13-hour law.

Mr. KONENKAMP. I am going away to-day. We only represent the commercial telegraphers, but I am a railroad telegrapher, and a number of them are in the union.

Mr. HAMLIN. You say that it would not take over three minutes additional time in the average day's work?

Mr. KONENKAMP. In the average day's work, for 80 words. I am not so good on quick calculations, but I figure it out this way: Three hundred messages, with an average of half a word to a message, would be 150 words, say. That would take seven to eight minutes, because the minimum requirement is about 20 words to a minute for a telegraph operator. However, a man sending at the rate of 400 messages in a day, without counting delay, the speed would be over 40 words a minute, or about that. Therefore the whole thing would not take over 10 minutes in a day. Therefore the advantage in that particular is so infinitesimal that I have not been able to see it.

There has been a law in Massachusetts for over two years compelling the companies to carry the filing time, and they carry it now within the State of Massachusetts, and they have the same law in Maryland, which has been on the statute books of Maryland for four years; but I have heard of no great influx of telegraph operators to either State.

Mr. SIMS. There has been no increase of operators?

Mr. KONENKAMP. No. So I can not see the benefit there. The companies say the cost would be great, but I think if they would put a traffic expert on the job they would be able to reduce it to even a lower minimum than I have spoken of.

Mr. HAMLIN. How are the men paid—on a monthly salary, or the amount of work they do each day? What is the basis of pay?

Mr. KONENKAMP. The wages of telegraph operators range—well, I know of some who receive $6 and $7 a week in New York City.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not have reference to the amount of money they receive; but what is the basis of pay?

Mr. KONENKAMP. They are all paid by the month or the week; every one of them.

Mr. HAMLIN. And any additional work would not be an increase in the salary?

Mr. KONENKAMP. The only people it would affect are the bonus men in the employ of the Postal Telegraph Co. The Western Union does not use the bonus system.

Mr. DOREMUS. What is the bonus system?

Mr. KONENKAMP. That is a system where the telegrapher is paid for 300 messages a day. That is the general average, and any message he handles over 300 he receives 1 cent a message additional.

Mr. SIMS. In addition to the regular salary?

Mr. KOKENKAMP. In addition to the regular salary.

Mr. JOHN A. MARTIN. If they only get a cent a message this increase of a word would not increase it.

Mr. KONENKAMP. It might reduce their earning power.

The CHAIRMAN. If you know who the owners of the telegraph companies are—the stockholders, and bondholders, and the subsidiary companies—I wish you would put it in your answers when you revise your testimony. It will be sent to you to revise.

Mr. KONENKAMP. All right. I can give you a general idea now.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to have a reliable statement covering the whole subject.

Mr. KONENKAMP. The Western Union Telegraph Co. is controlled by the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., which is the parent body of all Bell telephone companies in the United States and Canada.

The American Telephone & Telegraph Co. is described in a peptition addressed to Attorney General Wickersham and filed by Mr. George Lambert as a monopoly organized on the same general scheme as the Standard Oil and American Tobacco Trusts. In fact, those in charge of this property make no secret of their aim to obtain complete monopoly of the telegraph and telephone service, or as they term it, through one universal system.

Eight subsidiary companies are under its control, as follows:

The Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co., on the Pacific coast, operating through four States.

The Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph Co., with headquarters at Denver, operating in eight States.

The Central Union Telephone Co., in Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois.

The Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co., operating in six States.

The Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co., operating in seven States.

The New York Telephone Co., which controls through almost complete ownership the Bell telephone companies of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, and a portion of Virginia and West Virginia.

The New England Telephone & Telegraph Co., operating in five States.

The Western Telephone & Telegraph Co., operating in seven States, and understood to control, through a majority of stock, the Southwestern Telephone & Telegraph Co., operating in Texas and adjoining States, as well as the Pioneer Co. in Oklahoma.

These companies in turn own many other Bell companies. Through these corporations or through direct American Telephone & Telegraph control these interests own or control the following telegraph companies:

The Western Union Telegraph Co.

The Great Northwestern Telegraph Co. of Canada.

The Postal Telegraph Co. of Texas.

The Anglo-American Cable Co.

The United States Direct Cable Co. and others.

The cable situation is pretty thoroughly dominated by the control of these two companies, with the Western Union's own cables added.

It is the general belief in telegraph circles that the controlling interest in the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. changed in 1908, and that J. P. Morgan & Co., with their affiliated banking interests in Boston, are the present dominating influences in the telegraph and telephone field. The capitalization of the American Telephone & Telegraph and its subsidiaries is estimated as being larger than that of the United States Steel Corporation, or over $1,000,000,000.

The directors of the American Telegraph & Telephone Co. are Charles W. Amory, Thomas B. Bailey, George F. Baker, Francis Blake, Harry H. Brigham, Alexander Cochrane, T. Jefferson Coolidge, jr., W. Murray Crane, Henry P. Davison (director of both companies or is among the general officers of one and director of the other), Rudolph Ellis, Norman W. Harris, Henry L. Higginson, Henry S. Howe (director of both companies or is among the general officers of one and director of the other), Charles E. Hubbard, Lewis C. Ledyard, John J. Mitchell (director of both companies or is among the general officers of one and director of the other), William L. Putnam, S. L. Schoonmaker, E. V. R. Thayer, T. N. Vail (director of both companies or is among the general officers of one and director of the other), Frank E. Warner, John I. Waterbury (director of both companies or is among the general officers of one and director of the other), Moses Williams, and Robert Winsor (director of both companies or is among the general officers of one and director of the other).

The directors of the Western Union Telegraph Co. are Oliver Ames. U. N. Bethell (director of both companies or is among the general officers of one and director of the other), Henry A. Bishop, Robert C. Clowry, Henry P. Davison (director of both companies or is among the general officers of one and director of the other), Chauncey M. Depew, Harris C. Fahnestock, Henry M. Flagler, Robert M. Gallaway, Edwin Gould, George J. Gould, Edward J. Hall (director of both companies or is among the general officers of one and director of the other), Henry S. Howe (director of both companies or is among the general officers of one and director of the other), Thomas H. Hubbard, Edward T. Jeffery, Charles Lanier, Robert S. Lovett, John J. Mitchell (director of both companies or is among the general officers of one and director of the other), William M. Moore, J. Pierpont Morgan, Jacob H. Schiff, Joseph J. Slocum, James Stillman, Harry B. Thayer (director of both companies or is among the general officers of one and director of the other), T. N. Vail (director of both companies or is among the general officers of one and director of the other), Henry Walters, John I. Waterbury (director of both companies or is among the general officers of one and director of the other), John C. Willever, Robert Winsor (director of both companies or is among the general officers of one and director of the other).

The Postal Telegraph Co. does not appear to be a part of the telegraph-telephone combination. It is owned in its entirety by the Mackay companies, which also owns the Commercial Cable Co., the Mackay Telegraph & Telephone Co., the Texas Telegraph Co., and is supposed to control the North American Telegraph Co. A few years ago statements were given out by the Mackay companies to the effect that they were holders of stock in over 100 telegraph and telephone companies.

The Mack companies are not incorporated and are under the management of seven trustees, viz, Clarence H. Mackay, William W. Cook, George G. Ward, Edward C. Platt, M. W. Blackmar, of New York; R. A. Smith, of Toronto; and H. Vincent Meredith, of Montreal. A large amount of the stock is supposed to be held in Toronto and Montreal.

The Mackay companies have been making alliances with so-called independents in the telephone field wherever possible, but inasmuch as J. P. Morgan & Co. are believed to be an important factor in the independent field through control of certain companies in Ohio and Indiana and the American Telegraph & Telephone has also been making inroads on the independent properties of the Pacific coast, the Postal interests are said to be having a hard time in this fight.

The Western Union and Postal interests are fighting each other for business at all points, but they seem to be able to maintain a mutual understanding that union men are to be blacklisted by both companies.

STATEMENT OF MR. HERMAN J. SCHULTEIS, ORGANIZER AND GENERAL COUNSEL FOR THE COMMERCIAL TELEGRAPHERS' UNION.

Mr. SCHULTEIS. I want to add just this one thing, in reference to whether the companies would have to employ more men or not. Our national president, Mr. Konenkamp, said this filing-time bill probably would not increase the number of employees. Now, I believe it would effect a very slight increase in the large offices. Wherever they have a habit of hanging a great number of messages on the hook and allow them to stay there so one man can do the work instead of two, it would mean an increase by one or two men in a few of the larger offices in the great cities; but that ought to be done and the general public is entitled to have it done.

The CHAIRMAN. If all the work that ordinarily comes in during six hours should happen to come in during one hour, they would just let the messages lay over and one man would take the six hours, if necessary, to do it.

Mr. SCHULTEIS. That is the idea. This filing-time requirement would prevent to a large extent this habit of hanging the messages on a hook and letting them stay there a number of hours, so that one man can send the whole batch, instead of putting on an extra man in the offices of a few of the great cities. It would not mean, however, a one-hundredth part of the actual additional cost that has been stated at a former hearing.

As has been said, they frequently send messages by mail. They put a 2-cent stamp on them, when perhaps they have charged $1.75 for transmitting it by wire. They have no complaint coming. They never return the difference—$1.73—to the unsuspecting sender of the message.

Aside from that, I wish to say to this committee that the companies have increased their stock and watered it to eight times its actual physical value. I can produce an expert witness to testify before this committee that the stock of the Western Union has been increased to that extent. There is enough water in the telephone stocks to float a battleship.

The CHAIRMAN. When you revise your testimony, will you attach a statement covering that and also a statement covering all the stockholders and bondholders and the dominating companies?

Mr. SCHULTEIS. I will; and it will sift down to one man who, without owning a majority of the stock, yet controls the entire system—not only the telegraph, but the telephone—J. Pierpont Morgan. He has purchased $40,000,000 worth of telephone stock in the last six or eight months and he is now trying to get control of the wireless telegraph as well.

Mr. JOHN A. MARTIN. Is that the same Morgan who owns all the railroads, ships, banks, and things like that?

Mr. SCHULTEIS. There are very few things of value around loose that he does not have an interest in. His agents or dummies are members of the boards of directors of nearly all the great predatory trusts, including the United States Steel Corporation. I have had some experience in following up that matter during the last 10 years. I had the honor to open the hearings before the Committee on Rules, which brought about the Stanley Steel Trust investigation, and so far everything charged before that committee has been proven, and the reduction in the price of steel will save millions annually to the American people in consequence of that investigation.

I thank you very much, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, for this hearing. I will not detain you any longer, because this is such a just bill in the interest of the general public and it is such a modest request that it can not in reason be denied. It adds only one code word to each message to give the time when the message was filed. The public is entitled to it.

Since the hearings on the bill four years ago we have eliminated every objectionable feature, and if the companies come here and object to this bill we would be very glad to have another hearing. This bill is purely in the interests of the people of the United States, and it ought to be reported favorably, so as to come before the House and be acted upon during the present session.

In response to the suggestion of the chairman that I attach a statement covering the various stock-watering operations of the telegraph companies which happened during the absorption of the various independent companies benevolently assimilated by this great monopoly, I will ask that Prof. Parson's monograph on "The Telegraph Monopoly," which covers the whole subject matter, be printed as part of my remarks: also the last annual report of the directors of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. to the stockholders, which brings their plant additions down to January 1, 1912; with diagrams of the Western Union system and the Bell and Western Union system which are now under one control. The companies' own report gives tables showing comparative statements of earnings and expenses which are in themselves an unanswerable argument in favor of the passage of this bill, and point out the absolute necessity of the governmental inquiry into the physical valuation of telephones and telegraphs before proper regulation, rate making, Government ownership, or control can obtain. A complete list of directors and stock and bond holders can be found in Moody's and Poor's Manuals, respectively, so I need not incorporate them here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT SARTELL, MINN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 7209, an act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at the town site of Sartell, Minn.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the village of Sartell, in the county of Stearns and State of Minnesota, a municipal corporation organized under the laws of the State of Minnesota, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a wagon and foot bridge and approaches thereto, across the Mississippi River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at the town site of Sartell, Stearns County, Minn., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the words "wagon and foot."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COVINGTON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE CANO DE MARTIN PENA, P. R.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 26114) to authorize the people of Porto Rico to construct a bridge across the Cano de Martin Pena, an estuary of the harbor of San Juan, P. R.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the people of Porto Rico be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Cano de Martin Pena, an estuary of San Juan Bay, P. R., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, which I do not intend to do, I call attention to the fact that this bill has been reported from a committee which has no jurisdiction over it, namely, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Rule XI, paragraph 18, requires that all matters (excepting those affecting the revenue and appropriations) pertaining to the islands which came to the United States through the treaty with Spain, go to the Committee on Insular Affairs, but as this is a good bill, recommended by the Secretary of War, I shall not object to its passage, although it was referred to and reported from the wrong committee.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is not correct in stating that this bill belongs to the Committee on Insular Affairs. The gentleman can find plenty of places in the rules where there is an apparent conflict, but all matters relating to the island possessions do not go to the Committee on Insular Affairs; for instance, lighthouses in Porto Rico go to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has jurisdiction of all bridge bills on navigable streams, as it has over lighthouses.

Mr. OLMSTED. But that is begging the question as to lighthouses.

Mr. MANN. That has been the uniform practice ever since we have acquired Porto Rico.

Mr. COOPER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will permit me, I want to say that the committee got that jurisdiction. I never thought it ought to have it. The Committee on Insular Affairs, of course, ought to have charge of lighthouses in Porto Rico.

Mr. OLMSTED. It has it plainly under the language of the rule.

Mr. MANN. Under that language it may have it, but under the language relating to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce it does not have it.

Mr. COOPER. The language giving that jurisdiction to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is general. The language conferring the authority over all matters in Porto Rico is specific, because it mentions particular territory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question. Is Porto Rico a part of the United States or not?

Mr. COOPER. The island is specifically mentioned, and it is immaterial whether technically under the Constitution it is part of the United States. My own impression is that it is a part of the United States under the Constitution.

Mr. OLMSTED. The Democrat convention at Baltimore determined that it was not a part of the United States and excluded the delegates.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not wish to get into any discussion over that, but they excluded the delegates from the Philippine Islands on the ground that it was not a part of the United States.

Mr. OLMSTED. I may have read the report wrong, but I read it in the newspapers.

The SPEAKER. If Porto Rico is part of the United States, as I think it is, what is the reason that the general bridge bill does not apply to Porto Rico as well as to Wisconsin and Missouri?

Mr. COOPER. Because the general bridge bill does not mention Wisconsin by name, and it does not pick out any particular State, but gives it generally to the committee.

The SPEAKER. Does not general jurisdiction go wherever the flag flies?

Mr. COOPER. Where a statute mentions specifically a geographical territory as distinguished from the general conferring of jurisdiction, without mentioning any particular territory except in a general way, that is considered an exception where the two are construed together. The rule mentioned by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] gives jurisdiction over all matters relating to Porto Rico, and ought to include lighthouses, as it does other subjects, except appropriations.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama demands the regular order, which is the question, Is there objection to this bill being now considered? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 3, strike out the word "people" and insert the word "Government."

Same line, strike out the word "are" and insert the word "is."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Has the Clerk a copy of the bill with those amendments printed in it?

The SPEAKER. He has.

Mr. MANN. I have got tired of bills being sent in with different prints and with the amendments left out. The amendments the Clerk has read are not in the copy I have; and a dozen times lately the Clerk sometimes has the original copy and sometimes has the last copy. Gentlemen presenting bills ought to report them correctly, so they will be printed correctly, in order that Members of the House may know.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk has the bill with the amendments printed. Has the gentleman from Illinois the same bill?

Mr. MANN. Yes; without the amendments printed, reported to the House; and this is about the twelfth time I have had this occur lately.

Mr. OLMSTED. The copy I have has the amendments printed.

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I think that, manifestly, must be an error on the part of some one other than the clerk of the committee, because every copy of the bill that I have obtained has the amendment plainly printed upon it.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman a bill with a star at the bottom of it?

Mr. COVINGTON. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. That means there has been a reprint. I have the first copy, and I am entitled to have the bill as it is reported to the House.

The SPEAKER. If everybody else has it——

Mr. MANN. Everybody else was slower than I was in this case.

The SPEAKER. It seems the other way, that everybody else is faster. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; they got the second print.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read: "To authorize the Government of Porto Rico to construct a bridge across the Cano de Martin Pena, an estuary of the harbor of San Juan, P. R."

On motion of Mr. COVINGTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS CLEARWATER RIVER, LEWISTON, IDAHO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 7315) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Clearwater River at any point within the corporate limits of the city of Lewiston, Idaho.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of Lewiston, Idaho, or the State of Idaho, or the city of Lewiston in conjunction with the State of Idaho, or any subdivision of the State of Idaho, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Clearwater River at any point suitable to the interests of navigation within the corporate limits of the said city of Lewiston, in the county of Nez Perce, in the State of Idaho, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, first, I move to amend, in line 7, by striking out the word "any" and inserting the word "a."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out the word "any" at the end of the line and insert in lieu thereof the word "a."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the amended Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FRENCH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended to conform to the text of the bill.

There was no objection.

AUDITOR OF RAILROAD ACCOUNTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5556) to amend "An act to create an auditor of railroad accounts, and for other purposes," approved June 19, 1878, as amended by the acts of March 3, 1881, and March 3, 1903, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the duties devolved on the Secretary of the Interior by the act of Congress approved June 19, 1878 (20 Stat., 169), entitled "An act to create an auditor of railroad accounts, and for other purposes," as amended by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1887 (21 Stat., 409), entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes," as amended by the act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1119), entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes," be, and they hereby are, transferred to and devolved upon the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wrote to the Interstate Commerce Commission the other day and asked them if they did not already have the power which it was proposed to transfer to them by this bill and whether, instead of transferring the power from the Secretary of the Interior to the Interstate Commerce Commission, we ought not to repeal the act which conferred the power upon the Secretary of the Interior. I have not yet received the information, but the Interstate Commerce Commission now has the broadest kind of latitude in reference to railroad accounts. It can require any kind of an account. It does under the law receive an annual account and it can require a special account at any time. We admit that these accounts ought not to be submitted to the Secretary of the Interior, and what is the use of requiring the railroads to submit them to the Interstate Commerce Commission? We ought to repeal the act.

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the bill was introduced in the Senate, I think, by Senator CLAPP, of Minnesota, and, without pretending to be an expert on interstate-commerce law, my original impression was that that commission had all of the power necessary to gather the required information.

Mr. MANN. I readily understand the Secretary of the Interior did not desire these reports to be made to him, and thereupon he has sent a bill in to have the transfer made to the Interstate Commerce Commission. That commission already has the power and we ought to repeal the original act requiring them to make a report to the Interior Department.

Mr. COVINGTON. Undoubtedly the object of this legislation was to relieve the Secretary of the Interior of duty devolving upon his office and to transfer those duties to the Interstate Commerce Commission. I think there is a very grave question whether they have not at the present time all of the power necessary to carry it into effect.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the present difficulty is that it requires one set of reports to be made by all of the railroads, which are utterly useless. This bill would still require the reports to be made, but only change the person to whom they are made. There is no use of their being made at all—not that I care whether they are required to make them or not, but the Interstate Commerce Commission would be required to file them, and to keep a clerk to keep track of them, when it is entirely unnecessary.

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this bill be passed over without prejudice until the gentleman from Illinois and myself can get definitely from the Interstate Commerce Commission the information whether there is anything in this character of a report that it is desired to have transmitted to them which they do not now obtain under existing law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think I can offer an amendment which will remedy the matter. I suggest that we strike out of lines 3 and 4, on page 1, the words "the duties devolved on the Secretary of the Interior by," and strike out, on page 2, line 9, the words "they hereby are transferred to and devolved upon the Interstate Commerce Commission," and insert in lieu thereof "it is hereby repealed," so that it would read:

That the act of Congress approved June 19, 1878 (20 Stat., p. 169), entitled "An act to create an auditor of railroad accounts, and for other purposes," as amended by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1887 (21 Stat., p. 409), entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes," as amended by the act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., p. 1119), entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes," be, and it is hereby, repealed.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, my own inclination is to accept the amendment, because if the Senate is not satisfied to concur in it, the two bodies can go to conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out the words "the duties devolved upon the Secretary of the Interior by."

Page 2, lines 9 and 10, strike out the words "they hereby are transferred to and devolved upon the Interstate Commerce Commission," and insert in lieu thereof the words "it is hereby repealed."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the third reading of the amended Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CEMETERY TO FORT BIDWELL PEOPLE'S CHURCH ASSOCIATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25878) granting lands for a certain cemetery to the Fort Bidwell People's Church Association, of the town of Fort Bidwell, State of California, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer by patent to the Fort Bidwell People's Church Association (undenominational, and duly incorporated under the laws of the State of California), of the town of Fort Bidwell, Modoc County, in the State of California, the following-described tract of land in Modoc County, State of California, now a part of the Fort Bidwell Indian School Reservation, formerly the Fort Bidwell Military Reservation, and more particularly described as follows:

Commencing at the section corners common to sections 8, 9, 16, and 17, in township 46 north of range 16 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian; thence run west 2,428 feet to station No. 1 for a place of beginning; thence run south 76° and 29′ west, 712$\frac{1}{10}$ feet to station No. 2; thence run west 660 feet to station No. 3; thence run north, 76° and 29′ west, 712$\frac{1}{10}$ feet to station No. 4; thence run east 660 feet to station No. 1, the place of beginning; said described tract of land being located in the center of the north half of section 17, in township 46 north, range 16 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, and contains 10$\frac{5}{10}$ acres, on condition that said land be held and used in trust as and for a cemetery.

That said patent for said land shall be issued to the Fort Bidwell People's Church Association, in trust for said town of Fort Bidwell, until such time as said town shall be incorporated, and for the Ancient Free and Accepted Masonic lodge and Independent Order of Odd Fellows lodge of said town, and for the interment of soldiers and Indians, as said cemetery is now actually platted and has been used for over 35 years for the purposes specified in this act.

That a right of way 60 feet wide is hereby granted over said Fort Bidwell Indian School Reservation from the nearest public highway from the said town of Fort Bidwell to said cemetery plat.

That the Fort Bidwell People's Church Association is hereby authorized and empowered to fully carry out the provisions of the trust hereby created by said patent by proper conveyances.

That said right of way shall be fenced on both sides with a good and substantial fence, and said cemetery plat shall be inclosed with a like fence, and all thereafter be maintained and cared for by the trustees and beneficiaries named in this act, without any expense whatever to the United States.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, this bill is on the Union Calendar. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, strike out all after the word "California" in line 8, and lines 1 to 19, inclusive, and the first two words in line 20, page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "a tract of land in Modoc County, in the State of California, now a part of the Fort Bidwell Indian School Reservation (formerly the Fort Bidwell Military Reservation), lying in the north half of section 17, township 46 north, of range 16 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, said tract not to exceed 10$\frac{5}{10}$ acres in extent, and to be further and particularly described by the Secretary of the Interior after a survey thereof has been made; said 10$\frac{5}{10}$ acres to cover and include the sites of the present military, Indian, and civilian cemeteries and the proposed extensions for Indian, civilian, and lodge purposes, on condition that said land shall be held in trust and used as and for a cemetery: Provided, That Indians having rights on said reservation shall have the right of interment in said cemetery without charge on the ground used for that purpose."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 23, insert after the word "plat" the words "the location thereof to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, lines 7 and 8, after the word "fence," insert the words "without any cost or expense therefor to the Government," and in line 9, after the word "for," insert the words "in a neat and orderly condition."

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, page 3, lines 13 and 14, by striking out the words "until such time as said town shall be incorporated."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 13, after the word "Bidwell," strike out the words "until such time as said town shall be incorporated."

Mr. MANN. I call the attention of the author of the bill to the fact that the bill as it stands conveys patent to this land to the Fort Bidwell People's Church Association in trust for said town of Fort Bidwell only until the town is incorporated, and so forth.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I accept the amendment. I think it is advisable and wise.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a petition of the citizens of Bidwell, which is part of the report, showing their promises in reference to this matter, so there can be no question hereafter about it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. For and during a period of about 35 years the tract of land covered by the bill was part of the Fort Bidwell Military Reservation. The entire reservation contains 3,078.19 acres and was set apart by Executive order on October 19, 1866, for military purposes. This reservation was entered and connected with the public surveys on October 4, 1870. Thereafter a wood reservation of 640 acres in connection with the military reservation was established on February 7, 1871.

The military reservation was relinquished by the War Department on October 2, 1890, and came under jurisdiction of the Interior Department under the act of July 5, 1884 (23 Stat. L., 103).

The lands were not sold as provided in the act, but by joint resolution of Congress of January 30, 1897 (29 Stat. L., 698), the whole reserve was set apart for Indian school purposes and the Fort Bidwell Indian School was established and is still conducted in the old military building on this tract. The lands are not subject to allotment under any law or treaty. The tract of land described in the bill contains 10.5 acres, and the greater part of it has been used as a cemetery by the people of the community in and about Fort Bidwell as well as for the interment of veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic, wards of the Government, and others, all of which has been with the knowledge and consent of the United States Government authorities.

The town of Fort Bidwell and the surrounding community realize the expediency of erecting a permanent arrangement for a burial ground and guarantee to keep and maintain the cemetery at the expense of the community and without any cost to the Government. The right of way leading from the main road to the cemetery is to be located, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and fenced at the cost and expense of the trustees and beneficiaries and without any expense to the Government. Thereafter the cemetery and plat are to be kept and maintained by the respective associations and the Government will be at no expense.

The bill reserves the right of the Government to inter such remains thereon and therein as it may see fit and proper, as well as providing for the interment of Indians, as the plat has been heretofore used for the time specified by the citizens of the community, the two lodges named, the Government, for the interment of soldiers and its wards, the Indians; and it will be thus maintained and used in the future.

The committee approves the objects and purposes for which this land is asked to be set apart, and therefore unanimously recommends the passage of the bill. The bill was submitted to the Department of the Interior, and the Hon. Samuel Adams, First Assistant Secretary, made favorable report thereon.

The following is the petition presented to the committee and to Congress by the citizens of Fort Bidwell, which shows the objects and purposes to which said cemetery plat has been put for over 35 years and the use to which it will be put in the future. That petition is as follows:

To the Congress of the United States in session assembled, and to the Department of the Interior of the United States, greeting:

We, the undersigned citizens of the unincorporated town of Fort Bidwell, county of Modoc, State of California, respectfully petition your honorable bodies in the manner following and upon the facts hereinafter set forth, believing that due consideration and proper action will be accorded thereunto.

For and during a period of about 35 years a certain tract upon the United States Indian School Reservation adjacent to Fort Bidwell has been used as a cemetery by the people of this community, as well as for the interment of veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic, wards of the Government, and others, all of which has been with the knowledge and consent of the United States Government authorities.

This community realizes the expediency of effecting a permanent arrangement for a burial ground, and in view of the fact that the tract above referred to has been permitted for such use, it does not appear advisable, for either sentimental or practical reasons, to secure other location.

There is no Grand Army of the Republic post, cemetery association, or other organization in this community able to undertake the financial or legal burdens incident to securing or conducting other burial premises than those now in use as such.

There is but one religious organization here, the People's Church, undenominational and duly incorporated, having a board of trustees and legally competent to execute a trust should such be conferred thereon.

Therefore we respectfully petition that the United States Government, through its National Congress and with the consent of the Department of the Interior, grant and transfer to the trustees of the said

People's Church, in trust for the town of Fort Bidwell, until such time as the said town shall be incorporated, that certain tract of 10½ acres in the said Indian school reservation, as is more fully described and set forth in the surveyed plat attached hereto, the same including that portion of said reservation which has been used hitherto for purposes of interment; conceding at all times the right of the United States Government to inter such remains thereon and therein as it may see fit and proper.

In consideration of the fact that this petition does not contemplate any enterprise for profit other than the general benefit and advantage which may accrue to the community as a whole by the granting thereof, it is desired that said grant be not conditioned upon the payment of any sum of money therefor to the United States Government.

Attached hereto are the signatures of practically all the representative citizens of Fort Bidwell, as well as the approval and recommendation of the official now in charge of said Indian school reservation, all of which are appended in good faith and without financial or selfish interest whatsoever.

There was a map presented to the Committee on Public Lands showing the location of the cemetery, and to that map was attached two affidavits which show the land desired and the objects and purposes thereof. Those two affidavits are as follows:

Map of the proposed cemetery grounds of the Fort Bidwell People's Church Association, Fort Bidwell Indian School (military) Reservation, section 17, township 46 north, range 16 east, Mount Diablo base and meridan, Fort Bidwell, Modoc County, Cal.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Modoc, ss:

R. A. BAKER, Notary Public.

I, R. F. McConnaughy, do hereby certify that I am president of the Fort Bidwell People's Church Association; that Charles Kirby Fox, who subscribed the accompanying affidavit, is the engineer who was employed to make the survey by the said association; that the survey of said grounds, as accurately represented on this map, was made under authority of the association; that the association is duly authorized by its articles of incorporation to maintain the said grounds upon the location shown on this map; that the said grounds, as represented on this map, was adopted by the association, by resolution of its board of directors, on the 10th day of July, 1912, as the definite location of said grounds, described as follows: Located in the center of the north half section 17, township 46 north, range 16 east, Mount Diablo meridian, being a total area of grounds of 10.5 acres.

I certify that the grounds herein described are desired for the main purpose of cemetery uses; that we will keep the said grounds well fenced and in a neat and orderly manner; that we will maintain the soldiers' graves in a neat condition; that we will set aside the southern portion of the grounds for an Indian cemetery, and in lieu of a cash payment from them will allow the Indians to work out the fees, subject to the task approval of the superintendent of the local agency; that this map has been prepared to be filed for the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and Congress in order that our association may obtain a patent for our present Free and Accepted Masons, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, military, civilian, and Indian cemetery grounds and the proposed extensions thereto.

R. F. MCCONNAUGHY,
President of the Fort Bidwell People's Church Association.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill H. R. 25832.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was H. J. Res. 325, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SULZER. Let us hear what it is.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of any amendment to the Constitution of the United States under circumstances like this—by the Unanimous Consent Calendar. I object.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, may I have the indulgence of the House for a moment? Several Members have asked me what this resolution is.

Mr. COOPER. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I am anxious to finish up this day's session and the session of this Congress, and I want business transacted as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. CLAYTON. This amendment simply relates to the limitation of the President's eligibility to one term of six years.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects to the unanimous consent for the gentleman to make an explanation. The Clerk will call the next bill.

RIGHT OF WAY ACROSS PORT DISCOVERY BAY, WASH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5808) granting a right of way across Port Discovery Bay United States Military Reservation to the Seattle, Port Angeles & Lake Cresent Railway, of the State of Washington.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. It is too early for that motion. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Seattle, Port Angeles & Lake Crescent Railway, of the State of Washington, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Washington, its successors and assigns, be, and the same is hereby, empowered to survey, locate, and maintain a railway, telegraph, and telephone line through the Port Discovery Bay United States Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, across section 1, township 29 north, range 2 west of the Willamette meridian, and across sections 35 and 36, township 30 north, range 2 west of the Willamette meridian.

SEC. 2. That said corporation is authorized to take and use, for all purposes of a railway, telegraph, and telephone line, and for no other purposes, a right of way, not to exceed 100 feet in width, through said Port Discovery Military Reservation, as aforesaid, and a right to use other additional ground, when cuts and fills may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of said roadbed, or for the location of station houses, not exceeding 50 feet in width on each side of said right of way, or as much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill, or necessary for such station houses: Provided, That no part of the lands herein authorized to be taken shall be used except in such manner and for such purposes as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation, including any necessary station houses, of said railway, telegraph, and telephone lines, and the use and enjoyment of the rights and privileges herein granted; and when any portion thereof shall cease to be so used such portion shall revert to the United States, from which same shall be taken: Provided further, That the Seattle, Port Angeles & Lake Crescent Railway, of the State of Washington, will fence its right of way and will provide and maintain necessary and suitable crossings, the construction of the fences and crossings to be in accordance with such requirements as may be made by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That any corporation having a franchise for a railway, telegraph, or telephone line in the vicinity of the proposed line of said railway may, upon securing a license from the Secretary of War, use the track and other construction herein authorized to be placed upon the reservation upon the payment of just compensation; and if the parties concerned can not agree upon the amount of such compensation, the sum or sums to be paid for said use shall be fixed by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That said corporation shall pay to the United States such annual compensation for the use of the land hereby granted as may be determined by the Secretary of War to be just and reasonable: Provided further, That the United States reserves the right to occupy the land covered by this grant, or any portion thereof, whenever, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, such occupation may be necessary for military purposes: Provided further, That the right of way and other privileges granted by this act shall be subject to the regulation and control of the Secretary of War, and shall be inoperative, null, and void unless the said railway company shall complete the construction of and have in use its tracks within three years from the date of the passage of this act: And provided further, That the said Seattle, Port Angeles & Lake Crescent Railway, of the State of Washington, shall comply with such other regulations or conditions as may from time to time be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 3. That the location and width of the right of way and of the additional areas granted shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War prior to the commencement of work under the grant hereby made.

SEC. 4. That the Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "survey," insert the word "and"; after the word "locate," strike out the words "and maintain." Page 2, line 3, after the word "meridian," insert the words "and is hereby granted a revocable license to maintain the same, said license to remain in force during the pleasure of Congress." Page 2, line 6, after the word "is," strike out the word "authorized" and insert the word "licensed." Page 2, line 8, after the word "way," strike out the words "not to exceed 100 feet in width." Page 2, line 17, after the word "houses," strike out the words "not exceeding 50 feet in width on each side of said right of way, or as much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill, or necessary for such station houses," and insert "Provided, That such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War may from time to time prescribe." Page 2, line 18, after the word "taken," insert the words "under said license." Page 4, line 12, strike out the word "grant" and insert the word "license"; strike out the word "made" and insert the word "granted."

Mr. DIFENDERFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from California——

The SPEAKER. It is too late to reserve the right to object. Unanimous consent has been just given to consider the bill and also to consider it in the House. The gentleman can offer an amendment if he wants to.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, this bill has the approval of the War Department. It is so amended as to follow the form that bills of this character should take hereafter, in the opinion of the Committee on Military Affairs. The rights of the Government are thoroughly protected by this bill. It grants a revocable license instead of a grant in fee simple. The company is made to pay a certain rental for the use of the land over which it is to pass. The report of the Committee on Military Affairs is unanimous in favor of this bill.

Mr. DIFENDERFER. I would like to ask the gentleman, is it not a fact this is a private matter—a private bill?

Mr. KAHN. The bill itself?

Mr. DIFENDERFER. Yes, sir.

Mr. KAHN. Well, no; not altogether; bills of this kind have always been placed on the Union Calendar. They have always been regarded as public bills. Of course it is a private corporation that is constructing this line, but the Secretary of War stated in a letter which he sent to the Senate committee that it was desirable to have the line go across the reservation, because it would enable a great many people who live thereabout to have railroad communication with the town.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield just a moment?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. This railroad is located in the district of my colleague [Mr. WARBURTON], who has been called home on account of important business. But I want to say to the House that this railroad goes into a section that is called the Olympic Peninsula, on the west side of Puget Sound, where they are greatly in need of railways. I will state to the committee the bill is of very great merit, and it ought to be passed at once.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Chair will put the amendments en bloc.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KAHN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENTRIES ON OIL AND GAS LANDS.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to recur to page 42, Calendar No. 399.

Mr. OLMSTED. If the gentleman will wait until we get past the next bill——

Mr. COVINGTON. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if he would be satisfied until he gets to the end of the calendar?

Mr. HOWELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I think this bill will take but a moment.

Mr. HOWELL. It will take but a minute.

Mr. OLMSTED. Take it up after the next bill.

Mr. MANN. Who objects?

Mr. OLMSTED. I object until the next bill is passed.

Mr. MANN. They will not take it up, because I am going to object to that anyway.

Mr. OLMSTED. So am I.

NORTH RIVER BRIDGE CO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4978) entitled "An act to supplement and amend the act entitled 'An act to incorporate the North River Bridge Co. and to authorize the construction of a bridge and approaches at New York City across the Hudson River, to regulate commerce in and over such bridge between the States of New York and New Jersey, and to establish such bridge a military and post road,' approved July 11, 1890."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FERRIS). Is there objection?

Mr. OLMSTED. I object.

Mr. ADAMSON. I would like the gentleman to withhold until I can make a statement.

Mr. OLMSTED. This simply revives an act of 22 years ago, and it has been revived from time to time. Nothing has ever been done, and it ought not to pass under unanimous consent.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the gentlemen interested in it here to explain. I do not think we ought to take advantage of their absence.

Mr. MANN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGEL] is absent, that we pass the bill without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. I object. The bill can be put on the calendar later if they desire.

BRIDGE ACROSS HUDSON RIVER, NEW YORK CITY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 5659, entitled "An act to supplement and amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the New York and New Jersey Bridge Cos. to construct and maintain a bridge across the Hudson River between New York City and the State of New Jersey,' approved June 7, 1894."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill be passed without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman asks unanimous consent that it be passed on account of the absence of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL], or any other gentleman, I will not object.

Mr. ADAMSON. I made that request, because both he and his colleague [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] were on the subcommittee.

Mr. MANN. I did not understand the statement of the gentleman at all.

Mr. ADAMSON. I made the same request in regard to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

Mr. MANN. I notice the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] is here. I do not see any other New York man here. It is a large, and a very able, delegation in Congress.

Mr. SULZER. Unlike some other gentlemen, "the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER]" is not always undertaking to be wiser than some one else and dictating to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The other two gentlemen are on that committee. To them was delegated the duty of studying out these two bridges, and the gentleman is allowing them to answer for their work.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, AITKIN COUNTY, MINN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 26099) authorizing the towns of Ball Bluff, Libby, and Cornish, in the county of Aitkin, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in Aitkin County, Minn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the title.

The title was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the towns of Ball Bluff, Libby, and Cornish, municipal corporations organized and existing under and pursuant to the laws of the State of Minnesota, to build a bridge across the Mississippi River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, from a point on the easterly bank of said river near the town line, between townships 51 and 52 north, to a point on the westerly bank of said river near the said town line, between townships 51 and 52 north, range 23 west, of the fourth principal meridian, all in the county of Aitkin, State of Minnesota, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FERRIS). The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 6, by striking out the words "public highway."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend line 6 by striking out the word "build" and inserting in place thereof the words "construct, maintain, and operate," and also inserting after the word "bridge," in the same line, the words "and approaches thereto."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, an order for that change was made, and the omission of it was a clerical error. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 6, by striking out the word "build" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "construct, maintain, and operate," and in the same line, after the word "bridge," inserting the words "and approaches thereto."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MILLER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

FIRST MONDAY IN SEPTEMBER A LEGAL HOLIDAY.

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Speaker, this next bill is put on as Senate bill 7649 and is referred to as being No. 374 on the Union Calendar. Now, Union Calendar No. 374 is the bill H. R. 25937, entitled "A bill making the first Monday in September a legal holiday."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is an error in printing the calendar. The Clerk has it corrected. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Is that on the Unanimous Consent Calendar?

Mr. McCOY. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there is an error in printing here. The bill H. R. 25937 is No. 374 on the Union Calendar, and that is the number given here on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, but the title is not given correctly.

Mr. MANN. I do not follow the gentleman. What number is being called on the Unanimous Consent Calendar now?

Mr. McCOY. The bill H. R. 25936.

Mr. MANN. What number of the Unanimous Consent Calendar?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that that bill is not on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, but in lieu of that the printer, by mistake, has printed Senate bill 4679. That is also lower down on the calendar.

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the bill intended to be called up is the bill from the Union Calendar, No. 374. The bill H. R. 25937 is the bill I would like to have called up now and is bill No. 374 on the Union Calendar. The bill referred to at this place by title appears in its proper place on page 43 of the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman desire to wait until it is reached there?

Mr. McCOY. I wish now to call up bill No. 374 on the Union Calendar. There has been a mistake in the printing.

Mr. MANN. Here is the situation, Mr. Speaker: One bill is put on the calendar twice. I do not see what warrant that is for calling up another bill that is not on the calendar at all.

Mr. McCOY. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that if that were so without any question in the world I would not ask to call it up, but the gentleman will observe, on page 43 of the Unanimous Consent Calendar, where we now are, that the bill is referred to as No. 374 on the Union Calendar, and I want to call up the bill so numbered. There is a mix-up on it in that the number is correctly stated but the title of a different bill given, which appears a second time later on.

Mr. MANN. Nobody pays any attention to that part of it. If that were the only mistake that we have in the Unanimous Consent Calendar we would get along comfortably.

Mr. McCOY. I ask the gentleman, in view of that evident mistake in printing a title here, if I can not get unanimous consent to call up a bill, the correct number of which is here printed and which nobody is likely to object to?

Mr. MANN. I should object if the bill were on the calendar, Mr. Speaker, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. McCOY. Then that settles the whole proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the request the gentleman would like to prefer?

Mr. McCOY. I should like to have the bill H. R. 25937 considered at this place.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McCOY] asks that the bill H. R. 25937, which appears on the Union Calendar, and which appears on the Unanimous Consent Calendar with the correct number but under another title, shall be considered as if it were on the Unanimous Consent Calendar at this point. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I think I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

LIFE-SAVING STATIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 26005) to provide for the establishment of one life-saving station on the larger of the two Libby Islands, situated at the entrance to Machias Bay, Me.; one life-saving station at Half Moon Bay, south of Point Montara and near Montara Reef, Cal.; one life-saving station at Mackinac Island, Mich.; and one life-saving station at or near Sea Gate, New York Harbor, N. Y.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish additional life-saving stations on the sea and lake coasts of the United States, as follows, viz: One on the larger of the two Libby Islands, situated at the entrance to Machias Bay, in the State of Maine; one at Half Moon Bay, south of Point Montara and near Montara Reef, in the State of California; one at Mackinac Island, in the State of Michigan; and one at or near Sea Gate, New York Harbor, N. Y., at such points as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read the committee amendments, as follows:

Insert as a new section at the end of the bill, page 2, the following: "That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to provide increased quarantine facilities at the port of Portland, Me., to cost not exceeding $43,880."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, to meet any possible criticism of this amendment, I want to say that I offer it at the request of a sick Member, who has been connected with this House for a long time [Mr. ASHER C. HINDS]. It has the indorsement of the other Members of the Maine delegation. The Senators concur in the request, and the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied that the authorization is urgent and necessary. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FERRIS). The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, in these days, when so much is being said about "bosses," I desire to insert in the RECORD Mr. Woodrow Wilson's views on the party machine, the bosses, and the incapacity of the masses to exercise political power:

MR. WOODROW WILSON'S VIEWS ON THE PARTY MACHINE, THE BOSSES, AND THE INCAPACITY OF THE MASSES TO EXERCISE POLITICAL POWER.

[From his chapter on "Party government," in Constitutional Government in the United States.]

They—the political parties—are absolutely necessary.

There are * * * so many officers to be elected that even the preparation of lists of candidates is too complicated and laborious a business to be undertaken by men busy about other things. Some one must make a profession of attending to it.

There must therefore be an exterior organization, voluntarily formed and independent of the law, whose object it shall be to bind them—the various officials—together in some sort of harmony and cooperation. That exterior organization is the political party. The hierarchy of its officers must supply the place of a hierarchy of legally constituted officials.

Whatever their faults and abuses, party machines are absolutely necessary under our existing electoral arrangements, and are necessary chiefly for keeping the several segments of parties together.

No party manager can keep his lieutenants to their business who has not control of party nominations.

It may be laid down as a political maxim that whatever assigns to the people a power which they are naturally incapable of wielding takes it away from them. They have under our Constitution and statutes been assigned the power of filling innumerable offices; they are incapable of wielding that power, because they have neither the time nor the necessary means of cooperative action; the power has therefore been taken away from them, not by law, but by circumstances, and handed over to those who have the time and the inclination to supply the necessary organization.

They (the officials of government) must * * * obey an outside master.

We have made it necessary that we should have "bosses" and that they and their lieutenants should assign offices by appointment.

It is an odd operation of the Whig system that it should make such party organizations at once necessary and disreputable, and I should say that in view of the legal arrangements which we have deliberately made, the disrepute in which professional politicians are held is in spirit highly unconstitutional.

(Mr. Wilson throughout his writings alludes to the Constitution of the United States as the "Whig system of government." He disapproves the Constitution and says, "No government can be successfully conducted on so mechanical a theory.")

The discipline and zest of parties has held us together and made it possible for us to form and to carry out national programs.

Have we had enough of the literal translation of Whig theory into practice, into constitutions?

We must decrease the number and complexity of the things the voter is called upon to do; concentrate his attention upon a few men whom he can make responsible, a few objects upon which he can easily center his purpose.

BRIDGE OVER LITTLE CALUMET RIVER, CHICAGO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 26235) to authorize the city of Chicago to construct a bridge across the Little Calumet River, at Indiana Avenue, said city.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of Chicago, in the county of Cook and State of Illinois, a municipal corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Little Calumet River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at Indiana Avenue, in sections 33 and 34, township 37 north, range 14 east, in the county of Cook and State of Illinois, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACKMON. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask if there is any expense to the Government attached to this matter by building this bridge?

Mr. MANN. There will be no expense attached to the Government.

Mr. BLACKMON. I would like to ask the purpose of the citizens of Chicago, if they expect to get any benefit from it?

Mr. MANN. The bill was introduced by me at the request of the Democratic administration of the city of Chicago to permit the administration to reconstruct a bridge over the Little Calumet River at Indiana Avenue.

Mr. BLACKMON. I shall not object. I merely wanted to know if there was any ulterior motive.

Mr. ADAMSON. I suppose that the gentleman from Alabama thought that the Republicans there might need something to bridge over their troubles. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I do not know but that they will.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF INDIAN PRISONERS AT FORT SILL, OKLA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16651) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant freedom to certain of the Apache prisoners of war now being held at Fort Sill, Okla., and giving them equal status with other restricted Indians, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to grant freedom and free release to such individual members of the Apache prisoners of war on the Fort Sill Military Reservation, in Oklahoma, as may desire to return to the Apache Mescalero Indian Reservation in New Mexico, and to convert their proportionate part of such tribal moneys and property into money as soon as may be practicable, the same to be covered into the Treasury of the United States as the Fort Sill Apache prisoner of war fund, until such time as it may be feasible to reinvest it for their use and benefit.

SEC. 2. That immediately upon the payment into the Treasury of the United States of such funds and the granting to said Indians their full release and freedom by the War Department, the Interior Department shall at once acquire full jurisdiction over said Indians, the Indian funds, and all property, and the status of said Indians so freed shall be that of all other restricted Indians.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to remove such of the Apache Indian Tribe as desire to return to their tribesmen in the Mescalero Apache Indian Reservation in New Mexico, and there establish them, as nearly as may be, on equal terms and on equal footing with the other Mescalero Apaches: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall have full power to reinvest the moneys of such Apache tribesmen so removed in property similar to the property owned by them at Fort Sill as nearly as may be deemed practicable and feasible.

SEC. 4. That for such of the Apaches as do not desire to return to the Mescalero Apaches they may remain on the Fort Sill Military Reservation under such rules and regulations as the War Department may prescribe.

SEC. 5. That there is hereby appropriated, and made immediately available, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise provided for, a sum of money, not exceeding $100,000, sufficient to carry out the provisions of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute Calendar No. 422, which is a Senate bill on the same subject (S. 6776) and almost identical, and pending the gentleman's reservation of an objection, I want to make a statement.

Mr. MANN. On what calendar is the Senate bill?

Mr. FERRIS. It is 422 on the Calender for Unanimous Consent.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think we are doing pretty well by these Indians without authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to purchase homesteads for them out of the General Treasury?

Mr. FERRIS. If I may, I will detain the House only a few moments; but this is such an important matter, and I know the facts so intimately that I think I can state them tersely and hurriedly, so that it will not detain the House but a moment.

In 1886 these Indians were captured and arrested in Arizona and New Mexico and taken as prisoners of war to Florida and kept there a few years, then they were taken to Alabama and kept there a few years, and then in 1894 they were placed in the hands of the military authorities at Fort Sill, Okla. They have been prisoners of war 26 years. There are only 30 out of the 267 original prisoners now alive, thereby making it apparent that nearly all of them have been born and reared in captivity. The War Department has recommended my bill and is very anxious to have something done with them. The officer, Maj. Goode, who has them in charge and the minister who preaches to them called on me and told me the conditions were such that they had been kept prisoners so long they were intermarrying.

It is, I am informed, a fact that brothers are marrying sisters and inbreeding, and it was a pitiable condition of affairs. He said the time had come and while it would cost money to give them allotments, still it ought to be done and done quickly. For 15 years they have been trying to make some solution of this matter, and this is the solution of the Indian Affairs Committee of the House and in the Senate. It has passed the Senate and the bill is here on the calendar. I hope the House will let us consider this bill and amend it by striking out everything after the enacting clause and putting in the bill this language which is recommended by the Treasury Department in their estimate. It only amounts to four or five lines, and it will put the whole matter in conference, so that these people can be freed, the bill made satisfactory to all concerned, and finally dispose of this vexatious question. The following is the language I would like to put in the bill so that the conferees may straighten it out:

For the relief and settlement of the Apache Indians now confined as prisoners of war at Fort Sill Military Reservation, on lands to be selected by them, the sum of $250,000 to be expended under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

This is the language of the departmental estimate for the Indian appropriation bill of this year. My bill bears the favorable indorsement of all the departments, but I want it to be satisfactory to the New Mexico people also.

Mr. MANN. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. FERRIS. I think it ought to be cut to $200,000, because the bill agreed on by both committees was $200,000, although the departmental estimate is $250,000, as the item just read discloses.

Mr. MANN. The bill introduced was $150,000, I believe, but the committee reported it in and made it $100,000.

Mr. FERRIS. There are two $100,000 items. There is one for $100,000 and there was one for $150,000 in the Senate bill, but the committee struck out $50,000, thereby making the Senate bill carry the same sum as the House bill. This matter should not wait longer.

Mr. MANN. Where is the other item in the Senate bill?

Mr. FERRIS. Section 5.

Mr. MANN. That is $150,000.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will read above, he will find that there is another $100,000 there.

Mr. MANN. Yes. Let us see what the situation is. We have men in confinement all over the United States in national penitentiaries, in State penitentiaries, and in local prisons of various sorts. We imprisoned these Indians for outrages which deserved imprisonment and have kept them for a considerable length of time. Gentlemen now desire to turn them loose and buy each one a farm and pay for it out of the Federal Treasury. Are we to do the same thing for every one who commits an offense in the United States and who manages to get into jail? When he gets out is it the intention to buy him a farm?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman aware that only 30 of those Indians who were guilty of these things are now alive, and that these young men, women, and children have been born since?

Mr. MANN. Let them get out and earn their living?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And the gentleman will punish the children for the sins of the fathers?

Mr. MANN. Not at all. Is it punishment to a man to be turned out of confinement? Is that what I understand the gentleman's position to be? If we let them go free, we have to pay them for the privilege? I am willing to give them a chance to go to the other place, where the other Indians are, but the gentleman says that most of them want to go there.

Mr. COVINGTON. What "other place" does the gentleman mean?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I am not speaking about the Great Beyond. I am speaking about sending them into Arizona, I believe, which is next to the "other place." I can see no reason why when we turn men out of confinement we should pay them to get out of confinement.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I have an answer to the gentleman's query and to his statement, which I think will satisfy even the gentleman himself. Those people were arrested 26 years ago, and only 30 of them are now living who were then alive when these atrocities were committed. There are 257 of them. Does the gentleman want to take a defenseless people, born in confinement, and apply the same rule to them that he would to a criminal? I think it the patent duty of Congress to first release these Indians; and, second, it is our duty to start them out with a little piece of land as other Indians have. These women and children are not responsible for the sins of their ancestors. Their unfortunate condition should excite pity rather than wrath. The Interior Department is for my bill and has so reported in strongest terms. The War Department is for my bill and has so reported in strong terms. The Indians, the Indian Office, the officer in charge, the Indian-rights people, and everyone who knows the facts realizes that this problem must be met. It ought to be met now—it is almost a disgrace to let it go over another year.

Mr. MANN. These people have been in confinement, but they have been on a military reservation, supported at the expense of the Government for 26 years—not in real confinement. The gentleman says they are worthless; they can not earn a living. Let them go out and earn a living or do without.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. I just want to go back a moment to the reason for the arrest of these prisoners. To begin with, these people occupied Arizona and New Mexico for hundreds and hundreds of years. The white man came and found them there. The President issued a proclamation confining the Indians down to a reservation, something they had never been accustomed to. They went on the warpath, and for doing that they were taken prisoners. It is true they did kill white people. It is true they murdered and committed a great many crimes which they would not have committed if they would have had the white man's civilization. But they were fighting for the same thing that man has fought for ever since his creation. They were fighting in defense of their homes and trying to save their homes for their wives and children. And now, after they have been taken and kept prisoners for all these many years, does the gentleman from Illinois, fair man that he is, think the children and the grandchildren ought to be punished for the sins of the grandparents?

Mr. MANN. Certainly not. The children can get out. I do not want to confine them any longer. The gentleman seems to take the position that because these people committed outrages we are the ones to blame when we took them prisoners, and, therefore, we should pay their children now for the damages we did to their forefathers 26 years ago.

Mr. CARTER. What has become of the homes which these people originally had? They are now occupied by the white people, the people with whom they had the war, and these white people to-day, I presume, are in a prosperous condition, while the Indians are practically in jail and have no home.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, these women and children that have been confined there all of their lives now express an earnest desire to be free. They are the Indian wards of the Federal Government. I think the people of this country will never be satisfied until those people are freed and given an allotment of land.

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman mean by "confined"?

Mr. FERRIS. They have to come up and answer a roll call. They have no civil or political rights of any kind. They are prisoners of war. The gentleman knows the definition of prisoner of war. They are not held there in chains. I think the War Department has treated them very well. I do not criticize the War Department. They have asked Congress to act for a long time. The fault is with Congress.

Mr. MANN. The only difficulty is that the War Department has not made them go to work.

Mr. FERRIS. The War Department would readily turn them loose to-morrow, but they have some cattle and a little property, and if you turn those Indians loose after having been in confinement all of their lives somebody would grab up their property and they would be in the poorhouse in a short time. No one desires that, I am sure. The question must be met.

Mr. MANN. As I understand it, the Indians on the Mescalero Apache Reservation are willing to receive these Indians back.

Mr. FERRIS. That is true. It has been submitted to them. Their agent has been consulted also.

Mr. MANN. And this bill provides for an appropriation of $100,000 to transfer such of these prisoners as wish to go to the Mescalero Reservation.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes. Although I am not at all headstrong about my bill, I merely want the matter settled and the Indians freed and allotted some land.

Mr. MANN. Let them all go if they want to, or go somewhere else and earn their living, without asking us to buy farms for them—perhaps in Illinois.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. But there is no limitation in this bill.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman could not buy many farms in Illinois with $200,000 for 257 people.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not know how many of those Indians would go on the Mescalero Reservation. There is no limitation in the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I can give the gentleman the facts. The War Department only a short time ago took an expression from the Indians there, and there were only some 67 who desired to remain in Oklahoma, and the others desired to return. I even have the names of those who desired to remain, and the others who desire to go have voted four times in the last two years. I hope the gentleman will let us consider the bill with such amendments as may be hurriedly prepared and pass the bill. It is too much to keep people longer than 26 years in confinement for crimes which they never committed. It is too much to longer keep people as prisoners who were born into conditions for which they were in no manner responsible. We rail at Mexico and other countries that abuse their prisoners. I ask if we are not subjecting ourselves to just criticism to longer permit this to go on? We should not wait until next Congress to settle the matter; it should be settled now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The bill goes off the calendar.

PORT OF ENTRY OF NEW ORLEANS, LA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 23112) to extend the limits of the port of entry of New Orleans, La.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the limits of the port of entry of New Orleans, La., be, and the same are hereby, extended to include that portion of the parish of St. Bernard within the following boundaries: Beginning at a point where the boundary line between the parishes of Orleans and St. Bernard intersect the east bank of the Mississippi River; thence along said east bank to where the boundary line between lots 16 and 17 of the Coriune and Myrtle Grove plantations (according to a plan by A. C. Bell, civil engineer, July 11, 1893, and annexed to an act of sale by A. L. Richardson to Jules Mereaux, passed before Charles T. Soniat, Esq., notary public in the parish of Orleans, January 2, 1894) intersects said east bank, said point of intersection being at a distance of 4 miles and 4,280 feet below the point at which the boundary between the parishes of Orleans and St. Bernard intersects said east bank; thence along said boundary between said lots 16 and 17 a distance of 4,000 feet; thence along a line parallel to the Mississippi River to the point where said boundary line intersects the boundary between the parishes of Orleans and St. Bernard; thence along said boundary line to the point of beginning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. ESTOPINAL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EFFECTS OF DECEASED MARINE-HOSPITAL PATIENTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 22209) providing for the disposition of effects of deceased patients of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service and of certain deceased officers and men connected with the Army.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask whether the author of the bill has made any examination into the effect of auditing these small accounts in the Treasury, whether it will produce an additional amount of accounting and bookkeeping?

Mr. COVINGTON. I think not.

Mr. MANN. There may be kept, possibly, some small amounts in trust for people and——

Mr. COVINGTON. I will state that the Secretary of the Treasury himself and the Auditor for the War Department, neither of whom, I apprehend, would be apt to recommend a measure which provides for more accounting, stated that the legislation was necessary; that they could not sell these articles which belonged to deceased patients of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service and certain deceased officers and men connected with the Army.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to that at all. I do not think I should object in any event, but I am afraid it will produce a lot of bookkeeping.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That unclaimed effects of deceased patients of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, seamen of merchant vessels of the United States, consisting of jewelry or other articles, shall be delivered to a collector or surveyor of customs of the district in which the death of the patient occurred; and for the protection of the estates of these persons the Secretary of the Treasury may order such effects to be sold and pay the expenses of such sale out of the proceeds: Provided, That application for the effects shall not have been made by the legal claimants within two years after their receipt. The proceeds of such sales, together with any money effects of the deceased, shall be deposited in the Treasury in trust for the legal claimants, to be paid to them on the certificate of the Auditor for the Treasury Department, who shall act as conservator of these estates, with authority to indorse all bills of exchange, promissory notes, and other evidences of indebtedness due to such estates, and to take such steps as may be necessary for their collection.

SEC. 2. That unclaimed effects of deceased officers and enlisted men of the Army and civilian employees of the War Department which have heretofore or may hereafter be received at the Treasury Department may be sold by order of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the expenses of such sales paid out of the proceeds thereof: Provided, That application for the effects shall not have been made by the legal claimants within two years after their receipt. The net proceeds of such sales, together with any money effects of the deceased, shall be deposited in the Treasury in trust for the legal claimants, to be paid to them on the certificate of the Auditor for the War Department, who shall act as conservator of these estates, with authority to indorse all checks, notes, bills of exchange, and other evidences of indebtedness due to such estates, and to take such steps as may be necessary for their collection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. That is the end of the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, as long as this will probably be the last unanimous-consent day, that we go to the end of the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that we go to the end of the calendar notwithstanding the fact that some of these bills have not been on the calendar three days. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, there is one very long bill here.

The SPEAKER. By the way, did the gentleman from Utah ever get his bill up?

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask to take it up at the proper time.

The SPEAKER. This is the accepted time right now.

AGRICULTURAL ENTRIES ON OIL AND GAS LANDS.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Senate bill 3045.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3045) to provide for agricultural entries in oil and gas lands.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Speaker, now I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the bill was read awhile ago.

The SPEAKER. Well, we will waive it, then.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Speaker, there are some committee amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, strike out the words "exclusive of Alaska" and insert the words "in the State of Utah. Page 1, line 8, after the word "selection," insert the words "by the State of Utah under grants made by Congress and." Page 2, line 3, after the word "act," insert the words "and to disposition in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, under the law providing for the sale of isolated or disconnected tracts of public lands." Page 2, line 12, after the word "acres," strike out the words "and all homestead entries made hereunder shall be subject to the conditions as to cultivation and residence of entries under the act approved February 19, 1909, entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead." Page 3, line 16, after the word "same," insert the words "upon rendering compensation to the patentee for all damages that may be caused by prospecting for and removing such oil or gas."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I objected to this bill awhile ago and have withdrawn the objection with some hesitation. I objected before because I desired to insert a reservation of coal as well as of oil and gas. I am informed by the gentleman, as a matter of fact, that there is no likelihood of there being much coal and, in fact, of there being much oil or gas there. The bill only applies to a small section of Utah. As a matter of fact, I think it is creating a bad precedent. We have shortly got to reserve, in my judgment, the minerals under the ground and possibly the valuable metals when we grant title, so that those natural resources shall be retained for the benefit of the community at large.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Chair will put all of the committee amendments en bloc.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit some amendments to correct the text of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will report the amendments.

Mr. HOWELL. They are as follows:

On page 2, line 23, strike out the word "any" and insert the words "and the."

After the word "State," on the same line, insert the words "of Utah."

Page 3, line 2, after the word "act" insert the words "or under grants made by Congress."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the proviso at the bottom of page 3 and at the top of page 4.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOWELL. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to know why this bill is not made to cover all the States as well as the State of Utah. Why should not all of these oils and gases be reserved in the other States as well as in your State?

Mr. HOWELL. The question of the proper disposition of oil-bearing land is still an open question, and Members from the States having such lands did not desire to have such provisions as in this bill apply to their States.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Why should it not apply to all of the other States?

Mr. HOWELL. Because the Representatives from the States are not in favor of the legislation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But the land belongs to the Government.

Mr. MANN. The Senate bill as it came over here had it to apply to all the States, but the gentlemen decided to try it first on the dog.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amended Senate bill.

The bill as amended was read a third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. HOWELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Speaker, before we reach the next bill I want to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill after the bill that was passed and include therein a certain report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, so much is being said and written about the high cost of living and so little about the cost of living high I desire to insert in the RECORD an editorial from the Detroit Courier of August 16, entitled "The truth about high living":

THE TRUTH ABOUT HIGH LIVING.

It would be futile to deny that the cost of living has risen to a very considerable degree within the last 10 years. There is also no question that this increased cost has been a burden to many people and has aroused a vague but bitter feeling. Regardless of the fact that the higher cost of living is a condition existing in every civilized country in the world, the Democrats have tried to place the blame on the tariff. Yet in Great Britain, a free-trade country, the complaints against the higher cost of living have been far more vehement than in the United States.

No one who considers the matter fairly and judges from facts instead of theories will believe that the tariff is responsible. The Wall Street Journal is a financial publication and therefore nonpartisan. Yet it deprecates the attempts to create the belief that tariff reduction toward free trade and assaults upon corporations will be effective to reduce the cost of living. After referring to the continued decrease of the per capita production of wheat, which is a world-wide condition, it says:

"Here is a basic clause for the high cost of living, and one which our loose-lipped talkers about the iniquities of the tariff and the trusts altogether fail to comprehend. Producers are growing fewer with an ever increasing number of mouths to feed, and the problem would be exactly the same if the whole world turned free trade.

"Of course, this is not the only cost of high living, but it is perhaps the most important, and is a matter which deserves the greatest consideration by public men of all classes. The condition is a vital one, and any remedy less than an actual return to the land must necessarily be merely a palliative."

In conjunction herewith, attention may be called to timely, instructive information bearing directly upon the higher prices of meat, which is contained in a bulletin just issued by the Bureau of the Census. It shows the decrease of dairy and food animals in the United States in the decade ended with 1910, the last census year.

The number of cattle decreased from 67,719,410 in 1900 to 61,803,866 in 1910. The numerical decrease was 5,915,544. The decrease in terms of percentage was 8.7.

The number of swine decreased from 62,868,041 in 1900 to 58,185,576 in 1910, the numerical decrease being 4,682,365, and the percentage 7.4.

Sheep decreased 9,055,852, or 14.7 per cent, from 61,503,713 to 52,447,861.

In the same decade the population of the United States increased from 75,994,575 to 91,972,266; that is, 15,977,690, or about 20 per cent.

It is explained in the bulletin that the comparison between 1900 and 1910 is not altogether accurate, for the reason that in the former year the enumeration was as of June 1, while that of the latter class was as of April 15. Had the census of 1910 been taken as of June 1, the number of cattle, swine, and sheep would have been greater, for the reason that within the six weeks from April 15 to June 1 a larger number of such animals are born.

But it can be readily seen that after all possible allowance is made for the difference in dates—even if it be assumed that an enumeration at the later date would have shown no decrease—the 20 per cent increase in population, and the consequent corresponding increase in demand for meats and butter would be sufficient reason for the higher prices of those commodities.

These are simple and convincing facts which those who are trying for partisan purposes to fool the people into believing that tariff reduction and indiscriminate attacks on industries will bring down the cost of living strive to conceal.

LANDS IN THE GLACIER NATIONAL PARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 1679) to accept the cession by the State of Montana of exclusive jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Glacier National Park, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to consideration of the bill?

Mr. FOSTER. I object.

Mr. PRAY. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. FOSTER. I will for a moment.

Mr. PRAY. Mr. Speaker, this bill was read at length the last time it was on the calendar. I have an amendment or two which I think will dispose of any objection Members might have to it. It is a very important measure. The Secretary of the Interior wants this legislation if he can possibly get it, because he is unable to administer the park. Congress has not yet accepted jurisdiction. The Secretary is very much handicapped because he can not enforce rules and regulations for the government of the park.

I sincerely hope that the gentleman will not object to the consideration of the bill at this time in view of its importance. While I am satisfied that the objections raised the other day when the measure was being discussed are not well taken, in order that the bill may not fail of passage at this session I have prepared two amendments consisting of only two or three lines each which will absolutely do away with the objections made to consideration on the last call of the calendar. I can explain these amendments in a few words. One strikes out the lines at the end of section 4 carrying the penalty and provides for punishment on conviction according to section 6. This section as amended by the House committee carries the penalty for the commission of a misdemeanor under the Federal statute. The second amendment is to section 8 and simply strikes out "of section 6" at the bottom of page 7. The reason for this amendment is apparent from reading the section.

This is probably the only chance we shall have to consider the bill, and I therefore earnestly urge the gentleman to withdraw his opposition. This is not like an entirely new matter of legislation. There are several good precedents for it. There is the Yellowstone National Park act of 1904, upon which this bill is based, also the act for the administration of the Hot Springs Reservation. The department has found no difficulty in administering either of these laws, as appears from statements contained in the report on this bill. If the gentleman has examined the reports made by both departments of the Government in connection with the committee amendments and those I have just proposed he must be convinced that there now exists no reasonable ground of opposition to the passage of the bill at this time. On the other hand, there is every reason why it should pass, as will be seen from the statement made by the Secretary of the Interior.

The department must have this legislation in order that the park may be properly administered in the manner clearly intended by Congress in the act creating it. This bill was read at length and discussed the last time it was reached on the calendar; therefore is it necessary to take the time now to read it again?

Mr. FOSTER. I thought so a while ago, and I do not think it fair to pass a bill without reading it.

Mr. PRAY. I will say further that both the Secretary of the Interior and the Attorney General's Office have examined the bill, and they are for it.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think we can take it up to-night.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman allow a short discussion of the bill?

Mr. FOSTER. No; not to-night.

Mr. RAKER. It is an awfully good bill. [Laughter.]

COAL-MINING LEASES IN OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3843) granting to the coal-mining companies in the State of Oklahoma the right to acquire additional acreage adjoining their mine leases, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. AKIN of New York and Mr. FOSTER objected.

JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF NEW HAMPSHIRE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4679) to amend section 95 of the "Act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. What is that bill?

The SPEAKER. Senate bill 4679.

Mr. MANN. I ask to have the bill reported, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 95 of the "Act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 95. The State of New Hampshire shall constitute one judicial district, to be known as the district of New Hampshire. Terms of the district court shall be held at Portsmouth on the last Tuesday in October, at Concord on the last Tuesday in April and the second Tuesday in December, and at Littleton on the third Tuesday in September."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McCOY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RELIEF OF THE APACHE INDIANS, OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 6776) for the relief of the Apache Indians held as prisoners of war on the Fort Sill Military Reservation, in Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, that bill involves the same question as that which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] referred to, and I would like to have it passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be passed over without prejudice.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RAILROAD ACROSS CERTAIN LANDS IN COMANCHE COUNTY, OKLA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 26236) conferring upon the Lawton Railway & Lighting Co. the privileges, rights, and conditions heretofore granted the Lawton & Fort Sill Electric Co. to construct a railroad across certain lands in Comanche County, Okla.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the privileges and grants heretofore conferred upon the Lawton & Fort Sill Electric Railway Co., by virtue of the acts of March 28, 1910 (36 Stat., p. 268), and June 22, 1910 (36 Stat., p. 588), to construct and operate a railway, telegraph, telephone, and trolley lines through the Fort Sill Military Reservation and the public lands reserved for Indian school purposes, all in Comanche County, Okla., be, and the same are hereby, conferred upon the Lawton Railway & Lighting Co., a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Oklahoma, and successor in interest, through purchase under foreclosure sale, of the property and rights of the Lawton & Fort Sill Electric Railway Co., first above mentioned, subject, however, to all the limitations, restrictions, and conditions contained in the said acts: Provided, That said Lawton Railway & Lighting Co. shall complete the construction of that portion of its road between Lawton and Fort Sill within two years from the date of the passage of this act.

With a committee amendment as follows:

On page 2, line 6, after the word "Oklahoma," strike out the remainder of that line, all of line 7, line 8, and the word "mentioned," in line 9, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Provided, That no rights hereunder shall vest in the Lawton Railway & Lighting Co. until maps of location of the respective portions of the road through the Fort Sill Military Reservation and the lands reserved for Indian school purposes hereafter receive the approval of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Interior, respectively."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment as section 2, that "The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that, but we considered that in the office of the Judge Advocate General and in the office of the Secretary of the Interior and also in our committee, and they were of the opinion that the provision in line 15, "subject, however, to all the limitations, restrictions, and conditions contained in the said acts," are sufficient, inasmuch as the former acts contained that provision.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it is sufficient.

Mr. FERRIS. I have no objection to it if the gentleman wishes to offer his amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a new section, page 2, the following:

"SEC. 2. That the right to amend, alter, or repeal is hereby expressly reserved."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RESERVATION OF LAND FOR PUBLIC PURPOSES IN TOWN SITES IN CERTAIN INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 23953) to authorize the reservation of land for public purposes in town sites in certain Indian reservations.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to set apart and reserve for school, park, and other public purposes not more than 10 acres for each quarter section of land reserved for town-site purposes in the Yuma Indian Reservation, Cal., and the Colorado River Indian Reservation, in California and Arizona, and upon the organization of said towns as municipal corporations the said reservations shall be conveyed to such corporations by the Secretary of the Interior, subject to the condition that they shall be improved, maintained, and used for public purposes: Provided, That if such lands shall not be used for the purposes for which this grant is made, the same or such parts thereof not so used shall revert to the United States.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

INDIANS OCCUPYING RAILROAD LANDS, ARIZONA OR NEW MEXICO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5674) for the relief of Indians occupying railroad lands.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the bill read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to request of the present claimant under any railroad land grant a relinquishment or reconveyance of any lands passing under the grant which are shown to have been occupied for five years or more by an Indian entitled to receive the tract in allotment under existing law but for the grant to the railroad company, and upon the execution and filing of such relinquishment or reconveyance the lands shall thereupon become available for allotment, and the company relinquishing or reconveying shall be entitled to select and have patented to it other vacant public lands of equal value in the same State, as may be agreed upon with the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, where this right is given as proposed by this bill, is there any limitation upon the quantity of land that might be taken by the railroad in lieu of the land it gives up?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has the gentleman any objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I have reserved the right to object. I ask a specific question. The bill provides for the railroad company giving up land now occupied by Indians which belongs to the railroad company and taking other lands in lieu of it. Is there any limitation upon the quantity of land the railroad company may take?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It would depend upon how many acres they gave up.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but suppose the Indians give up 160 acres of land, how much does the railroad company take?

Mr. HAYDEN. It takes the equivalent in value.

Mr. MANN. I know, but how much land?

Mr. HAYDEN. The Interior Department has to approve of the selection. They send a special agent out to examine the land——

Mr. MANN. I have been here a long time, and this is the first bill I can recall where you permit lands to be exchanged of equal value without any limitation on the quantity. The usual provision is of equal value and equal quantity.

Mr. FERRIS. Does not the gentleman think that before the exchange can become operative the Interior Department must approve of it, and does he not think that is sufficient protection?

Mr. MANN. No; I do not.

Mr. FERRIS. The whole matter is left in the hands of the Interior Department, and surely the department would not permit the railroad to get more than they are entitled to.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether they would or not.

Mr. FERRIS. They have a great field of agents that they send out.

Mr. MANN. I do not think they would intend to. I heard the gentleman say the other day concerning the great State of Arizona that there was not any land in the State that was worth anything. This land is worth something. I do not know, but I suppose it is not intended to give 50 acres for 1.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I know but very little about this bill, but it is a department measure, and it wants it passed. I am willing to accept an amendment specifying that it shall be equal in area and value.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman forces an amendment of that kind, he will make the bill inoperative. Suppose an Indian lived on a sand hill that is not worth 5 cents an acre. Is the railroad company going to take that and give land that is worth $20 an acre? Or suppose it was vice versa. Are you going to force the railroad to take a sand hill and give up land that is worth $20 an acre in value?

Mr. MANN. I do not see any difficulty at all; I take it that there is some place in Arizona—that there is another 160 acres of practically the same value as any 160 acres that are now there.

Mr. FERRIS. That would not be true in one case out of ten.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Let me say to the gentleman from Illinois that when we passed the act in reference to the Osage Indians we did not have that provision in it—that the exchange should be equal in area and equal in value. An amendment such as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois would practically make the bill inoperative.

Mr. MANN. If I recollect right, we struck out a provision in the Osage Indian bill which read the way the gentleman suggests.

Mr. SAUNDERS. No; we did not strike out that provision.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Alabama insists on his demand I shall object.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman from Illinois can arrange this matter I am willing to wait.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois intimates that he is willing to let the gentleman's bill pass, and if he does, I will withdraw the demand for the regular order, but I want to push the calendar along.

Mr. MANN. I have been here all day trying to push the calendar along while the gentleman from Alabama has not been here all day, and I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

GOVERNMENT HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (H. Res. 418) directing the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to inquire into appliances, etc., for the protection of buildings, etc., at the Government Hospital for the Insane.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Has the Clerk a copy of the resolution which he is reading which has been reported back to the House?

The SPEAKER. He has a copy of it.

Mr. MANN. Does the copy show that it has been reported back to the House?

The SPEAKER. The situation about this is as follows——

Mr. MANN. I would like to have my parliamentary inquiry answered, if I may.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair is going to do.

Mr. MANN. I think the Chair was going to do something more.

The SPEAKER. What was the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman?

Mr. MANN. Whether the Clerk read from a copy of the resolution, which shows that it has been reported back to the House?

The SPEAKER. It does not show anything of the sort.

Mr. MANN. I am not criticizing the Clerk, but the Clerk ought not to read the original print of a resolution until it has been reported back to the House.

The SPEAKER. There is no print of this that has been reported back.

Mr. MANN. Then the Clerk can not read it.

The SPEAKER. But it was not the Clerk's fault; the Speaker ordered him to read it.

Mr. MANN. I am not criticizing the Clerk, because I know how this thing came about. It is the fault of somebody else.

The SPEAKER. It was inadvertently referred to the wrong committee.

Mr. MANN. I beg the pardon of the Chair, but that is not the case; it was referred to the proper committee, and there is a report purporting to come from that committee, but because nobody knows what it is—I have not time to explain it, and therefore I shall object.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Illinois to withhold his objection. I think I can explain that.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. AUSTIN. The safety of about 3,000 insane people is involved in this proposition.

VETO OF WOOL TARIFF BILL.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial by Mr. Charles K. McClatchy, of the Sacramento Bee, of August 12, 1912, relating to the second veto of the wool tariff bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Sacramento Bee. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, did not the gentleman insert an editorial in the RECORD a day or two ago?

Mr. RAKER. Not upon this subject.

Mr. MANN. No; but upon some other subject.

Mr. RAKER. I do not remember that I did. I tried to get one in about two months ago.

Mr. MANN. I can not keep track of all the gentleman's requests. I do not think I shall object to this. The gentleman has made more requests for insertions in the RECORD than any other three Members of the House combined.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The editorial is as follows:

TAFT'S SECOND VETO OF THE LA FOLLETTE TARIFF BILL.

President Taft's veto of the bill to revise Schedule K of the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act, which schedule relates to wool and woolen goods, is without justification.

The principle of protection was not attacked in this measure. It reduced the existing duties, but yet was highly protective. It imposed a duty of 29 per cent on raw wool, and on woolen clothing 49 per cent.

The vetoed measure accordingly was not a free-trade bill. It was not even a Democratic measure. It was a duplicate of the original La Follette bill, a Progressive Republican measure, which Taft vetoed a year ago.

The excuse he then gave for the veto was that Congress should have waited for the report of his Tariff Board on the subject. The excuse he now gives is that the bill does not conform to the board's findings; that its duties are not sufficiently high for "protection."

But not long after the passage of the Payne-Aldrich bill—which Taft should have vetoed because it did not keep faith with the people on the pledge of tariff revision—he publicly admitted Schedule K to be "indefensible" because of its enormous duties.

He did not wait for the report of any Tariff Board before making that confession. But now, in effect, he takes the ground that the people can have no relief from excessive duties save through a Tariff Board of his own appointment; that Congress must play second fiddle and abdicate its powers, because of the existence of such a board.

No doubt it is desirable to have a Tariff Board to act in an advisory capacity to Congress. But to assume that Congress must be governed by the findings or opinions of any such board is to set up a new and revolutionary doctrine. There are men in both Houses who have made a life study of the tariff and who know more about it, both practically and theoretically, than any member of this new board.

Senator LA FOLLETTE is a protectionist. In introducing and advocating this measure a year ago, after the Senate had rejected the Underwood bill, he declared his aim was to keep faith with the Republican platform pledge to the people regarding tariff revision. He then said:

"It is my judgment that there are no more iniquitous, no more indefensible, no more harmful provisions in all the tariff law than those contained in Schedule K.

"The ad valorem rates proposed will simplify the schedule in point of phraseology, will automatically do away with whatever fraud there is in the so-called compensatory duty, will abolish the discrimination against the poor man's cloth in favor of that of the rich man, will remove the discrimination against the carded-wool manufacturer in favor of the worsted-goods manufacturer, and, without attempting to draw the line between the compensatory and the protective duty, will automatically provide for both, leaving ample protection for the woolgrower and the manufacturer without leaving the consumer completely at the mercy of the latter."

Senator LA FOLLETTE showed a year ago that the duties could be reduced even lower than his measure proposed "without disturbing in the slightest degree a single American industry"; that the existing Schedule K was not only excessive, but "dishonest." His bill, with some amendments then made in the House, was, however, vetoed by the President.

Recently the same bill of his, which passed the Senate a year ago, was again introduced by LA FOLLETTE as a substitute for the Penrose tariff bill, and passed the Senate by the combined votes of Progressives—Republicans and Democrats uniting for the purpose. The 11 Republican Senators who voted for it were BORAH, BOURNE, BRISTOW, CLAPP, CRAWFORD, CUMMINS, GRONNA, KENYON, LA FOLLETTE, POINDEXTER, and WORKS. DIXON and other Republicans favorable to the bill were paired with Democratic Senators.

Such is the plain history of this honest, just, and needed La Follette downward-revision bill, which Taft has a second time vetoed in the interest of privilege and monopoly and against the welfare of the people.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the very eloquent oration entitled "The United States," delivered by the Hon. NATHAN E. KENDALL, a Member of this House from the State of Iowa, before the Society of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, at Philadelphia, Pa., on Monday, March 18, 1912.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The address of Mr. KENDALL is as follows:

The PRESIDENT. Gentlemen, I now have the great pleasure of introducing to you the Hon. NATHAN E. KENDALL from the sixth Iowa district and a Member of Congress; one of the eloquent gentlemen who are always listened to with the greatest pleasure.

"THE UNITED STATES."

[HON. NATHAN E. KENDALL.]

Mr. President and gentlemen of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick:

I am profoundly sensible of the unusual compliment implied in your invitation to address the one hundred and forty-first annual dinner of this ancient and honorable association. It may not be unbecoming to acknowledge that an appropriate appreciation of my own inadequacy rendered me somewhat reluctant to appear on this delightful occasion, before this distinguished company, in this historic city. But my faltering confidence was measurably restored when I recalled that scintillant witticism of Senator Ingalls, retorted in legislative debate upon an eminent son of Pennsylvania, in which it was insisted that your venerable Commonwealth had, after all, produced but two great men—Albert Gallatin, of Switzerland, and Benjamin Franklin, of Massachusetts. [Laughter and applause.]

I anticipate with much satisfaction the enthusiasm with which you will approve every reference to dear old Erin—that little continent across the sea, whose future, in the providence of God, is to be as resplendent as its past, in the irony of fate, has been sorrowful. [Applause.] It is well. Your affection for the mother country in her misfortune but intensifies your loyalty to the youthful Republic in its prosperity; for it is not possible to be a good Irishman without being a good American. [Great applause.] We love the Emerald Isle, and we are proud of the impressive resistance she has interposed for more than a hundred years against alien oppression. The struggle for liberty which she is prosecuting will continue with augmented energy, undiscouraged by delay and undismayed by disaster, until self-government for that afflicted people shall be enforced in all the parliaments of enlightened opinion. [Applause.] We know how futile prophecy generally is, but we venture fondly to believe that men here present will witness the happy day when an ambassador from the republic of Ireland will arrive in Washington, present his credentials to the American Secretary of State, and be received with all the consideration to which his exalted commission will entitle him. [Great applause.]

I am expected to respond to the sentiment, "The United States of America." It is a theme, my countrymen, to fascinate the interest and stimulate the imagination. Bunker Hill and Yorktown! Lake Erie and New Orleans! Gettysburg and Cold Harbor! Manila Bay and Santiago! [Great applause.]

Breathes there a man with soul so dead
That never to himself hath said,
"This is my own, my native land?"
If such there be, go mark him well.
For him no minstrel's raptures swell,
High though his title, proud his name,
Boundless his wealth as wish can claim,
Despite his title, power, and pelf,
The wretch, concentered all in self,
